AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST:" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead, are both conditional; and only bestowed at the second advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our motto.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York: for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2 20 a year or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658, NEW YORK.

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to GUESS them out. Also in ordering, the name of the POST OFFICE, COUNTY, AND STATE must be given, and written plainly; and if a CHANGE is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters confusion and delay are inevitable.

THE ADVANCE OF "THE ADVANCE."

WE find an editorial article in The Advance of Dec. 17, which gives us much satisfaction. We accept it as an advance, though not quite up to the Bible doctrine; but no man ever reached the fulness of truth at one move; it takes time and thought, and much effort to overcome all difficulties and prejudices of former years. But if one never moves there will be no progress at all in emancipating ourselves from the fetters of superstition and error. We do not indorse every expression in the following extract from The Advance, but it is a movement in the right direction.

RESURRECTION OF THE RIGHTEOUS—THE UNDERLYING TRUTH.

It has long been our conviction that too little was practically made of the Scriptural doctrine of the bodily resurrection of the righteous. It was a leading point in the preaching of the apostles, and in the faith of the primitive church. It has retained a place in all the Christian creeds, only here and there an individual, or an exceptional sect, like the Quakers, venturing to deny it. Yet little stress is now laid upon it, except theologically, as a test of orthodoxy. And this is partly owing to a failure to perceive its underlying idea, and its important bearing upon our future existence. Hence some have imagined that the doctrine of the resurrection in Scripture was nothing but the assertion of a future life after death; that it taught nothing concerning the body, but only the immortality of the soul. Others have thought that it pointed to a spiritual body assumed, or developed, immediately upon death. These classes are both in error, not harmonizing with the explicit assertions of Scripture.

That the resurrection is to be a renewed bodily life, and not a mere continuance of spirit existence, is evident from such Scriptural expressions as these: "I am the resurrection and the life," taken in connection with Christ's own rising from the tomb in bodily form. "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth." "If Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?" "Now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept." "How are the dead raised up? With what body do they come?" "There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial." "It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body: there is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body." "This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." "Who (the Lord Jesus Christ) shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body."

These declarations point to a future bodily life, and not to the simple immortality of the soul. The peculiar physical nature of that body and its relation (other than chronological) to the present body are not revealed, and so long as one holds to the fact of the future body, he may conclude as he judges best, whether it will have all, or some, or none of the material particles deposited in the grave. Paul, in 1 Corinthians xv., rather seems to indicate by the analogy (not similarity or strict parallelism) of the grain, that the connection with the present corruptible body is very slight, and that its relation to it is principally as united with the same soul: "Thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain—it may chance of wheat or of some other grain; but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him." . . . .

Christ's redemption includes our whole nature, and therefore saves the body as well as the soul. It is ample to repair all the ravages of the fall, and therefore it will undo the work of death, and re-clothe the spirit. Thus Paul says of the saints, "We ourselves groan within ourselves waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." It is for want of this doctrine of a resurrection, that the very general belief of the ancient heathen world in a future state and in the immortality of the soul, had so little influence. Souls without bodies, mere shades, phantoms, ghosts, had no power to impress the imagination, or to appeal to the fear and hope of a robust nature of flesh and blood. Hence the belief began to be doubted, and not a few of the philosophers rejected it altogether. But teach a future life in a resurrection state, and another world begins at once to seem real.

This grand truth being thus set forth, that our entire composite nature, soul and body in union, is to be saved through Christ, there is laid a foundation for a noble superstructure involving our eternal condition and action, and we are introduced to the pregnant and most suggestive idea, that through a body, real and immortal, we are to be in eternal relation with the material universe both for action and enjoyment. And what is the advantage of that truth? Simply yet gloriously this: that we are presented with a tangible, conceivable heaven, instead of a vague, misty state of existence; we have a heaven just as holy as could be claimed on any other theory (and more so, we think) while it is more natural, and to our conceptions more real, and retains a valuable connection with our earthly experience, of which in many appropriate ways it may be a continuance. It gives us an idea of a locality which we shall inhabit; of useful activities which shall be possible to soul and body, as in this life; of enjoyments related to our entire nature; of intellectual studies and pursuits bearing on art and science; of progressive development growing out of progressive work which never sinks into toil or drudgery. Moreover, the harmony is thus brought out between the passages which treat of the future life in and through a resurrection, and those which describe the heavenly state as a holy and magnificent city, a new Jerusalem, and which tell us definitely of a future material home for the saints, in such words as these: "Looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat. Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."

It will thus be seen that it is no mere fancy to which Miss Phelps has sought to give form in her recent volume called "The Gates Ajar."

In the play of her humor she may have introduced imaginary particulars, and used odd expressions which grate on the sensibilities of those accustomed to a more shadowy idea of heaven, as though it were a mere luminous atmosphere, or a bright cloud inhabited by misty phantoms called angels and saints. Nevertheless her little book will do good as a corrective, and will teach many to think of the next life as more near and real than it has hitherto seemed. And do we not all need to view it more commonly in the light of the resurrection, and thus to gain a clearer conception of its character, and to find occasion of comfort in our present bereavements, and for hope for our eternal future?

MOTIVE TO OBEDIENCE AND FAITHFULNESS.

IT is a custom very extensively practised by preachers and exhorters holding to the popular faith respecting man's nature, to urge a meditation of death, etc., as a motive to repentance on the part of unbelievers, and to constancy on the part of believers. With reference to the basis upon which this motive is made to rest, viz., the expectation of an entrance at death, into a state either of blessedness or woe, we have only to say, there is not a single passage of Scripture that, reasonably interpreted, warrants any such expectation. If those portions of holy writ that testify to the coming of Christ, as the time for the fruition of Christian hopes were expunged, what promise, or evidence of whatever character, could any believer produce that would furnish a satisfactory reason for his hope? We know of none. The fulfilment of every promise of a future life, is made to depend upon the return of our Lord from heaven. If he come not, there can be no resurrection; and if there be no resurrection, then even "they which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished," and so "shall not see light." While, therefore, religionists generally, believing they have arguments more precious and effective, so far fail of a proper appreciation of that great central truth in the gospel glad tidings which, like its inseparable companion and elder brother, "God is love," lends vitality and lustre to all others, that, unlike our Lord himself, the apostles, and early fathers, they wholly neglect to urge it upon the consideration of either sinner or believer, let us inquire whether it, instead of death or torment, is not the great scriptural motive to obedience and practical godliness.

What is set forth in Scripture as the motive to repentance? We answer, the second coming of Christ. "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ . . . whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken." Acts iii., 19, 21. There is no fact connected with all the future, a contemplation of which by sinners is so effective in inducing penitence, as the coming of Christ. The most important secret of its power, if we except an overwhelming evidence of its nearness, in which case multitudes of cowardly drones would be frightened into repentance, lies in its tendency to lead men to see what they are, and consequently what they need; for the first inquiry suggested to the mind when impressed with that truth is, "What is Christ coming to do? When it is seen that the first work will be the giving of life and immortality to his people, and sealing the doom of eternal death upon unbelievers, the inevitable thought of each is, "What relationship do I sustain toward him? When the mind reaches this point, the indulgence of a hope of final restoration, a sentiment largely prevalent among unbelievers, is utterly precluded, and they are left to deal only with stern, inexorable truth. They, then realize that life and death are set before them, and that it is theirs to choose.

What is the scriptural motive to mortification of animal lusts? We reply, Christ's second coming. "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory. Mortify, therefore, your members which are upon the earth," etc. Col. iii. 4, 5. All who have learned the truth that they have not immortality in themselves, but must depend upon the coming of Christ to bestow it, are therefore, if not grossly inconsistent, especially careful to "mortify" their "members." They sin not against God by unholy gratification of sensual appetites, but keep all under dominion; using them only to the glory of God and to the honor of Christ. They strive to keep the fleshly nature in subjection to the spiritual, and seek those things which pertain to the kingdom of God which Jesus will establish at his coming. What is the scriptural motive to a practice of general obedience and holiness? We reply, the same. "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then shall he reward every man according to his works." Matt. xvi., 27. "We know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope purifieth himself." 1 John iii., 2, 3. We are not, of course, to understand the apostle as intimating that a man may purify himself without divine assistance. He is speaking of those with whom the coming of Christ is an object of hope. Such as truly cherish that hope do purify themselves by assiduous application and use of the means which a merciful God has made available. They grow in grace by careful and constant cultivation of that "faith which worketh by love," and purifies the heart. Contemplating the love of God in Christ Jesus, love fills the heart and reaches out and encircles the whole human family, brethren in Christ especially. And to the exercise of this love the coming of Christ is the scriptural motive. "And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love toward one another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you: to the end he may establish your hearts unblamable in holiness before God, even the Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Thess. iii., 12, 13.

It is the scriptural motive to spiritual mindedness. "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Phil. iii., 20.

It is the same motive to deeds of kindness and mercy. "When the Son of man shall come in his glory . . . then shall he say unto them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you. I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty and ye gave me drink . . . naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; for, as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Matt. xxv., 31–40.

It is also the scriptural motive to moderation and sobriety. "Let your moderation be known unto all men. The Lord is at hand." Phil. iv., 5.

So is it also to patience and long suffering. "Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned: behold the judge standeth before the door." James v., 8, 9.

And, finally, it is the scriptural motive to watchfulness. "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord . . . Blessed are those servants whom the Lord, when he cometh, shall find watching." Luke xii., 35, 37.

It was not the prospect of death, popularly regarded as a mere transition in conscious existence, that the apostles preached as a motive to repentance and faithfulness. The dogma, incorporated in later theology, of entering a state either of happiness or woe at death, had no place in their teachings, and for the unexceptionable reason that Jesus taught it not to them. On the contrary, they steadfastly asserted, and diligently labored to convince all deniers that man is wholly mortal; that, without a union with Christ the LIFE-GIVER; without receiving the spirit which the Father sends in Jesus' name, and yielding obedience to its indications to duty, thus developing a character in harmony with him, they have no germ of eternal life in them, and cannot, therefore, have a deliverance from the power of death. They have not received the spirit of adoption. They are not begotten of the incorruptible seed, and hence cannot have a resurrection birth. The two great facts in which are centred all the hopes inspired in the minds of a perishing race by the promises of the gospel, are the coming of Christ and resurrection or change, if living, of all who are subjects of an indwelling of the "Spirit of him which raised up Jesus from the dead." To no others has a life of happiness been promised; to none has a future life of woe been threatened. No others are cheered by the gospel hope, nor made joyful by the accumulating evidence that the time hastens when a kingdom shall be established whose King shall "rule in righteousness."

Those thrilling words of inspiration, "I saw in the night, visions, and behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him;" and "awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust," are judged incompetent by popular-school preachers in exhorting Christians to faithfulness. They have a way, instituted by heathen philosophers, more pleasing to the creature. The language of the Saviour, "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day," makes dull music in the ears of them who have a theory which reduces the resurrection to small moment. The testimony of the "sure word of prophecy," "for, behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch;" they "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power," is regarded by them as rather soothing than otherwise to the ungodly; so a worse thing, a child of human fancy must needs be urged instead. O ye professed exponents of divine law, will you always continue to believe man rather than God, and teach for doctrine the commandments of men? Will you never recover from the "blindness in part" which "has happened unto you?" Be not wise above what is written. When God says "unto the wicked, O, wicked man, thou shalt surely die," do not insist that the tempter's words, "thou shalt not sure die,' are true. Point unbelievers to the coming of Christ, and warn them to be on the Lord's side in that "great and terrible day." Point believers there, too, as an event which must precede the fruition of his hopes. Do you say, "The doctrine of Christ's second coming has become unpopular by reason of the extravagancies and inconsistencies of some of its supporters?" We grant that reproach has thus been brought upon the cause. But we ask what truth has not had inconsistent supporters? Faithful John Fletcher said on this subject: "I know many have been grossly mistaken as to years; but because they were rash, shall we be stupid? Because they said, 'to-day,' shall we say 'never,' and cry 'peace, peace,' when we should look about us with eyes full of expectation?" We would that those few words of Fletcher's might be written over every pulpit in the land, for peradventure some might be by them spurred to the performance of long neglected duty. The "world lieth in wickedness." Iniquity is so triumphant that they who insist all mankind will be converted to Christ before his return, deplore in confusion and dismay its alarming increase, and agnonize over its abounding. It will so continue, and change not. "Evil men will wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. Beseech the people, therefore, and "by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him," exhort them to constancy. Direct them to that event, and the attendant reward of saints, as the ever-brightening star of gospel hope, and "crown of rejoicing." When first Jesus came, it was to a brief life of humility and grief; but when next he comes it will be upon the throne of eternal power and great glory. He then "came to his own and his own received him not;" soon he will come to be welcomed by his tried ones with songs of everlasting triumph. He was then not seen to possess comeliness or beauty that they should desire him; when now he comes, his people will delight in him; "he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe." All who teach the incorruptible word of God should be "patient," "gentle unto all men; in meekness instructing those that oppose; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth." May the hearts of all lovers of God be directed "into the patient waiting for Christ." "Behold," said he "I come quickly, and my reward is with me."

NEW YORK, January, 1869.

FROM J. S. POTTER.

LIVERPOOL, NOVA SCOTIA, Dec. 9, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I left Shelburne, N. S., last Monday morning; arrived in Liverpool at noon the same day; rode forty-one miles; found Br. Scarry strong in the advent faith; and also two or three others; on the other side of the harbor are advent believers; visited Mr. Melvin, the Congregational minister. He is favorable to the Adventists, and has got a good deal of light from books, tracts and papers lent him by Br. Scarry. He told me that if he had his way he would open all the churches in the land for Advent preaching. Br. Hook preached in his church and was well liked by the majority of the people; and by what I hear, should have staid longer but since that time there has been a reaction; the heads of the churches and ministers have shut up every avenue that they can against the advent doctrine; but the seed has been sown, and if any able man in the ministry should come here with a tent in the summer time they would have a good hearing. I got a hall and spoke last evening on the "Mortality of man," and scattered a lot of the "Campaign Documents." This evening I will speak on the resurrection of the dead; and to-morrow will go east to Bridgewater, about thirty miles. I send you the names of two more new subscribers for the "HERALD OF LIFE," that I obtained when I was in Shelburne.

"SOME THINGS HARD TO BE UNDERSTOOD."

FROM R. CADWELL.

CORTLAND, N. Y., Dec. 10, 1868.

BR STORRS: After receiving your very kind reply to my questions [in Vol. V., No 47,] on Rom. viii., 19–23, I felt very anxious to communicate my thoughts on the subject. I regret I did not do it then, for it was fresh and vivid in my mind, and the little you gave me of Dr. Bloomfield's "Critical Notes" only confirmed me the more in my views; and was filled with grief, that there should be so much unbeliefs and darkness, where I could see no just cause, from the text; but some wrong idea, that turns the mind away from the teachings of the apostle. I do not feel satisfied to let the subject rest where it is; and though I feel but little courage, I fear nothing, if I may rightly arrange and communicate my thoughts. And as some things have been given of what others believe, I will say with the apostle, I believe, and therefore speak. And I am quite sure I have the same spirit of faith—of truth. The meaning of the word ktisis, as given, was just what I had understood creature to mean. We may differ as to the extent of its application in what Paul has here said. But had our Commentators believed in a restitution, as firmly (when God "shall send Jesus," the great Restorer, from "heaven" to bring in the restitution to the living creation, [not under the death penalty for voluntary sin perfected against the gospel to give life] in the removal of the subjecting law, or power, or deliverance from it, of the same creature creation that was subjected) as they believe in the redemption of the saints from death, or going to heaven at death, the teaching of the apostle would not be as dark as it now is to them.

Although the word restitution does not occur in these verses, yet the doctrine, to my mind, is clearly taught; and I do not know how any person can fail to see it by any natural principle of interpretation of words, and construction of sentences. True, to convert it into a redemption, would do it away, by applying it to the Christians, as a class, in common with other creatures "subjected to vanity." But it would not (as I conceive) be in harmony with the wording or the facts in the case, though the 21st verse, at first sight, may seem to favor the idea. And it will be quite as difficult to apply it to less than all God's creatures subjected; and thus prove a universal redemption of all creatures from mortality and death, as it is now to allow the natural creatures hope, and hereby cut off the extreme resort of introducing "the earth, the globe itself," with which, to form a contrast to avoid it, verses 21, 23.

REDEMPTION AND RESTITUTION.

Rom. viii., 18–26. These verses contain an argument for the validity of the Christain hope, drawn from the manifested design of God in an arrangement of creation and creature existence, going to prove a restitution or deliverance—the hope (on the part of the things subjected) in proof of the Christian's by the creature's hope, called the "suffering of this present time." See con.—comparative E. V., the verse, compared.

There can be no reason for this line of argument, except mainly to prove this, and the glory pertaining to it (the creature's deliverance) when it shall be revealed for us. [Whiting's trans.] Which reasons are set forth in the four following verses, beginning with "for," or "because," and in verses 22, 23, we have the summing up of the argument—"the adoption, the redemption of our body"—ourselves. For it is the "we, ourselves," who "groan," whose hope is contrasted and proved by the evidence of the freedom or salvation of the creature before mentioned, verse 22, from the bondage of corruption, verse 21.

In verses 24, 26, we have probably, some distinctive traits of Christian hope to prevent mistake; and further instruction, and a few points of contrast between theirs and the creature's hope and salvation before presented.

As I understand the restitution, as taught here, it is to bring back, or place in a former state, to reinstate. This is taught by direct and relative terms; contrast of different ideas, and involved in the statements made. Verse 18. "The sufferings of this present time."

This extends through the time of the creature's earnest waiting, verse 19. The subjection to vanity, 20, 21, and its painful state, 22, 23. Proof 19, No. 1. This is the first great proof (or what I make the first) of a restitution. Because it makes the extent of the present "suffering," and distinguishes it as following a previous time and state of the creature, not bearing these marks of "vanity," as the present does; which, done away, brings in the state before the present suffering entered. Second point com. proof: No. 2, 18th verse.

There are but three ways to deliver the race from this state; one is by death, when life can no longer be enjoyed, (and this is a kind appointment of God) such is the condition of all those whose death is not of a penal character, and have ceased as the offspring of a mortal parent; and those who are destroyed on account of impenitence, and will be left in death forever, as a penalty on this account; and the Christian saved through faith, by resurrection; and those (with these exceptions) that may be living by restitution, to be concerned with the grace that will be revealed at the revelation of Jesus Christ. Third point, anal., No. 3.

But it may be asked, Why is the subjection to vanity of this class to be taken off? Why not let them continue right on as they are into the coming age? My answer now is, God has ordained the living natural creature shall not enter the state—the manifested state—the world to come (put in subjection to Christ on a subjected suffering condition as now). And this is a restitution. No. 4. anal.

Again, a restitution is not a redemption to hold the race to the latter, would destroy the former; but the first will not prevent the latter, but depends alone upon it—(the first fruits of the dead), for its accomplishment, relative and negative. Proof No. 5.

In verse 18, the apostle having spoken of moral suffering directs attention to the indications of natural creature sufferings (in the present time) which indications, and the object of them are introduced in verse 19, and are clearly set forth in verses 20–23; and says (20, 21, in substance) they did not proceed from good or bad conduct, but were designed of God for good, p. com, of God's plan, and proof of Christian hope by the "creature's earnest expectations," to, wit, its deliverance. Here, verse 19, the form of expression is an evidence that a distinct class from the Christian is had in view; namely, the living natural creature; for they indicate earnest longing which will not apply to the dead, of any class. First point Rel. No. 1. on 19, verse. And second point neg. It "waiteth," not its own or our "manifestation," nor its, or our, "adoption;"—nor is the creature to be that son, or son's for which, it "waiteth;"—no, not by any natural forms of speech, with a natural meaning. See 23, contrasted with 22, as proof in this case; for the creature is the same in both and in all. The facts in the case, as well as the words, (they need no alteration), demand that we understand the apostle as speaking of the natural creature; (man, with others, as such,) if not, we set Paul at variance with himself and with the prophets, and make him teach an universal destruction, instead of deliverance, at the very time set by him and the prophets, to wit, the sending again into the world of God's first Begotten. This is perhaps the strongest point of evidence of a negative and positive character to prove our caption, or No. 3.

As to the term creature, it is a noun of multitude, in the singular form; but signifying many, or all creatures; God's creatures that are on this terraqueous globe, or in the atmospheric heavens; and verses 20–22, by implication, involve these also. Because they are adapted to, and serve to bring about this state of things, "the sufferings of the present time." There could be no natural cause of creative subjection to suffering, without the evils of famine, pestilence, pain, sickness, and death, which this adaptation tends to produce. And the dangers and evils attendant on the want of a healthy and medium state of the elements, operate unfavorably upon all animal life, to destroy it, upon the earth and in the heavens; and show what is involved in the expression, suffering of this present time. Also, the sudden extremes of heat and cold; of flood and drought; of tempest and earthquake on account of local increase of electricity, and inflammable substances with which the earth and air are so fully stored, are so violent in their action that none of the creatures of the six days' creation, can escape their destructive power. To say then, the race were subjected, is to say all these were; and if the hope is good for one part it is good for the other; and if these are delivered, the outward law in nature will be modified. No. 5, anal., and Bible.

I earnestly desire to bring before the mind, if I can, the leading idea and main points, embraced in the affirmation here made, that are pillars of faith and hope.

First, The race were seminally, in view of its then present and future existence, unconditionally subjected to vanity in hope, and its deliverance as positively so: No. 1., p. Simply, the bond should be taken off, or the creature loosed. Who are the freed? The dead? Nothing like it! Freed from what? that which brings death and suffering, as now: from the travailing pains of the creature—"the sufferings of this present time." These are time-suffering, of the creature; and the deliverance will be a time deliverance:—No. 2. neg., to wit, the life that now is; of summer, and winter, of seed time and harvest, of day and night. This is not the Christian's hope—eternal life. This is conditional, and ends in death eternal to some, and in life eternal to others: No. 3., neg. Hence, the sentence "bondage of corruption;" in this connection, does not cover those in death, but is a parallel of subjection to vanity, bondage used for the former; and corruption for vanity. True, the word gives one distinctive trait of the vanity. The phrase "itself also" is used to make definite the creature subjected, with the creature delivered; and to give emphasis to what is affirmed; as the creature subjected to vanity, itself also shall be delivered: and will, apply equally to the race, as the creature; or to the Christian as a class, if desired. This, the context can alone determine.

In these verses, the appellation living creature, does not occur; but it was such a creature the apostle had in view, and none other, as his words imply; for such alone could be capable of suffering pain and death. But we have not sufficiently paid attention to this fact. Let us look at it again, and emphasize this one point. The creature (living creature) creation . . . subjected in hope, itself, also, shall be delivered. This nail is driven in a sure place; and no man can draw it. This living, natural creature will be the creature for whom this will be done; and not dead ones, so far as the point of the nail goes; and gives hope to no other. If others get life, that are alive or dead, it must be by some other way.

The righteous are not the living, or the dead creature, (much less the animal natural at the time of this event, as raised), but spiritual, immortal. The period and time to which this hope reaches is the manifestation—the believer's adoption. The "golden age" will come; but not till Jesus comes. But at this very time (according to the view we oppose) the saints, the "earth itself" fill the field of spiritual and universal vision. Hence, we have the restitution of the prophets, and of Paul, swept into a premature grave, more than a thousand years before the true time of the spiritual field of universal vision takes place, and this, despoiled of one of its most glorious features, the hope, the glorious inheritance of Christ and his saints—the inheriting of all nations, when "all the ends of the earth will remember and turn unto the Lord, and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before him," because God by Christ, is the "governor among the nations."

But let us return from this digression, if such it is, to consider more fully the identity, and character of the creature.

[To be concluded.]

CYRUS M. REYNOLDS, New Preston, Conn., writes: With pleasure I remit my subscription to the HERALD OF LIFE; for truly the subject of Life only in Christ, when viewed in proper a light, cannot fail to produce conviction on the mind of honest inquirers after truth, that it is the true Bible view, notwithstanding the opposing mortal resurrection theory of all, saints and sinners. It seems to me when the judgment is viewed in its true light it settles all difficulties. There is no doctrine of the Bible on which the Christian world is so much in the dark as the judgment. Jesus said, "For judgment am I come into this world."

"ONWARD: A New Monthly Magazine for the Youth of America. Conducted by Captain MAYNE REID. G. W. Carleton, Publisher, 497 Broadway, New York. Terms, 30 cents single number: $3 50 per year."

The first number of "ONWARD" is received, containing about 90 pages octavo, handsomely executed. Of its value we cannot speak, as we have had no time to examine it. Its conductor says, "Its design is not only to entertain and amuse, but to instruct, elevate and conduct the youth along that path leading to the highest and noblest manhood."

"THE AMERICAN GUARDIAN." This is a Weekly Temperance paper of 16 pages, published by Geo. S. Ferguson & Co., 25 North Sixth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Terms, $2 per year; or $1 for six months. We have received the first number of Vol. IV. It is a quarto, very neat in its appearance, and we should think bids fair to be useful and interesting. The publisher says:

One or two Temperance Tales will run through every number during the year, besides Sketches of Travel, Adventure, History, Science, etc. There will also be a Children's Department, which will be illustrated by beautiful engravings. Every article will have a high moral tone, and will be calculated to make men better and wiser.

J. P. DINSMORE, 36 Dey St., New York, will accept our thanks for a bottle of "Carter's Combined Writing and Copying Ink," and, also, for "Carter's Panoramic Calendar." The Ink appears to be very fine, and the Calendar indispensable; one of the best we ever used. We hope both may have a large sale. The proprietor says the ink "flows freely, copies perfectly. Does not fade, but grows blacker with age, never moulds; is equally good for ordinary writing, book-keeping or copying."

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 6, 1869.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"OUR REJOICING."

IT is impossible to express the joy and consolation we experience from the many testimonies we are continually receiving of the happiness multitudes find by their deliverance from the bondage in which they have been held all their life long by the soul-chilling doctrine of inherent immortality and its necessary connections. We know, by the experience of many years, the horror and distress of a belief in those doctrines, and the utter impossibility of a solid and abiding peace, to a reflective mind, who lives in the belief that his God, foreseeing the consequences to untold millions of sentient beings, of his own creation, if made inherently immortal, should, nevertheless, so constitute them that eternal torture would be their portion; whose sorrows and agonies, unmitigated and hopeless, were to run on in an endless course; and that no agonies, no pleadings or prayers were ever to avail in their behalf. Such a representation of God, in his creative and governmental work, makes it an utter impossibility for a mind not made callous by a creed, or given over to a secret disbelief of the doctrine, to see God as he is, and to love him as all ought to love him, who has so loved us as to give his only begotten Son to shame, suffering and death, "that we might live through him."

To be delivered from the bondage of the doctrine of inherent immortality, and to know that a future life is only for those who are in Christ, or who receive that life as a free gift of God, and that all who do receive it are eternally holy and happy, is truly "Glad tidings of great joy," designed for "all people," but which has been stolen from us by the traditions of men.

We look back to that period, thirty years since, when the providence of God brought our mind to the consideration of the subject of inherent immortality and its awful consequences, to which all the human race were liable. It was twenty-five years after we first found peace in believing in Jesus, and fifteen years after we began our work of preaching. During all those years, even in our happiest hours, the thought of the horrors of those who had died out of Christ, or of the exposedness of living friends to such tortures in the world to come, was a gnawing worm that gave us no rest, except by banishing it from the mind; and this could only be done at short intervals. At length, in 1837, the thought, for the first time in our life, was suggested to our mind that possibly immortality depended on character, and to be bestowed as a gift of God on the righteous alone.

That thought was cherished, and led us to an examination of the Bible without regard to human creeds or human opinions. Three years of research, carefully noting all the expressions in the Bible on human destiny, brought us at length, in 1840, to the firm and undoubting position that immortality was not inherent in man; and that the final destiny of sinners was, to cease from all life and being. That conviction brought peace to our mind such as we had never felt before, and we "rejoiced with joy unspeakable and full of glory." From that day to this hour we have never had a doubt on that question, nor seen an argument that had a feather's weight on our mind against the truth that immortality is a gift of God as the reward of obedience to his will; and that it is totally withheld from all incorrigible sinners; and that utter extinction of being is their punishment for sin.

It is needless to speak of any reproach or trials that followed our new position. God took care of all those matters, and we earnestly sought his direction. Nor was it in vain; for He opened our way before us, and we soon found that from this new starting point we were called to advance. We had at first admitted the conscious state of all the dead; but this point we were led to abandon in 1842, and to maintain that the resurrection of the dead was the only way into a future life; still supposing that both the righteous and wicked would be raised from the dead for the purpose of judgment. After some years more we became satisfied the judgment of investigation, or the judgment which decided character and destiny, was during our present life, and that the resurrection was at the executive judgment, still maintaining the revival of the wicked dead for execution. On this last point we insisted strongly for several years. At length the uselessness of bringing men from the dead to put them back again in death was suggested. We were at first, and for a few years, opposed to giving countenance to the idea that the wicked dead would live no more. But the thought would force itself on our mind. After struggling against it for several years, we found ourself compelled to investigate the question. The result was, finally, that in 1857 we saw no escape from the fact, if "death is the wages of sin," the sinner could have no revival into life; and that future life being a gift of God, there could be no such life except to those found in Christ the LIFE-GIVER, He being the Head of a "New Creation," or race. Then came the grand truth, "NO FUTURE OR ETERNAL LIFE OUT OF CHRIST."

This view settled forever in our mind the grand truth of the whole gospel—"GOD IS LOVE." Here we stand and rejoice in God our LIFE-GIVER, as we never did before. We bless the name of God for this great deliverance from the bondage of human creeds and papal superstitions. We are now an old man, and our mortal career is nearly ended; but the light of God's countenance shines on us, and we give "glory to God and the Lamb" for all the way in which he has led us.

"HARD TO BE UNDERSTOOD."

WE have placed the above head to an article commenced on the outside of this week's paper, taking the expression from 2 Pet. iii., 16, where that apostle speaks of "some things" in his "beloved brother Paul's" epistles which were "hard to be understood." We hardly know of any portion of Paul's writings harder to be understood than Rom. viii., 19–22, "For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God: for the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of Him who hath subjected the same in hope: because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now." The apostle adds, "And not only they [or it], but ourselves also," etc. If our brother, who is writing on this portion of Paul's sayings, can remove all its obscurity, we shall be rejoiced; yet we have our fears in the matter. Some parts of the text are clear enough to our mind; but for the full development of other parts, we fear it will take the next age or ages to obtain a full understanding.

The same remarks are applicable to some other parts of Paul's Epistles. In general we know he carries us forward into the age or ages to come; for if Peter understood Paul, then Paul, also, as well as himself, "looked for a new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth rightousness," and that "the longsuffering of our Lord is salvation; even as our beloved brother Paul, also, according to the wisdom given unto him, hath written unto you; as also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things; in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as also the other Scriptures, unto their own destruction." 2 Pet. iii., 13–16.

We need to do as Paul himself did; for, saith he, before Agrippa, "I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come," etc. Acts xxvi., 22. It is in vain to suppose we can understand all Paul's statements unless we are familiar with the prophets and Moses; and whoever separates them will find he has mistaken both. Therefore, let us "search the Scriptures:" the whole testimony.

FUTURE PUNISHMENT—NATURE OF MAN.

UNDER the above head we find in the Advance an article by Rev. Wm. Patton, D. D., New Haven, Conn. He says:

The argument for future punishment is twofold. The first is from the nature of man as the creature of God and the subject of his moral government. The second is the testimony of the Scriptures.

My purpose, in this article, is simply so to state the first point that readers may clearly see it, and in their own thoughts trace it to the legitimate results.

With this introduction Dr. Patton states, in four particulars, the reasons for his position on the question, viz.:

1. It is clear that man has a sentient spiritual as well as a corporeal nature.
2. Man is responsible.
3. Man is not only susceptible of punishment, but the fact enters largely into his moral constitution.
4. Man cannot dissuade himself of the certainty of retribution.

Each of these points he briefly elaborates, and says, "These four items are constituents of human nature, and always belong to man. Without them he is not a man." We fear by this sweeping declaration the Doctor *un*mans man. Our Lord affirms, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." John iii., 6. All "spiritual nature" is not man's natural or inherent possession. If theologians could be made to understand this, they would not contribute as they do, to the spread of the modern delusion of "spiritism" which is cursing the world. No man has a spiritual element in his nature till he is "begotten again" by the Spirit of God: and unless he is thus begotten he never can be born into a spiritual being, or spiritual existence, our Lord Jesus Christ being the witness in the text and context before us. We regard Dr. Patton's first argument as an unsupported assumption. His second, third and fourth positions we admit as correct. But he says of the four together, "these four items are constituents of human nature, and always belong to man." If, then, his first item is not and cannot be proved, human nature is not what Dr. P. supposes; and he adds a fifth item, which reads as follows:

5. Now if to these we add immortality, then the punishment can consistently be carried into the future world, and may last as long as the immortal nature of man endures. "The wretchedness of the spiritual and the horror of the accountable are merely perpetuated in the immortal." When these, which continue through this life, will cease, no living man can tell merely from his own experience or from that of others. There is nothing in the nature of man, as a spiritual and accountable being, which gives any foretelling that they ever shall cease. Unless, then, we have authority from God, the great moral governor, to justify a belief that retribution, which is certain, shall cease, we are compelled to believe that the penalty for sin is as enduring as the immortal nature of the sinner, with respect to whom we have no evidence, that as conscious moral agent he will cease sinning in the eternal world.

All this speculation arises from assuming inherent immortality as an attribute of man, for which not a single word of God can be produced in proof: and the assumption ignores the fact that "the wages of sin is death;" so that the sinner having no spiritual nature, because not "begotten again of the Spirit;" and having no immortal nature, because not "born again of the Spirit," he perishes in death; or "as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed . . . . shall utterly perish in their own corruption," 2 Pet. ii., 12, or, as Peter expresses it, Acts iii., 23, "It shall come to pass, that every soul which will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed"—exolothreuthesetai—shall be utterly exterminated "from among the people." Dr. BLOOMFIELD in his "Critical Notes," edited by the late Prof. STUART, says, on this word, it "is found only in the Septuagint and the later writers; signifying to "'utterly exterminate.'" Dr. Patton's fifth item thus falls to the ground as a mere assumption; and the two main pillars of his temple, for carrying conscious punishment into a future life, viz., the first and the fifth, are found incapable of supporting the building; and falling, the whole fabrics lies in ruins. His sinner never enters "the eternal world." Death ends the mad career of all such.

OWNING UP AT LAST.

WE have been told a thousand times, "All nations and people have believed in the immortality of the soul." This has been the grand argument in proof of that position when all others have failed. We have met it again and again with a denial, and still our opponents have repeated it as if never proved a falsehood; but we have at last a confession that we were right and our opposers wrong. Zion's Herald, in its issue of Dec. 31, gives an extract from a "report of Rev. Mr. Dall's address on the state of Religion in India," which settles the matter beyond all dispute. Mr. Dall, it seems, occupied two pulpits in Boston. It is said:

The morning's discourse, mainly a written one, set forth the darkness of heathenism in striking contrast with the light of the gospel. From the text, "This is life eternal that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent," was briefly drawn the gospel message of ever-increasing life. Then, from Scriptures both Indian and Chinese, were drawn what seemed until closely examined to be rays of heavenly light, enough at least, to make visible the surrounding gloom. Each faded, however, and failed the benighted wanderer if he strove to follow or clutch it. Not only Brahminism but Buddhism and Confucianism, which together reckoned as their disciples the larger half of the human race—all alike look to the total extinction of conscious life in the soul as its end and aim. They know no salvation this side the grave—but by the annihilation of joy, of love, of thought, of action—in a word, of all care for others and of all interest in this world, its duties and its opportunities. Beyond the grave, so says the Bhagavad Gita, the highest gospel of modern Hindooism, there is nothing for the perfect man but extinction of all memory and consciousness; nothing, literally, but "a blowing out" as of a candle.

What now becomes of the boast, "the soul is immortal, for all nations have believed it?" The fact is, the philosophers of heathenism, such as Socrates, Plato, Cicero, and others, speculated on the subject; but they confessed that "most men" believed in no future life; and the speculation of the philosophers amounted to no more than a reabsorption, at death, into the great fountain of life; thus "becoming after death just what they were before they came into this life; practically," says Archbishop Whately, "annihilation."

The doctrine of the immortality of the soul has grown out of this vain speculation of heathen philosophers, but was never believed by themselves. The Bible alone revealed a future life, and that by a "resurrection from the dead at the last day." The speculation of heathen philosophers was brought into the Christian theology by converted pagans, and culminated in the incorporation of that destroying doctrine of an "immortal soul" in man, surviving his death; and thus made void, in fact, the Bible doctrine of a future life, through Jesus Christ, by a resurrection from the dead. No wonder the churches have come to regard death as the all-important point in the Christian's hope, while the resurrection is only of secondary importance; or rather is of no importance at all. They know the Bible makes much of the resurrection, and never speaks of an immortal soul; but they speak often of such an entity and seldom of the resurrection from the dead, and when they do, it is only of a "re-union of soul and body;" a phraseology unknown to the Bible. This doctrine, borrowed from heathen speculations, has corrupted almost every truth of revelation. How much longer will good men, pious men, foster this Babel theology which has spawned upon the world Papacy with all its abominations of saint worship, purgatory, eternal torment, and a host of other blasphemies and fooleries debasing to human nature, robbing God of the glorious attribute of Love and Christ of the honor of LIFE-GIVER to the dying children of men? How long, we ask, shall good men contribute to the upholding of such abominations? Will not the last foul spawn, called Spiritism, awake Christian men to inquire why it is that this horrid delusion has life and is sweeping over the world? Is it not the genuine offspring of the immortal soul theory? Has not God suffered that monster delusion to overspread Christendom to open the eyes of good men to the awful character of the earth-born doctrine of inherent immortality? We believe he has; and that if this does not do it, most likely nothing will till the voice of the archangel and the trump of God shall awake the dead in Christ, who shall then "be caught up to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall they be forever with the Lord." It is thus, and only thus the word of truth—the word of God—teaches us of a future life for any of the perishing sons or daughters of Adam. It is thus, and only thus that any will ever be possessed of immortality, except the few who have been translated bodily, or who will be thus translated when Christ our Lord and LIFE-GIVER shall return "from heaven" to "change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Amen. "Even so, come Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE.

NOTWITHSTANDING our general directions to those who communicate with this office, many write us saying, Credit So-and-so, so much, without informing us to what office the paper is sent, or is to be sent. Others ask to have their paper changed and neglect to tell us where it has been sent. This causes us much trouble: if we find the direction at all, it often compels us to go over hundreds of names and places, and it wastes our time. Let this carelessness cease. We cannot afford to spend our time in this way. See our standing directions and follow them strictly, if you have any expectation of your business being attended to satisfactorily.

☞ Please remember this. ☜

PROGRESS.

WE are pleased to see the Voice of the West is moving, at least, in one respect. The Editor has had an interview with a Prof. McQueen, who has been a prominent medium of Spiritism, but has finally renounced the delusion and is "exposing their trickery." The Editor of the Voice says,

Mr. McQueen's public lectures, and our private conversations with him during his late visit to our village, led us much to doubt whether demons have any direct agency in the so-called "spirit manifestations." He offers to detect and expose the operations of any medium in the country, if a fair opportunity is afforded. The best reply our Spiritist friends could make to him would be to meet him at some one of his public lectures, and if he is the charlatan they claim him to be, expose him on the spot. That would put a stop to his career, which is now likely to be a successful one.

We would state further, that Mr. McQueen digs up the main root of Spiritism by announcing the Bible doctrine of the nature of man. He stands boldly on the Bible truth, that "the dead know not anything," and therefore cannot communicate with the living. We trust our friends will give him a hearing wherever he goes.

We are glad our brother of the Voice begins to "see men as trees walking." We have never believed that "demons" had anything to do with "spirit-manifestations;" using the term demon as indicating an invisible spirit of any kind. All the operators in the inquity are demons themselves. But their demonism consists in animalism, a giving themselves up to the unbridled control of the flesh.

We are not without hope that when men get their eyes open to see the deception of Spiritism, they will also see that their spirit-devil is a fable of heathenism, and has no "direct agency in" what they so often attribute to him. In reading religious journals in these days, one can hardly fail to see what prominence the theological devil and satan occupy. It certainly looks as if they thought his satanic majesty had more skill and energy than their God and all the ministers who claim to be messengers of the Most High. "Satan did this, and satan did that, and satan did so and so;" satan, satan, satan is everywhere and does all the mischief, even to cutting off men's heads with "meat cleavers." When will men take blame to themselves for their own sins? Probably not so long as theologians assure them if it had not been for a spirit-devil they would have been very good men! Let men know their sins are their own and come from their own neglect to watch against the flesh and to ask the God of love to keep them from evil by imparting to them his Holy Spirit.

A TRACT ON THE DEVIL.

THERE seems to be an earnest desire by some of our friends that a tract on the devil should be issued. So far as we are personally concerned, it is extremely difficult to devote time to get out one, such as might meet the wishes of those who call for it. We might compile one from articles which appeared in the HERALD OF LIFE in 1867. If that is done it would make a tract of about 48 pages, or the size of the "DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE." To do this, we ought to have at least $100. If the friends are disposed to raise or pledge that amount, we will try as early as possible to issue such a tract. The pledges or contributions must be for this specific object, so as to give no occasion for any one to say that we employ the general funds sent us, for Tracts. Let us have your minds on the subject as soon as may be.

A CORRECTION.—In the HERALD of Dec. 23d, fourth column inside, 13th line from the bottom, strike out [" the change."] In the 5th line from the bottom, for "precedes" read follows.

DEFERRED ARTICLES.—We are obliged to leave out much this week that we had intended to insert, but another week is not far off. Some articles received have given us much trouble by being badly written, or written so close as to make it almost impossible to edit them at all. Please write your lines so far apart as to enable us to interline where it is necessary. Also, please not abbreviate words, but write them out in full. We have to do it for you, if you neglect it; and we cannot always guess what word you intended to use. We shall be compelled to decline all articles where these things are not attended to; and please do not write with lead pencil or pale ink. Both are a nuisance to editor and compositors. If our friends knew how much time and labor it has cost us by correspondents neglecting to attend to these suggestions, we think credit for patience would be conceded to somebody in this office.

THE COVENANTS.

C.—Good evening, Br. G. I have called again to have an other conversation about Abraham's seed. I confess that I am becoming very much interested in the subject, but do not understand why you object to taking up the Old Testament prophecies in relation to the kingdom of God, and answering Br. M.'s question upon that subject.

G.—I have no objection to taking up any question in the Bible, in its proper place. But we are discussing the promise made to Abraham and his seed; and we propose to discuss one question at the time, and mean to take up the subject of the kingdom of God in its proper place. And I now confess that we will find many things that seem hard to reconcile on either side.

C.—You seem, like a great many arguing on your side, to prefer the New Testament to the Old, as you go there for most of your proofs.

G.—You mistake very much if you suppose that I ignore any truth contained in the Old Testament; but there are many things that I would be entirely unable to understand, if it were not for the New; and now I will give you an example. Take for instance, Eph. i., 4–9, "Having made known unto us the mystery of his will according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself." Here Paul affirms that God made known to him the mystery of his will. And what was that mystery? "Wherefore remember, that ye, being in time past Gentiles in the flesh . . . that at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope and without (a) God in the world." What could be more sad than the condition of the poor Gentile? Now, Br. C., you will oblige me if you will go back to the Old Scriptures and tell me how he was to become an Israelite.

C.—Does not the Old Testament inform us of the blessings to the Gentile world?

G.—Suppose we ask Br. Paul about that question: he says, "Wherefore I am made a minister, according to the dispensation of God which is given to me for you, to fufil the word of God, (even) the mystery which hath been hidden from ages and from generations, but now is manifested: To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles, which is Christ in you, the hope of glory." Col. i., 25–27. Now, Br. Paul, please inform us where you learned this great mystery that was hidden in ages past: if it was revealed in the Old Testament Scriptures, why could not others find out this great truth? Stop, says Paul, I did not say such was the case; I have referred you to no Scripture where this great truth is or was made known: "For this cause I, Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles, If ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God which is given me to you ward: How that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery (as I wrote before in few words, whereby, when ye read ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ) which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit." All right, Br. Paul. If I understand you correctly, in the past ages, during the Old Testament dispensation, the mystery of God was not made known as it is now made known by the Spirit! and God had to give you an explanation of his will by a direct revelation. Thank you, Br. Paul, for your information. This then, Br. C., is my reason for going to Paul so often for my explanations.

C.—Then you think many of the Old Testament prophets are incapable of being understood without the help of the New?

G.—Yes; and many of them even with the help of the New. But we have digressed considerably from our question and had better return.

C.—But it seems to me it has all been to the point, and has prepared my mind for other things. I recollect hearing a discourse preached by a good br., in which he said, If Paul said the promise made to Abraham was to one seed, then Paul was mistaken, but it seems to me that Paul must have been very bold to make the declaration that he had received the revelation through the Spirit, and then contradict the prophet, and yet name the one seed, Christ. I thought at the time it was rather out of place.

G.—I have listened to a great many men giving their opinions, but I am willing to stand by Paul; and now I am going to introduce him as the council for Jesus, as the heir entitled to the land, and let him plead the case against the Jews, who claimed this land through the law.

"PAUL."—I am to plead this case with those who understand the law. "Now we know that what things soever the law saith, it saith to those who are under the law: that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God. Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight: (that is, from this time) for by the law is the knowledge of sin. But now (at this time and forward) the righteousnes of God by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe; for there is no difference (now). For all have sinned and come short of the glory of God: Being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Jesus Christ, whom God hath set forth to be a mercy seat, by his own blood, through the faith: for an exhibition of his righteousness in passing by the sins formerly committed, (under the law) during the forbearance of God . . . Where then is boasting? it is excluded. Through what law? Of works? No, but by the law of faith? for we reckon man is justified by faith part from the law of works. Is he the God of the Jews only, and not also of the Gentiles?" Rom. iii., "For the promise, that he should be heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed through the law, but through the rightousness of faith." Rom. iv.

"JEW."—But we claim this land under the covenant that God made with MOSES, "And that it may go well with thee, in the land which the Lord God giveth thee . . . Ye shall walk in all the ways which the Lord God commandeth you, that ye may live . . . and that ye may prolong your days in the land which ye shall possess." Deut. v.

When our fathers broke that covenant, they lost their individual right, but they could not affect the right of future generations. They could sell their own birthright, but they could not disinherit their posterity.

That there may be no mistake about the land, but that it is the same piece of ground is manifest, for we read, "That thou mayest love the Lord thy God, . . . that thou mayest dwell in the land which the Lord sware unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give them." Deut. xxx., 20. Here we claim the same land for ourselves, that this Paul is claiming for his client, and we claim that it belongs to us in the flesh, to the twelve tribes of Israel. Are Israel and Judah, or either of them, extinct? The everlasting covenant forbids. Under that covenant they have the same right and title to the land of Canaan that they ever had.

PAUL.—I think we shall be able to show that the title of our client stands good, notwithstanding the strong point our opponent has brought forward, for if these Jews are right, and "they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise (to Abraham) made of none effect. But it is of faith, that it might be of favor; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed;" (for fear some may think that I am contradicting myself and losing sight of my client in contending for more than one seed, this multitudinous, or all the seed inherit through the one seed, my client Christ) "not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all."

JEW.—Paul, do you mean to say that our father Abraham is the father of these Gentiles in Christ, your client, and they have the same right to the land as we Israelites have, and that you are contending for the land, and their right in the land?

PAUL.—Yes, my client's title to the land commences before there was an Israel; yea, even before there was an Isaac; and as for your twelve tribes, that you are contending for, they did not exist for many years after the promise was made to my client. And this I say, that the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, "the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, (at which time you set up your title) cannot disannul, that it should make the promise (to Christ) of none effect. For if the inheritance (of the land and not rulership) be of the law, it is no more of promise: but God gave it to Abraham by promise," (and my client claims under the Abrahamic covenant). Gal.

JEW.—Why then did God give us the law and the promises under the law, if the title was contained in the Abrahamic covenant to your client?

PAUL.—It was added because of transgression, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made.

JEW.—Then according to your pleading, the law covenant was only a supplement added to the one everlasting covenant, and we never were the true seed; and when the true seed should come, the law, or supplement, and its promises should be taken away.

PAUL.—That is just what we are going to prove, and we have given you the means by which God intended to take it away, in the person of our client "whom God set forth a propitiation, through the 'redemption' that is in Jesus Christ."

G.—But we must close for the present and let our pleader speak again at our next.

OBITUARY.

FELL ASLEEP IN JESUS, on the morning of Dec. 24th, CYRUS MENDENHALL, in the 51st year of his age, a victim to that fell destroyer of our race, consumption. Our Bro. was born in Chester County, Pa., and was reared in the Society of Friends, until some ten years since; being then a resident of the City of Boston, Mass., he attended the preaching of Edwin Burnham, and listened to his discourse on "Anti-eternal torment; when he became convinced that the Bible nowhere taught the doctrine of man's inherent immortality; but that the wages of sin is death; while the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

He embraced the faith as held and taught by Adventists, that man is wholly mortal; the unconscious state of the dead; the absolute necessity of the resurrection from the dead, and the speedy, personal appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ from heaven to raise the dead and change the righteous living, and punish the wicked with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; and in this faith he lived a consistent, quiet, Christian life. He was a kind husband, an indulgent father, a very pleasant and agreeable neighbor, and a worthy citizen; and his character above suspicion or reproach.

He loved the cause he had espoused and was always ready to give to every man a reason of the hope that was within him, with meekness and fear. It was our privilege to be often in his company during his sickness and witness his patient and submissive spirit; never complaining of his suffering, but bearing it with patience and Christian resignation. It was truly astonishing to see with what calm composure he made all his arrangements for his decease and burial; and his object for so doing was, to save his beloved companion any unnecessary trouble or anxiety in regard to those things when the event took place. He looked upon death as only a short sleep, previous to a glorious resurrection. He was an unbeliever in the immortality of the soul, but a firm believer in the truth that immortality is the gift of God, through Jesus Christ our Lord; and for the last ten years was patiently seeking for glory, honor and immortality; and previous to his death was led to see and believe that the righteous only will live again from the dead; or, that "He that believeth on the Son of God hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." Among his last wishes were those that no minister believing in the immortality of the soul, should officiate at his funeral, but one of his same faith should be secured for that occasion. Soon after our dear Brother had completed all his arrangements his brain became affected, and he seemed to suffer more than during his previous sickness, until the morning of the 24th of Dec., when he sweetly and calmly fell

"Asleep in Jesus; blessed sleep
From which none ever wake to weep."

Agreeably to his request, Bro. Jacob Grim, of Philadelphia, was present and spoke words of comfort to the family and friends; after which he was carried to the Old Swedes' Church, and laid away until the Lord shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God, when the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we, which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words.

MY dear mother RACHEL PERINE fell asleep in Jesus December 7th, aged seventy-five years. The funeral services were at the Reformed Dutch Church, Bergen, N. J., by the pastor of that Church, who had known her for fifty-seven years; she being a member of this Church for a short time in the early part of her life, after which she joined the Methodist Episcopal, and was a devoted member of it until 1846, at which time she embraced the doctrine of life only in Christ, in which she sweetly fell asleep. A number of times the night before she died, in answer to the question, if she wanted anything? She said, "No; all is well, all is well." For the last time she celebrated the annual feast (the Lord's Supper) with you in Brooklyn, last year, until it is renewed in the kingdom.

The text at the funeral was, "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." But, as usual with Orthodox preachers, they do not seem to understand the real import of this glorious text. In alluding to her character, as a Christian, he said, although her mind had undergone some changes, she was the same devoted Christian still: she was indeed a living epistle. D. PERINE.

FROM DR. LEWIS WATSON.

BANGOR, ME., Dec. 17, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I am pleased with most of the sentiments—doctrines advocated in the HERALD OF LIFE: some of them are heart's great love. I long for the coming of the Just One and the Holy, while it lives. I am indebted to it; but you may smile when I tell you that the reading of "Retribution," in 1861, was the strongest argument for me, outside of the Bible, of the truth of "NO LIFE OUT OF CHRIST." I am ashamed that so many things have been written against the glorious truth; and not a regret that it must be so. We need to be willing that the wicked "shall never see life" from the dead, before we are prepared to have our prejudices removed. Then presently, we shall rejoice that our loving God has made such a kind and just provision for those who die without hope. I cannot understand why a Christian should not rejoice in the thought, if there was only as much in favor of it, as there is apparently against it. I hope to see the day when many loving brethren who do not now, will, at least, regret what they consider the doom of the ungodly. Reason, humanity and truth, are on the benevolent side of their end.

O that all the loving disciples of the blessed Jesus were there forever more. Amen.

ELD. A. GUTHRIE, Trumansburg, N. Y., writes: I wish you, Br. Burbank, or Br. Grim would gather up the best arguments on the Devil question that have been published in the HERALD, with other things that may be necessary to say on the subject, and put in a pamphlet. It is what we need, and it will help undermine the stronghold, or take away the chief pillars of the popular hell; for of what use would everlasting life in hell torments be if their theological, fancy devil should be used up in humanity's idols and evils, in disobedience to law, which must be destroyed. I could sell any quantity of such pamphlets, for they are much inquired after.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We have elsewhere stated that we will get out a tract on the question so soon as we receive sufficient funds for the purpose; and $100 would be needed for it. It must not be expected that we can embody all that has been published in the HERALD on the subject. We propose a pamphlet of about 50 pages.

N. M. CATLIN, Esq., Kingsbury, N. Y., writes: I have a growing interest and faith in the things pertaining to Life as held and advocated by you in the HERALD OF LIFE. Circumstances forbid my making larger contributions for the work in which you are engaged; but please accept the assurance of my sympathy and kindest regards.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Br. Catlin's few words are precious to us, because we know they mean all they express, and come from a mind which has for many years made the Bible a study.

A. PENNELL, Honeoye, N. Y., writes: It is quite customary to bestow Christmas presents, and it may be gratifying to you to receive one; so I will send you the name of one new subscriber to the HERALD. This, to be sure, is not much. But when we consider the materials out of which we have to get them, it may be considered quite a victory. Precious few and far between are they to be found whose love of truth rises enough above their fears of unpopularity to read a paper which advocates the doctrines of the HERALD. But thank God, the light does shine upon the thick darkness; though the darkness comprehendeth it not. Yours, in the hope of soon seeing the King in his beauty.

H. A. BICKFORD, Newburg, Me., writes: The HERALD OF LIFE is both meat and drink to me, situated as I am without any meeting to attend that is of like precious faith. It is so not only to me, but also to my aged mother, now 76 years of age; cradled from infancy in the immortal soul doctrine, she has been led through the reading of your paper to see and embrace the blessed truth of "Life only in Christ." May the Lord bless you in your labor, and many more be brought to see the truth. Your sister in Christ.

JONAS NOTESTINE, Golden Corners, Ohio, writes: I am in my eightieth year: have seen many Church papers, but have never seen one that would compare with the HERALD OF LIFE. It is a welcome visitor, always sweet, always new, and full of life and truth; it is like the clothing of the Israelites that never wore out and did not wax old. And now, O God, wilt thou hear our petition through Thy Son, and bless greatly those modern Reformers whom thou hast sent to do a great work: Grant to give them much wisdom and zeal for the truth: and grant, also, good Lord, to give them long life, and that they may live to see much of the fruit of their labors, breaking down pagan fables, spiritism, and every other ungodly ism, and that truth may triumph over all. Also we pray the Lord that he may greatly bless that brother who stood alone in the battle many years, and that his heart may be filled with love to God and man, "No eternal Life out of Christ."

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Our heart is greatly cheered and comforted by the words and prayers of the aged pilgrims. We feel a peculiar union with them; and we know the joy they feel in their deliverance from the God-dishonoring doctrines and traditions in which we were bound in the larger portion of our lives. Praise ye the LORD, the snare is broken at last.

ELD. J. A. HOPKINS, South Foster, R. I., writes: There are but few believers in "No future Life out of Christ" in this vicinity, and most of those have embraced it in the year past. I feel to thank God that his word is truth; and that it represents Him to be a God of love; and He has manifested his love in giving His only Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. But if Christ be not raised from the dead, then they also that have fallen asleep in Christ have perished, as well as those who have died without hope. May the Lord enable us always to have that blessed hope that Paul had; but not the hope of the resurrection of "the unjust," as some "allow;" but "the hope of the promise made by God unto the fathers." Yours, in hope of eternal life.

J. G. HEATH, Brockport, N. Y., writes: We love the tone and spirit of the HERALD much; and hope misrepresentations, such as seen in some other papers, will never find way into our paper; and may our heavenly Father continue to give wisdom in directing it.

MARY GEARLD, Simpson's Corner, Me., writes: I felt glad to see that article in the HERALD OF LIFE headed "Romanism and the South." I rejoice that somebody begins to see why the two-horned beastly power is working so lamb-like. It will by-and-by speak like a dragon. The Roman Catholics have built edifices, erected churches, located themselves in bodies in almost every city and village in the United States, ingratiating themselves into favor with State and general governments, working out that lamb-like spirit to speak in tones of thunder when the time comes for God's word to be fulfilled. God's people must be prepared and made white and tried. What will do it like persecution? Would not that cause his elect to cry day and night? Somebody must be all ready and waiting. We have not seen anything like persecution We have been ridiculed and scoffed at, but not persecuted. We often see people suffer for their own faults, and cry out, "persecution." God's people will be brought into a place where nothing but the mighty power of God can deliver them.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We make it our business to serve God to-day, and leave the morrow with Him. We have no fear or dread of persecution, but if it comes, God will hide his faithful people in His chamber till the indignation is overpast. Let us all live near to God now, in this present time, and leave our future in His hands. Leave fearful forebodings to the unfaithful, to hypocrites, and to worldlings. Let us "lift up our heads;" look for Jesus.

A. L. HOUGHTON, South Adams, Mass., writes: I prize the HERALD OF LIFE very much, and my constant prayer to God is, may it live and its Editor be spared to conduct it. God always takes care of them that trust in him. Since I wrote you last I have been quite busy. I have found many who are willing to converse on the Life theme as revealed in the Scriptures, and I have delighted to talk with them. Others call me a "heretic." But I care not for that. I have a duty to do, and intend to it. May God help me. Sometimes when I think I am all alone in my views in this place, I am somewhat faint-hearted. But I go to God and ask for strength, and I never go in vain. The Brn. and sisters in Florida have been made sad by Br. Jenks moving away. Many are the happy moments we have had with him and his family; and when in trouble he always had a word of comfort and cheer for every one. May the blessing of God rest upon him.

MRS. M. C. CONVERSE, Wolf Creek, Iowa, writes: I thank my heavenly Father every day that He has put it into the hearts of His children to proclaim the truth, of His soon coming and kingdom, and that none but the Christ-like will live forever; for if all were made alive from the dead, those that were not in Christ would live in sin; but, no; such a thing as the wicked's living forever cannot be. It seems to me the HERALD grows better and better; next to my Bible it is the best reading I have. I have never heard a sermon preached by any one that believes in the non-resurrection of the wicked; yet since reading your valuable paper I have become a firm believer in it, and have felt more of the love of God in my heart than ever before. The truth is very precious to me, and I am expecting to meet you and all God's dear children in that glorious kingdom soon to come. Yours, in hope of eternal life.

S. MORGAN, formerly of New Rutland, Ills., writes us from North Lawrence, Kansas: I begin to realize the effects of the absence of the HERALD OF LIFE. I am away in the west where there is no one to sympathize with me; there are no Adventists here; but my courage does not fail. I stand upon the gospel foundation; standing there I can keep above the waves. I desire an interest in the prayers of all God's children, that I may stand unmovable and always abound in the work of the Lord. I have many tracts, pamphlets, and books to circulate among those who will read; and I have also all the HERALDS OF LIFE from my first subscription. I expect to get them into circulation soon. Pray, brethren and sisters, that the gospel truth may be scattered in this place and take root, and bring forth much fruit to the glory of God. I had the privilege of making a few remarks in meeting here, after the sermon, and endeavored to show that God loved the world, and gave His Son to die to redeem us, etc.; the response was, "Amen." The house was pretty well crowded with both white and colored people.

CHAS. E. PHILLIPS, North Herman, Me., writes: I have been gone from home some time or I should have sent my subscription before. May the blessed Lord keep and preserve you in that glorious truth, Life only through Christ. Truly it is the most blessed of all the truths we have ever received. I bless God to-day that ever I heard it. I believe it has stripped me of the last remains of the old traditions; and I can now see truly that "God is love, love, love:" glory to His blessed name for this heavenly truth down here, in this dark age of this world's history. O what a treasure to know that if we belong to the LIFE-GIVER, though we were dead yet we shall live again. I cannot write much, but I can love the truth with all my heart, and pray God to be with you in this heavenly work until the LIFE-GIVER comes and takes his weary, way-worn, despised ones home. I shall do more for the HERALD soon. Your brother, hoping to meet you and all the saints in that land of life and rest.

---

H. HARRIS, Mt. Tabor, Wis., writes: There is considerable interest manifested here on the Life views. One year ago there seemed to be none. Now there is quite an inquiry after our tracts, and they are circulated freely. Those you sent are all at work and doing good. When I first began to proclaim these views, from three to six was all that would hear; but now the house won't hold them. Last Sunday night there was a large house full, and when I was through speaking, they said they wished I had spoken longer. Some were present from Iowa, and they said they wished I would come out there. May the Lord attend his word with power. Yours in love, till the LIFE-GIVER comes.

---

S. S. CALL writes: There is good news from this part of the country. One year ago next month I found none that believed in Life only in Christ and no future Life to the wicked dead. But I found many willing to hear, and investigate the subject; which they have faithfully done, and many of them now are teaching me, (as well as others) the ways of Life and salvation. O how it rejoices my heart to meet with those of like precious faith, and hold sweet converse one with another. The Universalist is (in one sense of the word) doing good, by driving or compelling the brethren to admit universal salvation or non-resurrection of the wicked dead. These things cannot long exist; they must admit one or the other.

J. K. MARSHALL, North Chester, Mass., writes: We live among those who believe every ism but the Bible. Lately I spoke to the people, about three and a half miles from our place, on the great subject of a future life only through Christ. I feel very grateful for the freedom enjoyed in speaking in the Lord's name. I have given away some of the HERALD OF LIFE. In our labor in the cause of God and His truth, we have been exceedingly blessed; for which I praise His holy name. The HERALD, with the truth it brings, was never more precious than now. My prayer is, that God will bless his own truth to the salvation of dying men, who will glorify His name in the kingdom. Yours, looking for that blessed hope.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Why cannot more of our brethren hold meetings, where a few can be called together? Ye are all "a Royal Priesthood." Do not wait for a professional Priest. Get tracts, pamphlets, and papers; call a meeting; say what you can; read some, and scatter the "Documents." God will bless you in it. Now is the time, these long winter evenings. Try it.

GEO. W. ALLSHOUSE, Rochester, N. Y., writes: Affliction and sickness sore have been upon me for a long time, but I hope the Lord will bring me out of it in his own good time. O for grace, for patience; and no doubt I needed affliction to bring down the evil of the flesh. The HERALD is a great comfort to me in my affliction, and I know not how to do without it, but if you think best or are obliged to stop it before I can send you the pay for it, I must submit to the loss. I feel now that all will be right before long. You do not know how much my inability to pay has troubled me; but thus it is, and we often need sorrow and affliction to withdraw us from worldliness and deadness; and the child of God has to suffer many trials and afflictions to purge him from that which is offensive to the Lord; and no doubt the most of it we bring upon ourselves through folly and unbelief. Remember me at the throne of grace. May our heavenly Father bless you, and long spare you, and give you health, strength and wisdom from above to guide you into all truth, that you may go on instructing his poor and ignorant children, is the prayer of your brother in Christ, the Lord and LIFE-GIVER.

CAROLINE M. JAQUES, Oswego, Ind., writes: I prize the HERALD next to my Bible; indeed my Bible is a new book to me. I was undecided on the resurrection of the wicked till I read the paper; but I am now fully convinced there is no life to those who are not joined unto the LIFE-GIVER. O that all the world could see truth in the light of the Bible! But, alas, darkness covers the earth, and gross darkness the people. Your "campaign Documents" will do much to disperse the darkness. I hope those who have the means will scatter them far and wide. I give the HERALD OF LIFE, after I have read it, to any who will read. My father (Wm. B. Wade) is distributing Campaign Documents in this section. The doctrine is unpopular; but there are some who will read. It does seem to me if they will read they must be convinced. I thank the Lord I was ever brought to see the truth that "God is love," and will not consign any of His creatures to hopeless torture. Your sister, waiting for redemption.

Alone in the Dark.

"Stay by me to-night, dear mamma," said a child,
"The rain rattles down and the wind is so wild,
I shut up my eyes, and I cover my head,
And draw myself up in a heap, in the bed;
And I think about robbers, and shiver with fear,
Do stay by me, mother! It's so dark up here."

"I cannot, my darling; and why should I stay?
You are never afraid to come up here by day;
You study and play in this same little room,
And never have left it with fear or with gloom;
Why, then, when you're wrapt up so cozy and warm,
Do you think about things that can do you no harm?"

"O mother! it's light in the day-time, you know,
And the sunshine then puts all the room in a glow;
And up from the hall comes a murmur of sound,
When Jenny and Kitty are running around;
And tho' your voice, mother, I don't always hear,
Yet it's so light and cheerful, I know you are there."

"My dear little boy, I'm afraid you forget
That God is near by, watching over my pet,
Nor darkness, nor light, would be safe without One,
Who sees us, and guards us, till life's race is run.
In the loneliest night, He is close by your side,
If you love Him and trust Him, 'The Lord will provide.'

"You never need fear; but when feeble and faint,
Then call upon God, who will hear your complaint;
There's no one to hurt you, when God is so nigh.
His angels, to keep you, descend from the sky."

The child gently put his soft hand in her own,
And kissed the sweet face that so lovingly shone;
You may put out the light, mother dear, when you please,
If I feel afraid now, I will think that God sees."

Frank Kingston's Resolve.

"Halloo, Frank! where are you bound or?" cried Ned Hillary to his friend Frank Kingston.

"Just going home," said Frank; "they eep us pretty busy at the shop to-night, and e couldn't shut up till late."

"Well, say, don't stay home and mope all he evening. It's a splendid night; let's have ome fun."

"What kind of fun?" asked Frank.

"Oh, most anything. A game of billiards, erhaps, for variety."

Frank hesitated. He knew very well that is parents did not approve of his going to he billiard room, but his fondness for the ame sometimes overcame his scruples.

"Well, I'll come if I can," he said, as he oved on.

Ned called after him, "Don't fail, that's a ood fellow. I'll meet you at the corner."

It had been a busy day, and Frank was red and hungry. The table was waiting for im when he reached home, and his mother et him at the door with a smile and a leasant word, but her voice had a weary ound which Frank's ear could not fail to atch. He did not think of it again, however, ntil, having finished his supper, he was bout to leave the house, his glance fell on er troubled face. She was rocking the baby, ho was wakeful and worrying; the table as yet to be cleared, and the girl was away a visit to a sick sister. For an instant rank deliberated, then back went the old raw hat to its nail behind the door, and the ext moment he had coaxed baby from moth-'s arms, and was quieting it as gently as a rl. It was a pretty picture they made in e golden twilight—the curly-headed boy ishing the baby sister to sleep—and the eased smile on their mother's face told that her eye no painting by any of the masters uld be half so sweet.

Eight o'clock came and baby was sleeping undly. Mother had seated herself darning ockings, and Frank was wondering whether was not still early enough to meet Ned, nen his father came in with the evening pa-rs.

"Very busy to-night, Frank?" he asked, My eyes feel badly and I don't like to use em much. Suppose you read a while to other and me."

It was something of a disappointment, and rank began the task reluctantly, but quickly coming interested, all thoughts of Ned and e evening's amusements vanished. After e reading there was a pleasant chat over the ents of the day, and when Frank knelt th his father and mother at prayers, he t that it had been a happy and restful even-g.

"Heard the news?" said one of the shop-ys, the next morning.

"What news?" asked Frank.

"Ned Hillary had his eye put out last night got into a quarrel in the billiard saloon."

Frank shuddered when he thought how rrowly he had escaped being mixed up in e same quarrel, and, then and there, he re-lved to have nothing more to do with the lliard room.

At noon he told his mother of Ned Hillary's isfortune.

"Had he been home, making others happy, ke my Frank, it would not have happened," e said, with her loving hand on his shoul-er.

Frank hung his head; and then, because s sense of honor was too fine to let him take raise that was undeserved, he confessed how any times he had been at the billiard room, d how near he had come to being one of e party that night.

"But I shall never go there again, mother ear," he said, seeing the tears in her eyes.

"My boy has need to pray, 'Lead us not to temptation,'" she said, softly. And rank did pray those words in a way he had ever prayer them before, and though he ometimes found it hard to refuse an invitation to play his favorite game, He who gave that prayer to his disciples gave him strength to resist the temptation.—Alta Grant, in Little Corporal.

H. Munger's "Two Resurrections:"

REMARKS THEREON BY ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

The promise is definite. It presents two classes of the righteous to be affected by the coming of the Lord. The one to be raised from the dead: the other not being dead, i. e., not asleep in Christ, to be changed. The promise rests on the assurance that Jesus Christ, who is the "Judge of quick and dead," is also "Lord of the dead and the living."

The first promise made directly in the gospel, of a resurrection, appears to be found in what "Moses showed at the bush," when "he called God, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." "He is not the God of the dead, but of the living." It would be difficult from this to see how God is the God of wicked men. All these good men were dead at the time; and to have hope must have the promise on this assurance. It would be equally difficult to discover any hope, on the ground of promise or otherwise, for the resurrection of wicked men. But all these worthies need life to make them men again. Now, if in the resurrection "they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are like the angels, being the children of God, and of the resurrection," what change can be given them? What further condition? What would you change either of them into; now that they are not mortal?

They are not mortal, for Jesus is contrasting the condition of the future with the present (which is mortal), when men marry. And why not, if they are mortal in the resurrection? For mortal men and women will marry; consequently there was more force in the Jews' question than Jesus thought of (we must speak so when men tell one thing and Jesus tells us another) and he was so much on their side that they had the argument; for they suggested the mortal resurrection (if there were to be any,) and so does H. Munger, only he declares that there will be a resurrection, (which is only a resuscitation) and that it will be mortal. This is making Jesus admit it, and with his apostle Paul, labor to prove it. So the woman might meet her seven husbands in the next life, and the practical question becomes important, "Whose wife shall she be?" for the seven had her to wife. "Oh, but they will be raised for judgment!" "That will not take long; and they will not wish to marry in such a state." How do you know how long it will take God to judge the world? It will take a thousand years to go through with all the forms which your plan requires; yes, ten thousand. Certain conditions inhere with mortality. These conditions must qualify the mode of procedure. If a mortal condition is required, depend upon it the whole thing will conform to that principle.

Do you know that the passions and appetites of men will be changed when they have mortal life after this, and are still beyond the harvest, the tares and the wheat growing together, and the men themselves not at all changed? Why, I should conclude that the man who had first married the woman would set up a claim; and as she would be mortal and consequently young, having had seven husbands, never one of whom had had her in this new mortal condition, he would propose taking her after the most approved (Jewish) fashion, and commencing life again. While another might be mad and seek revenge; because he lost a wife, and a life, too, on account, of failing to conform to a provision of the law. That would be quite natural and a consequence of mortality. All else being mortal, we should expect that which is natural in them. But that is not a natural life at all. Only it is a mortal one, mind.

Thus it would seem that the Sadducean ground of objection presents rather a hard look for the resurrection; or for our expositors of it, on this big scale, who make the whole thing mortal! It is of no account how they say the mind will be affected to keep a man from sinning, who is raised from the dead, he still being mortal. Mortality has its capacities and its limits. Its capacities of action, appetites, and passions, we estimate in wicked men, by the life itself. Its capacities of knowledge, by another principle. The effect of each one upon the other, by observation and experience. They say that he is proved mortal in the resurrection. Will they deny his qualities as a mortal man? To say that he is not a free agent is to deny that he is mortal; and to say that he is kept from sin by the greater exhibition of the glory of God, is to say that he is changed already: for the same mortal man did not, would not, or could not see the glory of God to make them repent and believe and would not, though a mortal man or an immortal one cometh unto them "from the dead." Besides it shows that they must have been judged before, else he would not show them any more of himself.

If you say it is the divine purpose, I reply that the divine purpose does not go beyond the capacity of those who are to act with him in effecting it, even if that action be only in conception. To have such a resurrection and judgment, of mortal men, as you claim, would require human capacity. There is no loophole for you in the idea of what men will see. They will see and feel and act as mortal sinners should, as mortal sinners do; the great proportion not knowing why they are there! and the Mahommedan dreaming that the first stage of his paradise is finally obtained!

Men might sin as mortal men, if the horrors of the judgment were before them, as taught by Br. Munger; for it is not in the want of solemnity and revealed majesty, that the tendency to sin lies; but in the weak and fallen condition of human mortality.

If men are to know more as mortal men there than here, should it not be by inspiration? Will the wicked have inspiration?

Men sin if death stares them in the face. They have always done it, because they are mortal. They do that which they know will kill them in a short time; but they are mortal. Mortal men are not deterred from the commission of the most flagrant crimes, by the certainty of judgment. Some of the strongest believers in future torment are very great sinners.

One word on the grand assertion that the "raising" is not the resurrection, but consists of the change to be effected after. This shows most beautifully that none of them were "mummies!" Very well. Is not a mummy a mortal man under certain conditions. If the dead are raised mortal there might be some of them mummies, for all that Br. Munger believes or argues to the contrary.

We will here compliment Br. M. for throwing away all the argument in favor of all having a resurrection, based on the term "Anastasis." He says, "coming forth is nothing; going up is all: that is what gives eternal life." Well, then, the coming forth is not the coming to life, in or by Christ, at all; nor was his own coming forth resurrection of any account. 'Twas his change. Wonderful! The man dies in mortality, a state of death. He is raised in death, or corruption (comes forth, I mean) for death is corruption. So it is in corruption. But the apostle speaks of the same substantive being sown and raised. If the being raised is being changed, there is a very good argument for Universalism even in Br. M.'s mortal resurrection; but what is still to be disposed of, makes a beautifully clear exposition, i. e., if people do care about the meaning of terms, or the relation of one part of a figure of speech to another. The raising follows the sowing, as the next thing in order; so inversely, the next condition preceding the raising is the "sowing." Hence, the dead, who are raised in a mortal state, are "sown" by the spirit of God; for that is all the resurrection power promised. But it is "sown a natural body;" (that is, mortal) "it is raised spiritual" that is, it is resurrected, not raised natural by the spirit. A mortal resurrection which is not Scripture raising, to sow men in natural life by the Spirit of God, that they may change into immortality! If one, why not all?

Now we ought not to hear any more of the charge of Sadduceeism against those who believe that the gospel does not promise any life in the future to the wicked. Here is the position of the Sadducees, that they suggested to Christ, to disprove the Bible doctrine of a resurrection to life, adopted and indorsed by those famous preachers of the resurrection (one of them) who have stood against the speculations of those teachers in the natural immortality of man, who have been unwittingly grading the track for spiritualists and Pantheists. This man is doing the same thing. The Sadducees presented a great objection to the doctrine of a resurrection of the dead. The same mortal condition as we find here. The reason why they proposed such a foolish objection was that they did not understand the Scriptures or the power of God. Christ tells them he meant that the resurrection would be real; but their objection, from the supposed circumstances, amounted to nothing; for he did not teach a condition for the resurrection that would admit of any such circumstances. Br. Munger says the condition will exist; therefore the circumstances may. Hence we see that the ground of the Sadducees is adopted and Christ's rejected; for that condition which they suggested, as the resurrection, is admitted, and Christ's doctrine is denied. Matters it what platform a man may lay down on which the whole "body are to see eye to eye," when Jesus has given us the only "eye" by which we can see this position for the world to come? The Word of God declares that in the resurrection they are like the angels of God, being the children of God and of the resurrection; neither can they die any more. Then they are not mortal or subject, in any way, to mortal conditions.

It comes with an amazing ill grace from those whose position requires them to ignore and deny the plain statement of Jesus Christ, the charge that we do not admit the plain teaching of the Son of God (John v., 28, 29,) who does not say there, or in any other place, that the wicked will have life in the future. He does say, elsewhere, that they shall not see life [again] for the wrath of God abideth on them. In the great text (John v., 28, 29,) Jesus says only that they that have done evil shall come forth, as is rendered in King James' translation; there is no positive being, or quality, given to them, except it is by implication. They are opposite in character; hence, when the circumstances or conditions are given, for this class, we should conclude that they are opposite in state. If so, they are in death; because those who have done good "come forth to life." Coming forth is only a means, anyway, with all the strength the English version can give it. It is not life itself; for the good "come forth" to life. If Jesus meant death, (which he might if they came to mortal life) let him tell us, or if he meant to say that there are two kinds of life on the other side of the resurrection of the dead; or that the saints shall have one, and not the other, let him say so. He has not said this, here or anywhere else. Nor has he given any assurance that there is a way of getting out of one life into another, in the world to come; for the "life to come" belongs to the world to come. Now there is one life to come. So the Bible states, explicitly, and to show that there is no other—none like this, the apostle contrasts "the life which is to come" with "the life that now is." If Jesus knew what he was talking about, it would seem that others do not; for they read what he says (they ought to), but the "eye to eye" may take an "eye" away, so that they see, and do not perceive.

And why do they not understand? Well, the positions which so plainly deny God's word must lead to some plan by which the force of it is destroyed; for that word says, plainly, "the dead shall be raised incorruptible;" which must include the righteous. It declares that "it" which was sown in dishonor shall "be raised in glory;" not changed into glory afterward. What glory is there in corruption?

Thoughts on 1 Peter iv., 6, 17, 18.

BY B. MATTHIAS.

[Concluded.]

II. The doctrine of these texts. First, It is That men are judged in the flesh, while in mortality; in the time when they can be dealt with, are within the reach of justice, and are susceptible of punishment. Second, The gospel is the means of judging men. That is what the word teaches. "For, for this cause was the gospel preached to them that are dead." See fifth verse "Who is ready to judge the," etc. The same thought is found in another place. "By which also he weut and preached to the spirits in prison, which some time were disobedient, when once the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah while the ark was preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls, were saved by water." 1 Peter iii., 19, 20.

When were they preached to? "In the days of Noah." By whom? Noah, a preacher of righteousness. By what spirit? Of Christ. Is that so? Let us see. "Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you, searching what or what manner of time, the spirit of Christ which was in them did signify," etc. 1 Peter i., 11. It should be allowed that this passage explains the other, viz., "By which he went and preached to the spirits in prison." But says one, "They were in prison." When? before or after they were destroyed? After, say some. What, after their destruction? The word is by this same apostle, "The world that then was, perished. Jesus says the flood came and took them all away. The original account is, "And God saw that every imagination of the thoughts of man's heart was only evil continually. And it repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth; and it grieved him at his heart. And the Lord said, I will destroy man . . . . And all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land died. Gen. vii.

Like other mortals, they had all the preaching and judgment before death. But "they were in prison." Yes, but it was while the ark was preparing. What means the word "prison?" This word agrees with another relative word in this epistle, and in Jude, and in the words of Jesus and Paul, and others which we will refer to. In 2 Peter ii., 4, etc., "If God spared not the angels that sinned." The sons of God that went after the daughters of men, and "took them wives of all they chose." Gen. vi. 2. These became unbearably wicked; who after due warning were given up, arrested, tried, condemned, and "chained in darkness, outlawed; greatly restrained by their own strong delusions, "consciences seared;" "past feeling." The spirit withdrawn; which had striven with them. Now, thus given up, the piety, the zeal, the righteousness of Noah was no offence to them. They were condemned long before the flood, and consigned to "chains of darkness"—or Tartarus—were kept in durance until the time of execution. "Reserved unto judgment." Jude has it, "Hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day." "Great day" may mislead some minds, but need not. Both Jude and Peter are giving consecutive examples of judgments; so this great day, as it stands in the order, comes off before Sodom and the Cities of the Plains are judged. Besides, they both speak of more modern sinners, liable to the same condemnatlon; sinners of the same type; subject to the same style of judgment. Sodom and Gomorrah are made "ensamples unto those who should after live ungodly." 2 Peter ii., 6.

These lost sinners form a dismal character according to Peter and Jude. See 1 Peter ii., 10, to the end of the chapter, and Jude 8 to 13. There are some parts of this description of character which excite our suspicions that some of our near neighbors are involved in filling up the picture. "Which have forsaken the right way," "turned unto fables," "Falling away."—Paul. "Speaking evil of things that they understand not."—Peter. "But these speak evil of those things they know not."—Jude. To whom is reserved the blackness of darkness." Peter calls it "mist of darkness." As in the former cases, reference to a judicial blindness, where there is plenty of self-complacency, but no humility; plenty of words about the gospel, but no gospel in their words; unreformable, unconvertable"; weighed in the balance and found wanting; despoiled of their talent; "bound hand and foot, and cast into outer darkness." "And if one look into the land, behold darkness, and the light is darkened in the heavens thereof." Isa. v., 30. See Isa. viii., last verse. Jesus says, "Walk while ye have the light, lest the darkness come upon you; for he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth." John xii., 35. These cases must suffice to illustrate those passages in Peter and Jude, "mist of darkness," "blackness of darkness," darkness so dense that no gleam of truth can penetrate its dismal folds.

"For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God." The judgment upon this house is corrective, disciplinary. Said one of the prophets, "We shall not die. O Lord, thou hast ordained them for judgment, and O, mighty God, thou hast established them for correction." Hab. i., 12. But where shall the incorrigible sinner appear? They are judged as unrepentant sinners; and they die unpardoned criminals.

The righteous in all ages have been tried. Instances of judgment such as Peter and Habakkuk speak of as coming upon the Hebrew first; and it was ordained for them by the Lord to Abraham. "Know of a surety, that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them four hundred years. And also that nation whom they shall serve will I judge." When the trial of the first ended, the judgment of the other began, and was rushed through to consummation. And that is the rule and no exception.

Take another case. The Jewish nation and all nations were given into the hands of the king of Babylon seventy years; at the end of that term Babylon fell immediately. Belshazzar was slain, and Darius the Median took the kingdom. This had been foretold as distinctly as the other instance. "This nation shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years." . . . . When seventy years are accomplished, I will punish the king of Babylon and that nation, saith the Lord, for their iniquity, and the land of Chaldeans, and will make it perpetual desolations." Jer. xxv., 11, 12. As a reason for this and the punishing of all other nations to extinction is given in the twenty-ninth verse of this chapter. "For lo, I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name, and should ye be utterly unpunished? Ye shall not be unpunished; for I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth." Read to the end of the chapter. Where shall they appear? We have given above the measured affliction spoken of by Peter, and we are witness of the special and fierce judgments upon papacy. That began at the instant the "forty and two months" ended; by which we know our redemption is begun. "And if it first begin at us." The righteous are punished beforehand, and come out as gold "purified, made white and tried." "Some men's sins are open beforehand; (because confessed) going to judgment; some men's they follow after; because not repented of." 1 Tim. v., 24.

Now let the "House of God" say, "O thou enemy, destructions are come to a perpetual end." Psa. ix., 6.

New Knowledge of the Sun.—Of what was learned about the sun in the late eclipse, which attracted so much attention, the Scientific American says:

Few expeditions for scientific research have ever been more carefully organized than those sent to observe the recent solar eclipse. The results are important, as they confirm previous theories in regard to the nature of the luminous matter which surrounds the sun, and the frequent changes observable in its appearance. The remarkable protuberances pictured by the camera and tested by the spectroscope are no longer mysterious.

A self-luminous object is determinable with the greatest ease by the spectroscope. The sun has by this means been determined to be self-luminous. The peculiar parti-colored streak which indicates this, had been noticed in the solar spectrum previously to the occurrence of the eclipse. The absence of the dark lines in the spectrum fixed the nature of the luminous matter so far as to show it to be gaseous. Photography has shown us the irregular forms of the masses of gaseous matter as they float about and are upheaved. The prominences are now attributed to a sort of condensation going on among the vapors and gases formed by the intense heat of the sun. The heat which exists upon the surface of the sun is intense beyond all human conception, and doubtless those substances which are to all artificial means within our reach so refractory that they cannot even be fused would be vaporized by it.

So science goes on prying deeper into the mysteries of nature' its powers gradually enlarging only to discover that the field is infinite.

Mr. Dunbar Moodie, late sheriff of the county of Hastings, writes to the Montreal News recommending vinegar and water as a cure for hydrophobia. He tells of a Captain Paul who was bitten by a mad dog on the finger, which soon commenced to swell and gradually increased, extending to the whole arm. A broad red streak extended on each side of the bitten finger up to the shoulder on the outside, and to near the armpit on the inside. He at once took a sharp pen-knife and scarified the finger all around the wound which bled plentifully. He then moistened some common salt with vinegar, and rubbed it into the wound perseveringly. Gradually the red streaks disappeared until they were they were confined to the hand. The application of the salt and vinegar, produced a copious discharge of watery fluid from the wounds in the hand. He then applied a common flour poultice for some time, until he thought the danger was past.

Several days ago an English lady, on a visit to a friend at Gosport, opposite Portsmouth, was severely bitten by a rabid dog in one of her hands, just as she was about returning in the ferry-boat to Portsmouth. The hand gave her great pain, but on immersing it in salt water the pain gradually abated. In this manner she kept the hand in the salt water all the way back to Portsmouth, which is about a mile from Gosport. By this means the salt water proved an effectual antidote to the poison of the wound from the dog's teeth. Immediately after biting the lady, the dog bit a coachman and a boy, both of whom died of hydrophobia.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid, quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year or $1.10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the POST OFFICE, COUNTY, AND STATE must be given, and written plainly; and if a CHANGE is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters confusion and delay are inevitable.

INHERENT IMMORTALITY.

BY DR. J. K. FINDLEY.

[These articles by Dr. Finley we take from the Niles (Mich.) Republican. Some things of a mere local nature are omitted.]

THE question before us is, Does the Bible teach that man has a spiritual entity, called the soul, constituting inherently a part of his nature, which is necessarily immortal?

That the dogma of the natural immortality of the soul, or man, is very generally received among Christians is freely conceded; but that this has been the uniform belief of the church throughout the Christian dispensation we deny. The history of the church fully establishes the fact that even at as early a period as the second century, Christians were greatly divided in their views on the question. There is no evidence whatever that during the first century the belief in the inherent immortality of the soul was held by any one professing to be a Christian. The history of the church in the second century abounds with proof that very many of the Ecclesiastical Fathers did not believe in the doctrine. Cyprian, Arnobius, Athanasius and others, regarded the soul as naturally mortal, and that its immortality depended upon the action of the Holy Spirit in regeneration, which is substantially the doctrine of the Destructionists. In Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History we are informed of a sect in Arabia, in the third century, who denied the natural immortality of the soul. Their views were regarded as heretical by the professional theologians of that period, and a council was called to take their case into consideration.

The doctrine of inherent immortality took its rise in the second century, and was derived, not from the teachings of the Bible, but from the philosophical speculations of the disciples of Plato, who, at this period, came into the church in large numbers, and gave shape to much of the belief of the church, on this as well as other points of doctrine; but the question was not fully settled until the beginning of the sixteenth century. A Lateran Council then convened by Pope Leo X. decreed that "the proper immortality of the soul should be the recognized doctrine of the Church." From those sources, and not from the authority of the Bible, the doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul was imposed upon the churches. "The Platonism of the second century was the father, and a Lateran Council under Pope Leo X. was the foster father of this so-called Bible doctrine." It is susceptible of proof from his own writings that Luther did not believe in it. In reference to this very decree of the Lateran Council, he says:

"I permit the Pope to make articles of faith for himself and his faithful, such as the soul is immortal, with all those monstrous opinions found in the Roman dunghill of decretals."

I refer to these historical facts to show that the Destructionists of the last two hundred years did not originate the doctrine of non-immortality, but that it has existed to a greater or less extent throughout the whole period of the Christian dispensation; and this is, once for all, my reply to all those, who, for want of something better to oppose to our views, sneeringly insinuate that "it is too late in the day to call in question a doctrine that has universally prevailed in the church."

After all, our only appeal is to the Bible; to it alone are we indebted for the only real knowledge we possess of our origin and constitution. No Christian will dispute that Moses wrote by the inspiration of God, just as we are told "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." His record is not made to mock our faith, but that our faith may receive and rest upon it as the truth of God himself. If there is any immortal principle entering into our constitution, we would reasonably expect to find it made known in at least as clear and distinct terms as the less important part of our nature. Let us then, with the single object in view of discovering the truth, examine the inspired record, laying aside all preconceived views.

Gen. i., 26, 27; ii., 7. "And God said let us make man in our image, after our likeness: So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." This is the only and the whole record, authenticated by divine inspiration, of our creation. Do we find the word or the idea of immortality in it? There is not the most distant approach to any intimation of the kind in the whole account. There is not one word or hint of anything more than what entered into the constitution of all the rest of the animal creation, as was fully shown in my last article. But we are told that Moses, being familiar with all the learning of the Egyptians, believed that man had an immortal soul; and, therefore, when he informed us that man was made in the image of God he must have had the idea of immortality in his mind. If he had he certainly did not esteem it worthy of notice, for he has not made the slightest allusion to it. There is no doubt that he knew the serpent which deceived Eve in the garden of Eden proclaimed it, whether he believed it or not; and Moses put this on record to let us know that the serpent affirmed a great lie, and in doing so accused God himself of uttering a falsehood. His heathen worshippers in all ages of the world have, in every conceivable variety of ridiculous forms, believed the lie, and finally succeeded in getting it engrafted into the belief of the Christian Church at a very early period of its history. And what kind of fruit has it borne since then? Let Romanism tell, with its idol worship, its Mariolitry, its worship of saints, and above all, its horrible doctrine of purgatory under the control of the priesthood, by which its deluded followers have been ground down in worse than Egyptian bondage. Let Universalism tell; let Swedenborgianism; let the last and most dangerous of all the delusions, Spiritism, numbering its atheistical, its anti-christian, Bible-hating devotees by millions all over the world, tell; for they are built upon the foundation of the belief in an immortal soul that can live separated from the body, inherent in every human being.

The history of the church for the last half century has fully shown that it is powerless to counteract these heresies, and it will continue powerless so long as it yields up the very citadel of its strength, the foundation of all these systems of error. The Spiritualists proclaim everywhere that their chief mission is to convince all that the soul is immortal. They say, too, that Christians owe them a great debt of gratitude for proving this great truth as they claim it to be, by revelations from the spirits of the dead, which, they truthfully say, cannot be proved from the Bible. In one of their conventions, held about four years ago, they passed a resolution affirming that all who believed in the immortality of the soul were Spiritualists. I am sorry to say the too prevalent belief often expressed by intelligent Christians, gives support to the claim. In the church of which I was a member, a few years ago, one of the elders, speaking of a young man who had gone into the army, said: "There is no danger of his being killed." It was asked, Why? "Oh," said he, "The spirit of his mother, who had died a short time before, will guard him from all harm." I have myself heard an orthodox minister, lecturing on the subject of faith, say, in alluding to the "great cloud of witnesses by which we are surrounded," Heb. xii., 1, "That these were the spirits of our friends who had died, which were all around us, deeply interested in our welfare, and anxious for our salvation; and that a true exercise of faith required us to believe it was so. Now what is this but a form of spiritism: and, we ask, why should not those sprits find out some mode of communicating with our spirits? I see nothing improbable in the conjecture, and this is just what Spiritualists claim is the fact. All the orthodox, however, do not believe as this clergyman taught.

Dr. Scott, the Commentator, treating on this verse, says: "Neither in the Bible, nor by Greek writers does this word (witnesses) ever mean spectators." A very moderate acquaintance with the Greek will enable any one to satisfy himself that Dr. S. is right. In a former communication I gave the comment of Prof. Bush on this expression, "our image," in which he says the context shows that it means authority delegated to him to rule over all the inferior animal creation. Dr. Raphael, a learned Hebrew scholar at the head of a Jewish educational institution in Birmingham, England, says the passage should be translated, "Let us make man in our image, that he may rule," etc., thus agreeing with Prof. Bush. But supposing that man was possessed of immortality, that attribute alone would not constitute the image of God, for God is possessed of omnipotence, omniscience, omnipresence, etc., and unless man possesses all the attributes of God, he could not be said to be in his image, in the sense in which orthodoxy understands it; being possessed of but one of the attributes, he would only be the image of that one attribute. But I think quite enough has been said to show the claim is unfounded, having nothing whatever to sustain it in the sacred narrative.

LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN.

BY STEWART CARLISLE.

WILMINGTON, DEL., Nov. 21, 1868.

DEAR BR. COOKMAN: Not having the pleasure of your acquaintance, and feeling a reluctance to call upon you without, pardon me if I take the liberty of addressing you a few thoughts in regard to your discourse on Sabbath evening last.

My object for so doing is not to call in question either your honesty, or earnestness, or piety; for all of which I entertain the highest regard, as well now as in the years of your public life in the past. My single aim is to elicit truth, and with this object in view I propose, in my humble way, and I trust in the Spirit of Him who is "the way, the truth, and the life," to give you a few thoughts as they presented themselves to my mind on listening to your discourse. Your text on that occasion was, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul." You stated that in a previous discourse you attempted to prove the immortality of the soul; but your object on the present occasion was to prove the "value of the soul," and your argument in favor of the value of the soul was based upon what you were pleased to call its immortality. You said, the soul could never, never die; the body was mortal and must die, and return to the dust; but the soul being immortal must live forever; and in proof of this you quoted from human authors; as for instance, "Suppose this vast globe to be composed of grains of the finest sand, and an angel would visit it once in every thousand years, and carry away a single grain; he would exhaust the entire globe before we had spent the first hour of our immortal existence;" then from Richard Baxter, as he had written over his mantel-piece, "My soul must live forever either in heaven or hell;" and had you gone all through the writings of men, from Plato down to the present time and exhausted all their arguments in proof of the soul's immortality, your first appeal to the sacred Scriptures would have dashed their theories in pieces like a potter's vessel, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." I was perfectly amazed, when you introduced that passage in proof of the soul's immortality; the contradiction was so plain and positive that I supposed every one present would have seen it, and it was none the less so, in your next quotation, "The wages of sin is death." This is in perfect harmony with your first quotation; and it is equally surprising; how these two texts can be brought forward to prove that the soul can never, never die, is something that tangled theology ought to explain. With those two passages before you and a thousand other passages in perfect harmony with them, and not one single passage in the whole Bible where the immortality of the soul is expressed, would it not be well for you to examine somewhat more carefully the foundation upon which this doctrine rests, lest you may be found teaching for the commandments of God the doctrines of men? Has God ever said the soul should never die? if so, where? He has said in so many words, "The soul that sinneth it shall die;" and if men teach the contrary, do they not contradict Him? Now if he had said, in any place, that the soul of any (body) that sinneth, the body shall die, but the soul can never die, then we might be justified in teaching the same; but has he ever said so? If so, where? God having created man, and given him life, knew perfectly well how to unmake him, in case of his failure to answer the purpose for which he was created; and this was all comprehended in the law given to man at his creation, "For in the day that thou eatest thereof, dying, thou shalt die;" and then, after he had disobeyed and incurred the penalty of sin, his Creator told him, in few words, "dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." This was to unmake him; this was death; and that law never having been repealed, it stands in full force; hence, when God says, "The soul that sinneth it shall die," it is only speaking in harmony with his first solemn announcement to man, "dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return;" and yet man, feeble man, "whose breath is in his nostrils," and his "foundation in the dust," whose "days are as an handbreadth, whose life is even as a vapor that appeareth for a little while and then vanisheth away;" this man, not satisfied to be what God has made him, a mortal man, with the privilege of immortality and eternal life held out to him as the reward of faith in Christ, and a virtuous and godly life, like his father in the garden of Eden, allows himself to be persuaded that he "shall not surely die," but be like him, "Who only hath immortality;" that is, God.

Oh, my dear brother, can you not see that this awful falsehood renders the word of God, which is quick and powerful, and sharper than a two-edged sword, both pointless and powerless? and your earnest labor, almost as one that "beateth the air?" Is it any matter of surprise that men sit with stolid indifference or calm composure under the most earnest and well meant appeals in regard to their eternal interests, while they are taught that they are immortal and can never die; and the character of God is represented to them as one whose tender mercies are over all his works, "and that He has no pleasure in the death of any;" that his mercy endureth forever; but his anger he will not keep forever; that "God is love," and that "he so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him might not perish but have everlasting life:" is it any wonder that they persuade themselves that their future may not be so bad after all, and that in the roll of ages it may be graciously changed for the better? Would it not be better to tell men that they inherit from the first Adam a dying, perishing, corruptible nature; that it is doomed to the dust of the earth; and that unless they gain a relationship with the second Adam, that will be their final and eternal destiny? Would it not be more in harmony with the teachings of Jesus to tell them that, if they die in their sins, they "shall not see life?" Is not the Lord Jesus the author of eternal life to all them that obey him, "(and them only?) does he not declare that He is the resurrection and the life, and that it is the Father's will that of all that he hath given him he should lose nothing, but should raise it up at the last day;" and except we eat his flesh and drink his blood we have no life in us; "that He is the living bread that cometh down from heaven, which if a man eat thereof he shall not die?" (of course not the death that sinners die); for death in the case of the wicked is absolute, a total loss of life and being together; "they shall be as though they had not been;" they die under the condemnation of the law that has no power to give life in the future, nor provision for their release from the dust; "but what the law could not do in that it was weak, God sent his only begotten Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin condemned sin in the flesh; and he it is that brings life and immortality to light through the gospel.

We understand the gospel, then, to be the offer of eternal life to dying, perishing man, going out of life down to the dust. Obedience to the gospel guarantees to the believer a future life by a resurrection from the dead, or a translation at the second advent of the Lord from heaven; so when that event takes place the saints of God, and they only, will be made immortal; "For then this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality; so when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, "Death is swallowed up in victory." Mark it, then is the time when the righteous wake up in the likeness of their immortal Head; then comes the song of triumph; then comes the time that David alluded to when he said, "I shall behold thy face in righteousness. I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness;" then, too, comes Job's time of rejoicing, when his living Redeemer shall stand upon the earth; and though after his skin worms may have destroyed his body, "yet shall he see God."

And to show you that we quote from the divine record, and not from the traditions of pagan philosophy, hear the testimony of the the beloved disciple; "He that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of His Son; and this is the record, that God hath given unto us eternal life; and this life is in His Son; he that hath the Son hath life (by promise) and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life:" and the Son says, he "shall not see life."

Now I ask in all Christian candor and sincerity, if in the face of this record we allow ourselves to be persuaded that we can never, never die; if this persuasion comes not from him who from the beginning was a liar and a murderer? And is it not in flat, direct contradiction to the Divine record? and do not they who thus, "put darkness for light, and light for darkness," incur the awful danger of being sent away into everlasting punishment, with death, and not allowed to see life in a future state? If the record be true, (and we believe it with all our heart) then "the wages of sin is death;" to be eternally dead; to be punished with death, and that death everlasting, constitutes the sum total of everlasting punishment, as revealed in the record.

"But the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." And here is a theme for every gospel minister, if he will take his stand by the sacred record, and throw his man-made theories "to the moles and the bats;" he may truly and emphatically offer eternal life to dying, perishing men, and tell them that God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him shall not perish, but have everlasting life." There will be no contradictions in his teaching so long as he is willing to stand by the record; for "the word of our God shall stand forever," and this is the word which, by the gospel, every Christian minister ought to preach with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, and if the love of God, as manifested in the gift of his only begotten Son, be faithfully, earnestly and lovingly presented to dying mortals, and they refuse to accept the offer of eternal life, then Infinite love can do no more than let them die, because of their wilful rejection of the only means by which they might live. "Man that is on honor and understandeth not is like the beasts that perish." "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding, shall remain in the congregation of the dead."

And now, my dear brother, if this is in harmony with the record, and we affirm that the whole record is in harmony with the views here presented, is it not an awful thing to falsify the record by teaching that man is "immortal, and can never, never die?"

How will you explain the words of the blessed Redeemer when he speaks of the loss of the soul? Can it be said with a shadow of truth that a man has lost his soul, while he is in conscious possession of it? no matter where the man may be, if he is still in possession of his soul, it cannot be said in truth that he has lost it; whatever else he may have lost, he still retains his soul.

Suppose, my dear brother, we read this verse with the context and give it Dr. A. Clark's view, that it means life, as in the context, "If any man will save his life he shall lose it; but if any man will lose his life for my sake he shall find it, "For what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose eternal life?" If he lose eternal life, does not he lose his soul? and if he lose his soul, does not he effectually lose eternal life? For a man, then, to lose his own soul is to lose life and being together; and that includes body, soul, and whatever else human traditions may feel disposed to invest a mortal being with. Man possesses nothing but what he is liable at any moment to lose, unless he be in possession of a spiritual hope which secures to him the promise of eternal life when the Son of man shall return from heaven; and till he comes, death will continue to hold high carnival and gather all into his cold embrace, no matter how high, how low, how rich or how poor, lettered or unlettered, wise or unwise, all must yield to the solemn edict, "dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return;" and the second advent of the LIFE-GIVER from heaven with the "Keys of death and Hades" will determine who those are, "who by patient continuance in well-doing sought for glory, honor, and immortality, and he will raise them up and give them "eternal life;" for this is his Father's will that hath sent him, and it is his delight to do that will; being constituted heir of all things, and the author of eternal life to all them that obey him. My heart's desire and prayer to God is, that you and I may be the worthy subjects of the resurrection, or translation at his coming and kingdom.

Hoping you may receive this in the same spirit in which it is sent, and give the subject your prayerful consideration, and search the Scriptures to see if these things are so; and may our dear Father who is in heaven, who giveth wisdom to all men liberally and upbraideth none that ask, "fill you with all spiritual wisdom and understanding;" and keep you from falling and present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy."

Yours in the hope of eternal life at the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ: Amen, even so, come Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

ROM. viii., 11, AND EPH. ii., 1.

"But if the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his spirit that dwelleth in you."

"And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and in sins."

HERE are two texts which are positive testimonies for the re-living of the righteous only. By some, they are not admitted as teaching the resurrection of the saints at the last day. These persons refer it to a quickening in this life. That their position is a fallacious one the following facts may prove:

The text in Romans shows that those to whom Paul addressed these words, were already in possession of the Holy Spirit, or Spirit of God, and, according to our objectors they had already been quickening, else why does he use the language, His Spirit that DWELLETH in you." This fact alone shows the utter fallacy of their position. But it is evident that was not the quickening that Paul had reference to, for he declares, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies, by (Mar., because of—or, for this reason) His Spirit that dwelleth in you." This quickening can refer to nothing but the resurrection. Paul has made the terms raised and "quicken" in this verse interchangeable, as the word "also" proves—"He that raised up Christ from the dead, shall ALSO quicken (lit., make alive) your mortal bodies, by His Spirit that dwelleth in you."

Our objectors think that the phrase "your mortal bodies" proves that Paul refers to a quickening in this life. In answering this it is simply necessary to say, that as none of those Roman Christians had immortal bodies, Paul could use no other phrase than what he did. Immortal bodies being deathless, never need quickening. Mortal bodies are subject to death, and they need the quickening influences of the Holy Spirit at the last day in order to raise them from the dead. These Roman Christians had mortal bodies, and at the same time had the Holy Spirit in them, because of this latter fact, Paul has assured them of a quickening by Him who raised up Christ from the dead. Thus much for Rom. viii., 11.

The other text to be considered is, "And you hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and in sins." Our opponents think that they gain the day here, but they are mistaken. This text is simply a figure of speech called "a prolepsis:" that is, anticipation of future things. Thus we find the phrase "He that believeth hath everlasting life." He hath it by anticipation. It is promised to him. Paul says we are "made heirs according to the HOPE of eternal life. If Christians literally have everlasting life, then it ceases to be a matter of hope, "for if a man seeth that which he hopes for, why doth he longer hope for it." Again, we read, "ye are saved;" "who hath saved us;" and yet Paul says "We are saved by hope." In this manner we explain the text, "And you hath he quickened," etc. We are promised a quickening, as we find by Rom. viii., 11.

Finally, Eph. ii., 4, 5, 6, scatters our opponents, theory to the winds. There we read, 'But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, hath QUICKENED US TOGETHER WITH Christ, and hath RAISED US UP TOGETHER," etc. Here we learn that Christ was quickened, and that we shall be quickened with him. Christ did not need a moral quickening, for he never was morally or spiritually dead. Christians before their conversion were subject to death, the wages of sin; but by believing on Christ they receive the Holy Spirit which is the pledge of their passing out of death into life at the last day. Thus much for Eph. ii., 1, at present.

Yours, in love, F. H. BURBANK.

WORDS OF ENCOURAGEMENT.

BY A. BOYNTON.

TO THE "LITTLE FLOCK:" Dearly Beloved—The perilous times having come, it seems needful often to stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance, lest we become weary and faint on the way. The times require us to give and receive all the aid we can that we may be prepared to fight the good fight of faith and lay hold on eternal life. The Christian life is emphatically a life of faith. The grand object of the present one is the development of character; and all things connected with it are designed of God for this end; all the circumstances; all of what are called the blessings or ills of life; all the lights and shades; yea, all the filling up of life's cup is ordered and designed of God as a Saviour of life unto life, or of death unto death. In other words, these things all tend to lead God's children to a nearer conformity to himself and a preparedness for a future life; and to the carnally minded they tend to greater alienation, ending in death; and this all because of the use or abuse made of these things and this life.

A faith-life turns all circumstances and things into blessings, helps of advancement and improvement, means by which he is raised higher and drawn nearer his God. We think this matter is much more clearly seen when one becomes divested of the false theology of the day, especially the doctrine of the personal spirit-devil: instead of his satanic majesty's raising such a muss here, turning the world upside down, these things are consequent on the present arrangement, designed of God for a specific purpose, one of trial and development preparatory for a glorious future. Evil among men (i. e., human evil) is the natural workings of the natural mind. Christians are renewed, transformed in the spirit of their minds; and thus are enabled to overcome evil with good. This is grace reigning unto eternal life. Understanding de-evil of our human nature, we know how and where to apply the remedy. We can come directly at the disease, and so fight, not as one beating the air. Our faith, too, should not be of a transitory character, but strong, resting in the infinite love of our heavenly Father manifested through his dear Son. His mercy and grace should settle our hearts in the firm persuasion that "I am the Lord's." This will ever help us to face the storm; to look through the clouds that may interpose in our path. We only value and enjoy things by contrast. All these seeming impediments, these disagreeables, the bitter draughts of this life will but make the future the sweeter, the more glorious. Walking by faith implies more than a periodical manifestation on important occasions, called forth perhaps by a rousing sermon or prayer circle; it is an ingredient as important, and should be as constant as our breathing. "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin," is a declaration sufficient to show its importance.

Unpleasant and trying we know are the associations and connections which God's people must have with those who are only of the earth, earthly. Educated to relish and enjoy things only as they are connected with the divine, how is his mind sickened and tried with earthly toys, trifles of an hour? Here comes in the grace of patience; if ever it was needed it is now. But as an offset for its severe trial is the consideration of its short continuance. Severe storms seldom last long. The "great wrath" is coupled with a short time. So even in this last severe conflict, consolation is afforded and a cause for the lifting up of the head and rejoicing. While the agitated and uncertain state of things tend to make the worldling grasp them the firmer, the Christian sees in them a waxing old and ready to vanish away; a dissolving of not only the physical but the social bands of the world; a coming to pieces of the whole frame work of society as founded in the first human pair. Sad as this spectacle might and does appear, if we look at it disconnected with another fact, (the promise of God) yet, when faith comes to our rescue, when its divine light beams upon us, and the glorious future stands before our minds, we rejoice, and with the poet can sing,

"Vanish then this world of shadows,
Pass the former things away;
Lord appear, appear and glad us,
With the dawn of endless day."

Faith was what Noah condemned the world with. Faith was what made Abraham a friend of God and the father of us all. Faith to us is the magnet by which power we are constantly drawn heavenward in our desires and expectations; even amid all the distracting and increasing perils of our time, faith shall make a triumph over all. So,

While the earth is agitated,
Fear and dread on every side;
God's own little flock are nestling,
Close to Jesus they abide.
They expect a world of glory,
When this world shall pass away,
The New Jerusalem of promise,
Which knows no sorrow or decay.

From Emeline Wood.

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 3, 1869.

Dear Brethren and Sisters scattered abroad: I wish you all a happy New Year in all blessings God can bestow on you, and a double portion of that blessed Spirit that leads into all truth. Somehow I feel different from what I have ever before. I feel to consecrate my all to God, and have great peace of mind, and think some important event is coming to pass with our precious Life Believers. It seems that God is going to honor us with great honor through the spread of this blessed light. Those blessed little messengers [Campaign Documents] that make hearts rejoice and be glad; and our precious Herald of Life; how I do praise God for it. May every paper and every tract prove a savor of life to all that read them. I bless God that he has given us a teachable mind, and has engrafted his most precious words in our hearts, and feel that He has formed in us the hope of glory.

My dear brethren and sisters, pray for me, as I need your prayers now. Mine is a special request, and I do believe that our God is a prayer-hearing and prayer-answering God. About five weeks ago, on Monday, as I was going to commence my work, as usual, I could not see; so I had to call the little girl from down stairs to thread my needle. I became alarmed. For three days it continued the same; so I left my work and went to see Dr. Robertson, celebrated for eyes and ears. He told me my eyes were in a critical condition; said there were cataracts forming, and if I did not give up sewing I would become entirely blind. Dear brethren and sisters, to be both deaf and blind, what could I do? for I have nothing but my needle to depend on. The doctor gave me the name and number of another kind of glasses, and told me to come and see him in about four weeks' time. I did so, and he examined them an hour, then said they were no better, and I had best to give up my sewing, and he would do any thing to help my eyes he could. As our Father in heaven would be inquired of to do the things we stand in need of, I would ask a special interest in all your prayers for me; for I have always, since I was fifteen years old, supported myself with my needle, and have always trusted in the Lord that he would let me be able to provide for myself; and have up to this time; but now I cannot see to it. If any of you know any way for me, please give advice. I shall be glad to hear from any of you who feel disposed to write me. Yours, in hope of Life when the Life-giver comes to give the crown of eternal life.

Zion's Herald.

The above paper published in Boston, Mass., comes to us much improved in its appearance. It is a large quarto of twelve pages, with a cover of eight additional pages devoted to advertisements, which can be detached from the body, leaving that perfect by itself. We are much pleased with this feature. We regard general advertisements as a defect in religious papers; but Zion's Herald avoids that objection by its course. We feel a special liking for that paper because it was the pioneer paper in Methodism in this country, and established about the time we commenced our ministry in that church. It has now entered on volume forty-sixth, and looks well. It is to be adorned once a month, with a portrait of some eminent man, or minister. The first is that of Governor Claflin, of Mass., which is very fine. We rejoice that New England Methodism has so interesting a periodical. We shall sometimes "cross swords;" but trust it will be in love.

"A Cure for Hydrophobia," in last week's paper, on the last page, the third line, has "vinegar and water." We presume it should read salt, instead of "water."

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 13, 1869.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

An "Inquiring Friend."

Niles, Mich., Dec. 29, 1868.

Dear Editor: It is with a spirit of inquiry, not of antagonism, that I send you the following reflections: If the actual words spoken by God to Adam and Eve, when he told them what the penalty would be, in case of their eating of the forbidden fruit, were, "dying thou shalt die," let me ask, How are we going to explain the curse to be loss of life "simply?" for, you will notice, God said —"dying thou shalt die." This conveys the idea to my mind that Adam was to die whether he sinned or not: that death was an event certain to occur. But in case Adam should violate the law, something in addition to this death was to be placed upon him: for, says God, in "dying thou shalt die." Now, we do not believe that Adam would have died at all, had he not sinned. And here, you see, the two ideas conflict with each other.

If this difficulty can be explained in the Herald of Life, at some future time, it will give great satisfaction to an Inquiring Friend.

Response by the Editor.

In relation to the expression "surely die," Prof. Pick, in his "Bible Student's Concordance," under the word "Surely," says, "All passages not inserted have the verb in its relative repeated, as dying thou shalt die. Gen. ii., 17."

By an examination of his Concordance, we find that not one of the passages where the phrase "surely die" occurs is "inserted;" therefore all such are to be understood as he says Gen. ii., 17 is, viz., "Dying thou shalt die."

Our "Inquiring Friend" says, "This conveys the idea to my mind that Adam was to die whether he sinned or not: that death was an event certain to occur." It certainly conveys the idea that Adam was mortal in his constitution, so that death was a possible event, and hence explodes the idea of inherent immortality. Perpetual life was not in his nature, but was clearly set before him as depending on his obedience to God. Of such life the tree of life was the sign, if not the actual means of it.

The phrase "surely die" occurs some twenty times in the Bible, in Hebrew. In general, it evidently is synonymous with "certainly die:" that is, it denotes certain death. That Adam was liable to death, even if he had not sinned, may be true; and yet it was sin which made death a certain event; for, "sin entered into the world and death by sin." Rom. v., 12. That which was before contingent, now become a settled fact: the animal man shall certainly die. As a penalty of the divine law, the expression "dying thou shalt die," imports an utter extinction of the animal man, or the Adamic man. In dying, its death was final and eternal. In dying, it shall die—become extinct, in the sense of living no more forever. Such seems to be the true sense of the expression. It is a death to the Adamic man, or animal nature, which is certain and final. If the person ever lives again it is by having had imparted to him, before death, another nature; that is, a spiritual one. In dying, the animal man shall die in the absolute senes; no reversal of the death doom on that nature; death holds it eternally.

Only a spiritual life is to be eternal, and that is invested in "the second Adam, the Lord from heaven." 1 Corth. xv., 47.

Our "Friend" will see that we differ from his suggestion in one particular, viz., as to the matter of death's being "an event certain to occur, whether Adam sinned or not." We admit the liability, but the certainty depended on his conduct. When he had sinned, then he was left to the natural course of animal nature, which was, after coming to maturity, then to commence to decay, or the process of dying: that process God declared should not be arrested, if man sinned, but should take its course, that so dying he should die—become extinct. To accomplish this, it was only necessary to exclude man from the tree of life.

Had Adam been obedient, we suppose the tree of life would have perpetuated his life, and the seeds of a spiritual nature would have been implanted in him; which, nourished by the grace of God and continued obedience, would have constantly triumphed over the animal nature, till, ultimately, it would have swallowed up, or so have eradicated all the animal propensities that immortality would have been the result, and the spiritual element only have remained; the whole being of man having become such.

Instead of this glorious result, the whole animal man is condemned to die by a process sure and certain, though slow, called "dying," till it should "die," thus ending its living existence. The "loss of life, simply," was the penalty for sin; but the end was to be reached by the above-named process as the result of exclusion from the tree of life, because of man's sin or transgression.

Now a spiritual nature may be obtained by a connection with the second Adam; but that does not release any one from the death or utter destruction of their animal nature. "Our old man is crucified with Christ, that the body of sin might be destroyed." Rom. vi., 6. "For the wages of sin is death;" verse 23. The death of our animal nature is certain and inevitable, whether saint or sinner. The difference between the saint and sinner is, the saint has a spiritual element in him, implanted by grace, through Jesus, which springs up into everlasting life; while the sinner has no such element, and "utterly perishes in his own corruption." 2 Pet. ii., 12. Christ, on his return "from heaven," changes the "vile body [of his saints], that it may be like his glorious body"—or, "the body of his glory." "They are sown in corruption; they are raised in incorruption... They are sown a natural [or, animal] body; they are raised a spiritual body," ... "Thou sowest not that body that shall be ... but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him. 1 Corth. xv., 37, 38, 42, 44.

We have used the Syriac "They are," instead of our "It is," in this quotation above, which reading is also sustained by other authorities.

The War Cloud.

If there should be a general war in Europe, Russia could put into the field 1,400,000 men; Prussia, 1,230,000; France, 1,350,000; Austria, 1,100,000; Italy, 480,000.

The spectacle would be one to make humanity shudder, yet either one of several men in Europe can set these six millions men to killing each other, for the paltriest reasons.

—The Advance.

We have a strong impression that this year, 1869, is to reveal events such as the world has never yet witnessed. We think one of those events is to be the exaltation of Napoleon III. far above his present position, or his entire overthrow. We trust it will be the latter: we lean altogether to that side of the question at present. May be that will be "coming to the 1,335" literal days, and will mark the end at hand.

The Degeneracy of Christendom.

If we did not believe the professed churches were to sink into the spirit of the world, so as to become like the Jews in their apostasy at the time of the first advent of Christ, we should be utterly confounded at their down ward course into the world. We confess we were astounded at a recent announcement that a first class of clergymen, of different denominations, had been engaged to write "true stories" for a paper in this city, which few religious families, a short time since, would hardly have tolerated in their houses.

The American Baptist, of this city, in December had an article, editorial, which opened with this paragraph:

The church is going downward to meet the world; the world is coming upward to meet the church. This, it seems to us, is the characteristic of our times, and never more distinctly seen than in the history of the past year.

In that article we find a paragraph that shows the degeneracy of modern churchism in a painful light. We fully believe religion is the loser by this ministerial bargain; and followed out, it will swallow up these nominal churches in the world. The extract is as follows:

A few years ago, it was a rare thing for members of evangelical churches to patronize balls and theatres, or to tolerate in their families the indiscriminate reading of novels. Now we find leading ministers amongst the popular writers of fiction, and worse still, contributing by the moral aid they afford to swell the circulation of papers devoted to light, frivolous and pernicious romances. A year ago, Henry Ward Beecher was induced by Mr. Bonner, publisher of the Ledger, to write a novel, for which he paid an enormous price; not because the novel was worth the money, either in a printed volume or when dramatized and acted upon the stage, but for the prestige it would give the paper, and the increase of its circulation among the religious community. This was assault number one, upon the prejudices, as Mr. Bonner no doubt considers the old puritanical views, that still linger among evangelical people on the subject of novel reading. The experiment was successful, and now comes assault number two. A dozen talented and pious divines, of various denominations, are engaged to write a series of "true stories," to be published alongside the other stories of the Ledger, thus giving the weight of bishops and doctors to raise the religious reputation of the paper, and secure for its novels the same wide circulation it gives in return to their own evangelical articles. Doubtless Drs. Tyng and Vinton, and the rest, believe they shall gain more for the cause of Christ by thus obtaining access to the readers of the Ledger, than they will give to the cause of novels by this virtual endorsement. We do not question their motives, but we believe the bargain is an unequal one, and that religion will lose by it more than it gains.

We do not think it hardly fair to give only two names of the "twelve" bishops and D. D.'s which Mr. Bonner has secured to write "stories" for his paper. We give them all below, copied from Zion's Herald, which publishes Bonner's advertisement. We wonder if each is paid in the princely manner it is said Mr. Beecher was for his leadership into the Ledger. Report says Bonner paid him $30,000. If each of the twelve bishops and D. D.'s is paid a like sum it will cost their employer heavy. "Thirty" is a remarkable number. Some eighteen hundred years ago, a person higher in office than this list can boast, was engaged to do an act for "thirty pieces of silver;" and we presume he thought he should promote Jesus' popularity by giving him a chance to work wonders for his deliverance, while he himself would get a handsome sum out of the Pharisees. We do not expect Mr. Bonner will pay us anything for advertising the following list of contributors to his Ledger. Here are their names:

Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, D. D.
Rev. Francis Vinton, D. D.
Rev. Howard Crosby, D. D.
Rev. John McClintock, D. D.
Rev. Thomas Armitage, D. D.
Rev. Edward Everett Hale.
Rev. Samuel Osgood, D. D.
Rev. Thomas H. Skinner, D. D.
J. Williams, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of Conn.
Rev. Leonard Bacon, D. D.
Bishop Simpson, of the Methodist Episcopal Church.
Thomas M. Clarke, D. D. LL. D., Bishop of Rhode Island.

The Prophecy of "1,335" Days.

This has been the subject of much speculation for many years; and it has been insisted on by multitudes of modern Adventists as a period that brings to the second advent of Christ. This period of 1,335 days has generally been interpreted as a symbol of years; but all attempts at finding the precise time of its beginning and end have hitherto proved abortive. The latest effort we have seen is by a believer in the millennium before the advent. We find it in The Advance, Chicago, Ill., Dec., 1868; and it has quite an ingenious phase; but like the pre-millennium Adventists the author lacks definiteness and certainty. However, he is modest, and we give his article in full, as follows:

Has It Been Fulfilled?

BY REV. WM. CARTER.

The prophet Daniel says, Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five-and-thirty days (xii. 12).

Has this been fulfilled? I do not suppose symbolical prophecy was designed to be fully understood until fulfilled. But if not to be understood when fulfilled, for what was it given? To recognize prophecy fulfilled, is to discern the signs of the times. Does our Saviour commend those who do not discern the signs of the times?

The best interpreters of prophecy, like Alexander Keith, suppose the 1,260 days or years of Daniel (time, times and a half) were fulfilled in the French Revolution, 1789–'93. In the passage where this period is first mentioned, Daniel vii., 25, we may find a clue. It is said the saints of the Most High should be given into the hand of the little horn, the papal power (as the Newtons, Keith, Barnes and others understand it), to wear them out for a time, times and dividing of time. We know that the saints of the Most High have been in the hands of the papacy and have been worn out, put to death by it, more millions than are in the United States. We know they are not now thus in his hands, and have not been our day. We can see that the judgment began to sit upon it in the French Revolution of 1789–'93, and that its power on the whole has been waning ever since. If we reckon back from this period, 1,260 years, we are brought to the time when Justinian gave the saints into his hands. In a dispute between the bishops of Rome and Constantinople as to supremacy, Justinian wrote a letter to the bishop of Rome, declaring him to be "head of all the holy churches," and saying "we hasten to subject and to unite to your holiness all the priests of the whole East." Was not this giving the saints of the Most High into the hand of papacy? This letter was dated 533. The decline of the papal power, 1,260 years from this, seems a striking fulfilment of prophecy.

Have the 1,335 days or years which it is said blessed is he that sees, the same beginning with the 1,260? It seems to me probable, because nothing is specified as to their beginning, and the period of 1,260 is a prominent one mentioned in different forms seventeen times in Daniel and Revelation. If the 1,335 have the same beginning with the 1,260, they would end about this time, 1868. As 1793 was the culmination of what had been going on several years before, when Sir Walter Scott says, "the churches were in most districts in France closed against priests and worshippers—the bells were broken and cast into cannon—and the whole ecclesiastical establishment destroyed," so 1868 is the consummation of what had for several years before been in progress. Is 1868 a year which it is blessed to see? The Advance has truly said that in our country it is "a long step toward the millennium—anarchy is to cease, and the reign of equal and just law to be inaugurated." Is it not a happy year for our land, the most blessed ever witnessed?

How in other lands? Austria, recently humbled in the dust in a war with Prussia, has found her only safety in making friends of her own people, and has dissolved the covenant of oppression with the Pope and incurred the displeasure of his Holiness by enacting civil and religious liberty for all the people. And now in Austria, but recently the most despotic of nations and most cordial supporter of the Pope, the gospel may be freely preached, and the Bible freely circulated. Is not this a year blessed to see?

In Spain, this very year, The Advance informs us that Julian Vargas, who was teaching a private school and instructing his pupils in the first principles of Christianity without the Bible or any other religious text-book, having them commit to memory portions of the Sermon on the Mount and parables, for this, was tried and sentenced to seventeen months imprisonment. What else in Spain this year? A bloodless revolution, and one of the first things proclaimed is civil and religious liberty to all the people of the land. Now Mr. Vargas writes: "I am free. I teach publicly now, not as before within closed doors for fear of the police. I have just distributed 200 Bibles and tracts. I hope soon to be able to reopen my school." Is not this a blessed year for Spain?

Many of your readers can remember the time when Great Britain and the United States were the only governments on earth that afforded the protection of the law to the preaching of the Gospel and the circulation of the Bible? In what nations now are they prohibited by law? They are scarcely worth naming. The Pope has not now a single nation under his control, scarcely a corporal's guard. And even that would leave him if permitted by France. One great burden of prophecy has been the persecuting powers—governments hostile to the kingdom of God. Now they are almost like the chaff of the summer threshing floor. Is it not blessed to have lived to see this time, whether it be the end of the thousand, three hundred, and five-and-thirty days or not? To me it looks like the end.

The author of the foregoing ingenious view has overlooked one thing, viz., the proof that "cometh to," means cometh to the end, of the days. In this respect, however, he has the company of nearly all pre-millennium Adventists. Neither class, pre or post Millenarians, seem to be able to prove this point. Whether it means cometh to the commencement of days or to their end seems not certain. Time will soon decide which. Let us all watch and pray as our Lord has commanded us.

"The Year-Day Theory."

There has been and is considerable discussion going on relating to the general method of reckoning a day as the symbol of a year in prophecy; especially, in Daniel and Revelation. The controversy has had some place in our columns, but there has not been much interest taken in it. In the Advent Herald, Boston, Mass., it seems to wax warm. Josiah Litch, who was one of the principal supporters of Wm. Miller in 1843, and a firm upholder of the "Year-day theory," has recently wholly abandoned it, and is writing strong articles against it. He thinks it is demonstrated to be erroneous by the time having all passed to which any of those periods could be stretched by the year-day view. We respect him for thus candidly confessing as an error, what has proved a mischievous thing. The definite time fixing for the second advent has brought more discredit on the advent itself than all other causes put together. The utter impossibility of fixing the date of the commencement of most of the prophetic periods, on that theory, has made the mass of believers in the advent the mere playthings of a few men, who profess to be wiser than their fellows; so that the mass of the lovers of the advent have been kept constantly agitated, and unduly excited by their professionally "wise" brethren, by getting their minds fixed on some definite point, year, month, or day, and have seemed to think of little else than "definite time." We will not judge of the motives of these leaders, but their course has wrought disaster to the sincere masses who have trusted their dates and figures, based on historical facts, as they supposed; which facts and figures, so far as they related to the advent, have all failed.

Dr. Litch believes the last bound of the periods, by the year-day theory, have all been passed; and hence candidly abandons the theory itself. Thus far he seems very triumphantly to meet his opposers, or those who hold to the old theory still. We give below one or two extracts from Dr. Litch's replies to Dr. Gunner, one of his opponents, in the Advent Herald of Dec. 29th. First, on the "2,300 days;" he says:

I cannot for one moment admit Prieswerk's remark, that "We ought not, considering the uncertainty of ancient chronology, to lay stress on calculating the exact year." My conviction is deep and settled that Daniel and Revelation are both inspired books, and their enunciations a revelation from God; that His times are exact, and designed to benefit the Church; and that he who made the revelation will give us the means of understanding it—otherwise it is no revelation. I do not ask Dr. Gunner to go back to ancient chronology to calculate the 2,300 days, or, as he will have it—years. I only ask that he carry out his own theory, that the 69 weeks were fulfilled from "the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem" to the time Christ was anointed, and said, "The time is fulfilled." If 483 years of the 2,300 were fulfilled at that time, we have only to measure 1,817 years from the beginning of Christ's ministry to the cleansing of the sanctuary; and the calculation does not at all depend on ancient chronology, but on Christ's authority for the first period; and modern chronology for the latter part of it. The vulgar chronology gives that declaration A. D. 26. Then 1817, the remaining time, will end in 1843. But allow ten years for discrepancy in chronology, and say that Christ's ministry began as late as A. D. 36, later than any chronologer claims, then 1817 years more brings us to 1853. Was the sanctuary cleansed? "No," says the Dr. but it only means that sometime or other, say in 25 years or perhaps more, it will be cleansed! Well, well. Does the Dr. really think that such an india-rubber process is really more definite, and brings the Lord's coming more certainly near than my view? Of what benefit, if such be the case, are the prophetic periods, as a rule to judge of the proximity of the advent? No, my brother, that won't do! How long after the 40 years of Numbers xiv., 34, were fulfilled, before Israel entered the promised land? Remember, that is a sacred rule, and if Daniel's periods, as you contend, are governed by it, there is no such latitude given, for forty years from the time they left Egypt they entered the land. One passover they kept in Egypt, the other in Canaan; forty years between. Stick to the rule or abandon it?

That is putting the argument pretty close home. Another extract from Dr. L.'s argument is as follows:

THE TIME, TIMES AND DIVIDING OF TIME.

I called for evidence that it had been fulfilled in 1,260 years, or that any of its equivalents had been so fulfilled. What does he give me? Why, a quotation from my Prophetic Expositions of 1842. He has done well, for I am willing to admit that it is the strongest presentation of that argument he can produce. But he rightly anticipates that I shall reply that I have changed my mind on the subject; for so I have. That argument proceeds on the assumption, at that time almost universal, that the judgment that "shall sit and they shall take away his dominion," was the judgment of God on the papacy. If that was true the argument is unanswerable, for the facts confirmed the fulfillment of the time. The only point now to be considered is this. Is that the judgment predicted? I do not believe it. The first reference to that judgment is in Dan. vii., 9–14. The Ancient of days sat on the throne, vast multitudes stood before him, "the judgment was set and the books were opened." Then a Son of man was brought before the Ancient of days and received his royal investiture.

Its next introduction is in verses 21, 22, of the same chapter: "I beheld and the same horn made war on the saints and prevailed against them; until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." If that is in the past and the saints have not yet received the judgment, nor the Son of man his kingdom, we may despair. That verses 26, 27 refer to the same events a comparison will show. In verses 21, the horn is to make war on the saints till the Ancient of days comes. In verse 26, he is to have the saints, times and laws in his hand till the time, times and dividing of time closes, when "the judgment shall sit and they shall take away his dominion," etc., "and the kingdom under the whole heavens be given to the people of the saints," etc. Will Dr. Gunner? will any one, undertake to show that this "judgment," of verse 26, is not the same as the two former? or if they cannot do that, will they undertake to show they all refer to a judgment of God on the papacy and were fulfilled 70 years ago? If they cannot do one or the other they cannot show the period fulfilled in 1798, or at any other time. Then as a period of the past and proof of the yearday theory, it is of no service and that theory fails.

Dr. Litch's present theory is, that the prophetic periods are literal-days, and the events mostly in the future. That may be true. Time will tell. In the mean time, let us all work while the day lasts, that we may be accepted of our Lord.

Literal Fulfillment of Prophecy.

Having spoken of the division of the posterity of Jacob into two nations, Judah and Israel, and the removing of the latter out of the land of Canaan, we will now return to the prophecies which relate to Judah as well as Israel. For the sins of Judah it is said, 2 Kings xxiii., 27, "And the Lord said, I will remove Judah also out of my sight, as I have removed Israel, and will cast off this city, Jerusalem, which I have chosen, and the house of which I said, My name shall be there." Again, Jer. v., 4, 14, it is said, "And I will cause them to be removed into all kingdoms of the earth, because of Manasseh, the son of Hezekiah, king of Judah, for that which he did in Jerusalem. And I will make thee to pass with thine enemies into a land which thou knowest not: for a fire is kindled in mine anger, which shall burn upon you." Also, after a statement of the wickedness of Judah, it is said, Ezek. v., 12–15, "A third part of thee shall die with pestilence, and with famine shall they be consumed in the midst of thee: and a third part shall fall by the sword round about thee; and I will scatter a third part into all the winds; and I will draw out a sword after them. Thus shall mine anger be accomplished, and I will cause my fury to rest upon them, and I will be comforted: and they shall know that I the Lord have spoken it in my zeal, when I have accomplished my fury in them. Moreover I will make thee waste, and a reproach among the nations that are round about thee, in the sight of all that pass by. So it shall be a reproach and a taunt, an instruction and an astonishment unto the nations that are round about thee, when I shall execute judgments in thee, in anger and in fury and in furious rebukes. I the Lord have spoken it." Once more, Jer. xxiv., 9, "And I will deliver them to be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth for their hurt, to be a reproach and a proverb, a taunt and a curse, in all places whither I shall drive them."

Now, we ask any man, if these prophecies have not had a literal fulfilment. Are not the Jews, for they are the nation of Judah, a standing, perpetual, and undemolishable monument of the truth of Revelation, and of the literal interpretation of prophecy? Under all the oppressions they have experienced they have still a separate existence, and a distinct nationality of character, that nothing has been able to destroy.

Why have they not been swallowed up by the changes of nations and circumstances, and been utterly consumed? Because the purpose of God was to maintain their national identity; which purpose was expressed thousands of years ago, and could not possibly have been conjectured by any human foresight. The Infidel might as well attempt to convince a sane man that there is no light amidst the clear shining of the midday sun, as to attempt to do away, from the same mind, the conviction that the prophecies relating to the posterity of Jacob are a direct revelation from God: that point being settled, it settles also the truth of the gospel of Jesus Christ; for, he was a subject of the same prophecies, even to the treatment he met with from that people, and the consequent judgments upon them and Jerusalem for their sin in "cutting off Messiah."

We return again to the direct inquiry—Why have Judah and Israel not been utterly consumed? See Lev. xxvi., 43–45, "The land also shall be left of them, and shall enjoy her sabbaths, while she lieth desolate without them; and they shall accept of the punishment of their iniquity; because, even because they despised my judgments, and because their soul abhorred my statutes. And YET FOR ALL THAT," ["all" what? For all that their land "lieth desolate without them," and notwithstanding "they despised my judgments" and "abhorred my statutes"—"yet, for all that"] "when they be in the land of their enemies, I will not cast them away, neither will I abhor them, TO DESTROY THEM UTTERLY, and to break my covenant with them; for I am the Lord their God. But I will, for their sakes, remember the covenant of their ancestors, whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt in the sight of the heathen, that I might be their God: I am the Lord." Here we see clearly the purpose of God expressed; and we know that purpose has been literally accomplished.

We will now look at Deut. xxxii., 26, 27, "I said, I would scatter them into corners, I would make the remembrance of them to cease from among men: were it not that I feared the wrath of the enemy, lest their adversaries should behave themselves strangely, and lest they should say, Our hand is high, and the Lord hath not done all this." Here a reason is assigned why the remembrance of them is not to cease. Had they been utterly destroyed, and their nationality ceased, the strongest bulwark against the scoffers at revelation would have been demolished. Now they stand as a perpetual light-house to warn all travellers against the whirlpool of infidelity; and a standing monument against all the attempts of vain man to defeat the purposes of God, whether of judgment or mercy. All, all has been literally accomplished thus far; and it is the pledge of a literal fulfilment of whatever God has spoken, which is yet in the future. "God is not a man that he should" either "lie" or deceive. Hath he spoken, and shall he not do it? Yes, verily, not one of his words will fail—all shall be fulfilled. Let the Christian then trust in God, and let the sinner become reconciled to him; for, "the mouth of the Lord hath spoken" it—"The soul that sinneth it shall die,"—not be immortal—but DIE. Death is the portion of all who are found out of Christ. Let every professed Literalist, especially, remember that. Let them acknowledge that, "the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." Yes, let the testimony of God be heard in its plain, obvious meaning, when it speaks of the end of the wicked, as well as when it speaks of his judgments on the posterity of Jacob, or any other matters relating to them. That testimony is expressed in as clear and plain language as anything can be that is spoken of Israel. See Psa. xcii., 7, "When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be destroyed forever." Also, Psa. civ., 35, "Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more. Bless thou the Lord, O my soul. Praise ye the Lord." Not always burning in the earth, nor anywhere else; but, "consumed out of the earth" and "BE NO MORE." Certainly, it is clear, their punishment is to be on the earth. See Prov. xi., 31, "Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth: much more the wicked and the sinner." Nothing can be plainer than that. The wicked are to be recompensed in the earth; but the same authority declares, chap. x., 30, "The wicked shall not inhabit the earth." What then will become of them, friend Literalist? Let the Scriptures, literally explained, tell you, "Behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall BURN THEM UP, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Malachi iv., 1. That is plain enough, and literal enough, and if any man shrinks back from the literal interpretation of such texts let him not boast of his literalism. If this is not literal, your principles of literal interpretation fail. God will "destroy both" the "soul and body" of the wicked "in hell;" and that fire is to be on this earth, for that is where the Scriptures positively affirm "the wicked and the sinner shall be recompensed."

In our next we shall notice some of the promises of restoration to Judah and Israel which seem to imply a literal gathering of a remnant of them to the same land from which they, in the persons of their ancestors, have been cast out and scattered. Not a substitution of the spiritual seed of Abraham, but the same literal seed upon whom the judgments have been so exactly and fully accomplished: they are to return to "the land wherein their "fathers have dwelt."

MORTAL RESURRECTION.

DIALOGUE CONTINUED.

A.—Well, Br. B., I'm right glad to see you again. I suppose you would like to hear more of my arguments to-night.

B.—I am happy to meet you this evening, and it would be agreeable to me to hear what you have to offer by way of further argument upon your side of the question.

A.—I've plenty of work for you. Since I saw you last, I made up my mind to haul you up by this text, "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." There you have it. I claim that text.

B.—Possibly you may give that text to me before we get through with it.

A.—I'll give you five dollars if you can prove that I am wrong. Doesn't everybody die in Adam? and won't everybody be made alive in Christ? Paul says so.

B.—Not so fast, if you please, brother; keep the dollars out of the way, and let us consider the value of the truth.

A.—I'll listen. Go on.

B.—We will go back to the sixteenth verse and read that and the verses following. "For if the dead rise not, then is Christ not raised: and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Consider those words. Do you not perceive that he refers to a class of mankind, and not to all. He specifies "those which are fallen asleep in Christ" as that class. Commencing with the twentieth verse we read, "But now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first-fruits of them that slept." That is, Christ became the first-fruits of that class whom he had just referred to as "asleep in Jesus." Permit me to ask you a question at this point: What does the term "first-fruits" mean?

A.—I see what you are driving at. But I suppose I'll have to answer. The term means, sample, pattern.

B.—Your answer is correct. Christ is the first-fruits of the resurrection of the sleeping saints: as "Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more," even thus shall it be with them.

A.—Please have a little mercy on me about that raising. Yet somehow or other I can't quite give it up.

B.—Be patient. I shall have to pour truth upon you in love, however badly it may cause you to feel. Now I will quote the twentieth, twenty-first, and twenty-second verses, and in my quoting we will not forget that they are connected with the verses which we have already noticed. "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of THEM that slept; FOR, (here come some reasons) since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead; FOR, as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

The term FOR refers us to the verse preceding, where we read of Christ as "the first-fruits." He is not the first-fruits of the wicked. The term FOR settles the matter beyond controversy, that Paul is referring solely to those who are asleep in Jesus. Christians die by reason of their connection with Adam, but they are made alive again by being in Christ. I will write the texts we have been quoting, accenting the words which are the keys of interpretation, and they will bring the whole matter to view in a blessed light.

"And if CHRIST be not raised . . . . THEY ALSO which are fallen ASLEEP IN CHRIST are perished . . . . But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the FIRST-FRUITS of THEM that slept. FOR, since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. FOR, as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

It must be evident to every candid mind that Paul has reference solely to those who are asleep in Christ.

A.—I begin to feel a little shaken. But what do you make of what follows? "But every man in his own order; Christ the first-fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming; then cometh the end." Doesn't that "end" mean the wicked?

B.—No, brother. You are plunging into difficulties deeper than before. I must here ask you another question. Do you believe that the resurrection for the evil and the good will be simultaneous?

A.—A-a-a-yes, I do. All come up mortal. Yes, all come up together.

B.—Did Christ and those who fell asleep in him have a simultaneous resurrection?

A.—Oh no.

B.—True! There is an order in the resurrection. Christ has the pre-eminence. He is the first-born from the dead. At his coming those who are sleeping IN HIM come up—not everybody. The righteous come up by themselves. "Then"—then what?—"the end." If "the end" here refers to the wicked, then it is evident they do not come up at the coming of Christ, because they are not sleeping in him. Do not forget the words, "afterward, they that are CHRIST's at his COMING."

A.—Dear me, Bro. B., I thought I had it all right. But that end troubles me yet. What do you make of it?

B.—The term has reference to the end of Christ's reign on his Father's throne.

A.—Show! That's news to me. How do you make that out?

B.—Easily: by simply referring to the context.

A.—Plague take these contexts. That's where you are forever getting the upper-hand of me. Well, go on. Let's have the whole truth.

B.—Let us read the context. We will assume that the term "end" includes all the wicked. We now desire to have Paul answer the question, When will the "end" come? Listen to his answer: "Then cometh the end, WHEN he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; WHEN he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power. (FOR, he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.)" Can you not see that Paul does not have the end come until all this work has been accomplished. The last enemy, death, is destroyed, when the saints are delivered from death. By your theory, you have all the wicked who are enemies, destroyed after the last enemy, death, is destroyed. How does that appear? It does not seem very clear to me.

A.—O, I must give it up. But do tell me what you make of that "end?"

B.—I will give you informatien upon the point briefly at this time, but I trust that you may see its force and acknowledge its truthfulness, because I have not my words but those of inspired men to sustain it.

The prophet David said, "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool."

When Christ was about to ascend into heaven, he said to his disciples, "all power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." He ascended into heaven and sat down on his Father's throne, and is the Priest-King after the order of Melchisedec. He must reign till he hath all enemies put under his feet. Then he delivers up the kingdom to God, that God may be all in all. Then the Son is subject to his Father, and in that subordinate position takes the throne of his father David.

A.—Really, that looks like the truth.

B.—With the facts alluded to in our minds, let us read the twenty-fourth verse and the verses following to the twenty-eighth inclusive. This gives a glory to Christ which many of the readers of Paul overlook. But I see that it is time for me to bid you adieu.

A.—Well, brother, I own up that you have the best of it. I'm wrong once more. I want to show you other texts when we meet again. Good-night. From ANASTASIS.

SECTARIANISM AND THE AGES TO COME.

FROM GEO. W. DENNY.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., Dec., 1868.

BR. STORRS: When about fifteen years ago I came out of the Congregational church, (having seen that there was more truth somewhere else than I had been able to obtain during the twelve years of my stay among them), I embraced the doctrine of the sleep of the dead, the destruction of the wicked, the coming of the Lord, etc. At that time the idea obtained in my mind that I had arrived at and obtained all wisdom and knowledge to be obtained from God's word; and that the so-called Advent people were certainly the people Job speaks of, and that wisdom would die with them. Job xii., 2, 3.

Of course, I rejoiced much in, to me, our new found truths: I looked upon my former brethren as bigoted sectarians, and in next to midnight darkness. At that time I had not the slightest conception that I was as great a bigot and sectarian as they were; and that the only difference was, I had got a little more truth than they had. This I afterward found was true of the people called Adventists, as a body. Ever since then I have been watching myself and the Advent people, and trying to divest myself of sectarianism, and to be a learner in the school of Christ. Well, I have learned, as the great President Dwight, of Yale College, once said, when near his end, "With all my learning," said he, "the greatest thing I ever learned is, that in the sight of God I am a fool still." And so I say, that as a religious people we may be, probably are, possessed of more truth than other Christians; but at the same time our limited knowledge, when laid beside God's great plans and purposes concerning this world and the ages to come, in His eyes we are fools still. How can we come to any other conclusion, when we see professed Bible expositors not only willing, but anxious to tie up, or confine, all the great God's bountiful, glorious, benevolent purposes to this short age? And this anxiety has become so acute, and this (if I may use the expression) narrow, contracted sensitiveness has become so certain, that many a good man whose heart has been enlarged while reading God's prophets, concerning the ages to come, and hinting his faith in God's great plan and purposes, has been, and is made to feel the sting of this narrow, contracted sectarianism, which finds vent in unchristian and harsh expressions toward those who will think and read for themselves, and having read will speak. O, sectarianism, what hast thou done? Thou hast killed the prophets, and stoned them that are sent unto the church. Thou hast sat in the temple of God and drank up the blood of the martyrs of Jesus! Thou hast grappled with Reformers of every age, and thy weapons are the passions of men. Thou has killed the Son of God, and no doubt will pursue the church to the end of this age, but no further. Then truth crushed to the earth will rise again. The eternal years of God are hers. But sectarianism, wounded, will writhe with pain, and die amid her worshippers.

Your article on the ages to come pleased me much. It certainly is very clearly stated in the Scriptures of truth as being a more blessed age than this. And it is a glorious and blessed thought that we may all be actors in the restitution of all things. Then the vail will be taken away. Sectarianism be no more. And if we can be bearers of a purified Gospel then, I say, and let all the people say, Amen.

Paul spoke of the ages to come. Why not we? The prophets are full of good news for the future. The lion and the lamb shall lie down together. The desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose, and the thirsty land shall become springs of water.

STILL WE HAVE TO DEFER articles intended to appear last week, as also several for this week. Help us to be patient. We do the best we can with all. Keep writing; but do write plain, if you wish your communications to be printed.

FROM ELD. S. L. WALTER.

BUNKER HILL, ILL., Dec. 26, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I have been preaching in this place to those of like precious faith and a few others who come to hear. I have opportunities of talking to some about the gospel of life only in Christ, the LIFE-GIVER; and that sinning souls die, as the word of the Lord saith. The announcement of the death penalty appears to fall on the ears of sinners as the sentence of death does on the ears of the convict from the mouth of the earthly judge. It shuts out all hope of continued life, and he is terror-stricken at the thought, I shall not be. I have had them ask, "What! not live again?" That takes away all hope in the future, and shows the value of the present time to secure life.

I have given away all the "Campaign" tracts. I tried to give them to such as will read, and believe that some seed has fallen in good ground.

I have not been much from home for about three months; partly from the weather, but more particularly from want of the means to live, I could not go without providing for my household, as that would have been to have "denied the faith," and "become worse than an infidel." So I went to work by the day in order to make home comfortable, so that I could resume the work of presenting the truth of Life only in Christ, without embarrassment as to my family in my absence. Most of the brethren have done well, and some times more than I thought they ought. I have no fault to find with the church; they are but few in the various places where we preach, and not able to sustain a preacher; but they have hearts large enough, if their purses were. The Lord bless and prosper them.

I shall leave home after New Year's day; and visit the church in Shelby, Fulton and I think La Salle counties; also, Springfield in this State. I should like to have more of the "Campaign Documents." I hope the good work will go on, and means will not be wanting to print enough to meet the demand. I expect to get some help for the Campaign Documents. I wish we could get them into every house. I know they would uproot and overturn the foundation of the dogma of immortal soulism, and bring fully to light the glorious gospel of Life only to them that are in Christ. Those only are in him who have been "baptised by the one Spirit into one body," which is Christ. "If any man be in Christ he is a new creature;" he is not "living after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Paul says, "For ye are all one in Christ Jesus." Gal. iii., 28, Who are the all referred to? See verse 24. Those brought "unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith." Verse 26, "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." These texts show that to be in Christ, we must believe into him. So the sinner cannot be in him; hence, cannot live again in Christ, because he has nothing but an earthly nature; therefore tends to earth and decomposition in death. We cannot live again without we "through the Spirit do mortify the deed of the body," or flesh. Then we live; not those in the flesh, but those "who are baptised by one Spirit into one body," which is "Christ." "For in him (Christ) dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. And ye are complete (or perfect) in him," (Christ); not in Adam. No, "Them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." "The dead in Christ shall rise first;" (and not the wicked after them), but "we which are alive, and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

I am in hopes of doing more for the HERALD this year, than ever before. I do not see that the being of God is liable to be set aside because the spirit-devil is annihilated by the unerring word. Paul says, God "left not himself without witness, in that he did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness." The good that God doeth is a witness that God is. Again he says, "that invisible things of him (God) from the creation of the world are clearly seen;" how? "being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse: because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God." Without revelation man knows God, or that there is a God; wise and omnipotent; that designed our earth and heaven, and brought it, and all that inhabit it, into being. It cannot be said, that good is God, because goodness is one of his perfections or names. If man did not violate the moral or physical laws, there would be no evil of any kind. Hence there need be no fear of our parting with our God, whose name and nature is "Love."

FROM WM. G. OCOBOCK.

AUBURN, N. Y., Dec. 21, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I still feel a strong interest in the HERALD OF LIFE. It is the best paper I ever read, take it altogether. Some of the views it advocates I have long believed, and some I have learned from you and the brethren, especially "Life only through Christ," which makes that doctrine all plain. The doctrine of the yearly feast, called the Lord's Supper, I believed and advocated long before the HERALD was thought of; and I am glad so many see the simple truth; it is so plain I wonder all of our brethren do not see it. But so it is, we do not all see eye to eye; but, praise the Lord, we can all love Christ, our life, and love his appearing.

As you have given your age and experience in life, I feel interested in it, especially since 1840; for I remember your visit to Auburn a few years before, when you came to lecture on the sin of slavery. Brother, do you remember that the Methodists locked their house against you? I was the sexton at that time. Another brother and myself opened it for you.

But to return to 1840. Soon after you came to Albany you published your creed on a card. Well, do I remember how it astonished your anti-slavery brethren here. But I must pass those days by. Soon after the foregoing you startled the brethren still more by sending your famous "SIX SERMONS." I got them, read them, and believed them; and the Advent doctrine soon followed. This I only embraced, of all the anti-slavery brethren in Auburn. I know of none that went with you, any further than 1840, but myself. Because I embraced the views of the Six Sermons and the Advent of our Lord, I was cited to appear before the great court of the M. E. church, to answer for my sin in believing God's word for myself; but I told them I should not be there. They met and concluded to invite me to withdraw. I granted their request.

Well, what more? I have simply to say that your position is my position; your view of church organization is mine, and has been since I came out of bondage; but, alas, how mady have returned from their washing to wallow in the mire. Well, brother, hold on, and I will try to do the same until our journey shall end.

FROM W. H. WHITMAN.

GALESBURG, ILLS., December 1868.

DEAR READERS OF THE HERALD: We feel that we have been going through a trial on account of our faith; and we feel grateful to our heavenly Father that we are accounted worthy to suffer shame and reproach for His truth. Our great desire is to live so that our LIFE-GIVER will redeem us from this mortal state, and give us an inheritance in the kingdom of God, among the blood washed throng. O, what a blessed thought. Come Eord Jesus: Come quickly, and make up thy jewels. We sympathize with those who have to suffer reproach from the self styled churches. We do not intend to contend with individuals who can do no better than to attack men's private characters in order to stop the study of Bible truths, instead of fairly meeting arguments as they should. No, thank our adorable Master, we have a greater work to do. We must hold up the truth before our dying fellow mortals. Brethren, we stand in relation to this generation as Noah did to the Ante-deluvians, in one sense. We must show them their erros. We must show the fallacy of their arguments on natural immortality. We must show them that unless they beleive that Jesus is the annointed One—the Son of the living God—and confess him before men, they have never been begotten by God. Matt. xvi., 19; John v., 1. We must show them that all the promises are in Christ; and without a living union with him they will perish as the beasts. Oh, what a lovely character the Bible gives to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob's God. He is a God of love truly. Jesus's bosem flowed with love; he gave himself for us. Brethren he set us a pattern. He come in contact with the clergy of his day; told them of their errors, and persuaded them to turn from them. But it only brought their wrath and curses upon His innocent head. We can point to Jesus as the model man. He is our pattern; when reviled, he reviled not again. Now we have error to combat. We have a wicked world, and sleeping chueches to contend with. We must put on the whole armor of God in order to stand in the evil day. For if we do our duty toward God, and fellow mortals, we will have to come in contact with the clergy of our day, and we will have to suffer shame and reproach by their hands; there is no evading it that we can see. O how we need to pray for the Spirit of him who saised up Jesus from the dead in order to go forward and do our duty in this wicked world. But let us all go forward. Let uf work while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work.

LIBERTY WETHERBEE, Bangor, Me., writes: O how cheering are the weekly visits of the HERALD OF LIFE. It does seem to me that it grows better and better; and sometimes I am led to exclaim, O my Lord, why is it that the people do not see and believe the truth as it is in Christ? Well, the Lord is truly at work in Kenduskeag and Glenburn. These are new places in which I have been laboring. Two years ago there was not a believer, in those places, in the truth of Christ. Now there are some thirty, and many of them have taken a decided stand, and the Lord is at work wonderfully in Kenduskeag. Our enemies feel bad; but they find it is hard to kick against the pricks. Also here in Bangor there are many that wish to hear our views on the Life plan. Some have come out decidedly on the Life theme.

ARE YOU IN EARNEST.

It is Christ's work that you are doing. He has intrusted it to you. You profess to love your Master. Are you really in earnest in your work for him?

It is a great work. Perishing souls are committed to your trust; a work shared by God himself; a work for the promotion of which Christ died; in which angels are interested. O thou, who in God's providence art called to work in the field with prophets apostles, and martyrs, with the angels, with Jesus, with the Father himself—art thou in earnest?

The time is short. Your own life is uncertain. Your pupil is mortal. Youth ripens into manhood. The golden opportunity is fleeting. "The night cometh." Are you in earnest?

Fellow-teacher, face your own conscience, and remembering that God is looking on your work, ask yourself the question, Am I in earnest?

THE DAY-STAR.

Beautiful Star of Day, arise,
Show thy glory in the skies;
Let us now salvation see,
Life and immortality.

Beautiful star of hope, appear,
We know thy coming draweth near,
For we long have looked for thee,
Star of immortality.

Beautiful star, O, quickly come,
And take thy faithful children home;
Long they've wished to see thy face,
Give them now this heavenly grace.

Ben Hollander's "New Year's."

BY PERLE LEY.

"How are you, father and mother, and all?"

What a rush of the gusty storm swept in at the door along with the cheery voice.

"Benny's come! Benny's come!" shouted half a dozen voices, and half a dozen pairs of hands gave glad confirmation to the statement. It was wonderful how the dark, dreary room lightened and brightened in a minute. Let us see how many there were to be glad of the new comer's arrival.

Over in the corner, near the small fireplace, sat a crippled father, with one stiffened leg extended upon a low footstool. Certainly a pleasant smile suddenly kindled his drawn features, and was answered by a glad gleam on the face of the sad-eyed, patient, bowed mother, who held a great, rollicking, year-old baby. Then there were Ned and Johnny, who were eight-year old twins; Maggie and Elsie, the brown and blue-eyed sisters; Billy, a rogue of a curly-pate, and a Maltese pussy, who manifested her pleasure in her own fashion, by purring with all her might, on the bit of rug before the stove.

Yes, everybody in the room was evidently glad to see Ben, and the boy's face was radiant with his responding gladness as he shut out the breath of the storm, and turned to catch up the nearest child in his strong arms.

Poor Ben! what a comfort he was to all of them, and yet his life was very barren of joy for himself, save that which grew from his noble, generous, Christian heart. People pitied him every day as they saw him in the streets, with his low-stooped figure, his unnaturally broad shoulders, and the great hump between them, for Ben was deformed. In his little boyhood he had fallen from a high window, and from that time, though sturdiness and strength came to him, beauty and grace were forever withdrawn until "mortality shall put on immortality." I say they had withdrawn, but they had not left his eyes, which were Ben's only physical beauty. These were large, and dark, and brilliant, though perhaps, indeed, if he had not carried so great and good a heart within him, even his eyes would not have glowed with so steady a light.

But Ben bore his lot with the spirit of Christ, and the loveliness that was denied his outer man seemed to have become the portion of his soul in double measure.

Within the last few years his father had become hopelessly lamed and disabled from labor by rheumatism, and the support of the large family now fell largely upon this oldest boy.

He took up his burden right bravely, and struggled on hopefully.

To day was New Year's day. The time had been when it had been a little fete day with the family, but poverty is a very practical teacher, and no toy or candy bag had, as yet, found out the little children, in the low, dark tenement that gave them a shelter. Besides, a pitiless storm had been falling all day, so they had been kept closely within doors, and could not have even the pitiful excitement of a holiday look at the toy-shop windows.

How much Ben had been thinking of them all at home, while the long hours of the stormy day had found him sorting coal, down in the cold warehouse of rich Mr. Prince. Not a very exhilarating fashion of celebrating New Year's, certainly. Ben's heart felt sort of swollen and unreconciled as he went through the snow in the morning, but by-and-by, up through the disappointment, little blooms of heart's-ease began to thrust themselves. A bright idea dawned him upon that quite reconciled him to the dreary labor.

The dear, kind fellow had been devising some little surprises for them all at home. Poor ones they were, to be sure, but up where the true reckonings are made, they were counted great gifts.

"Well, mother," said the boy, as he took the baby from her aching arms, when he had taken off his patched and grimy overcoat, "you are dreadfully tired, I know."

"Father, how's the lame leg to-night. I've thought of you all, lots, to-day. I did think Mr. Prince might have given all us hands a holiday, seeing it's New Year's. But he is always thinking about money, you know, and said, when Sam Skinner went to ask for us all, if we might have a rest, "Oh, yes, if you can afford to lose a day's wages out of the week. 'Work before play.' No work no pay. So we all turned to it again, since we couldn't any of us bear to lose a part of our wages.

"But evening did come at last, and I decided that if I must work on a holiday, it shouldn't be for nothing, and we would have an extra good supper.

"Father, don't you think you'd relish a bit of a nice steak? And, mother, here's going to be a cup of the very finest chalk of tea. Here, Ned, hold the baby, while I stir the fire and put on the tea-kettle."

Ben's enthusiasm stirred the zeal of Maggie and Elsie, who in a trice had the old fashioned square table in the middle of the room, and gained the mother's consent that it be spread with the clean, but worn linen table cloth, sole remaining representative of the stores of shining linen that had, in the prosperous days, been the pride of Mrs. Hollander's housekeeping heart.

Oh! how the small dark kitchen glowed with the love-light and cheer that this plain hump-backed boy brought with him! Benny was a perfect cordial to the whole house. His mother's heart blessed him all the day long.

"My dear boy," she said, "how tired you must be," as the boy's active fingers turned the steak to keep it from burning.

"Well, some, mother, but I'm going to have a good time, nevertheless. Girls, is the bread ready? You'll find a nice slice of butter on the closet shelf.

"Now for the salt and pepper, and then there's as nice a steak as a king need eat.

"Elsie, set up the chairs. Father, I'll help your lame leg, shan't I?

"Now, all sit down, and I will hold the baby. I want you to have the comfort of one uninterrupted supper, mother."

So they all sat down. Rather a crowded table-full to be sure, but such a happy set of boys and girls as one doesn't see every day.

Is it any wonder that the tears stood in Benny's eyes, while his father asked the blessing? I think not.

"Oh! oh! oh!" said Billy, who happened to be the first one who turned over his plate. "Oh my! here's a pair of reins! Where did they come from? Red, white and blue! Splendid! Now I can play horse like everything! Say, Ben, I know you put 'em there. You're always doing nice things."

By this time there was a grand chorus of exclamations, for every child's plate had been remembered, and Benny was overwhelmed with such an avalanche of gratitude and boisterous joy as might have crushed him, had he not possessed very strong shoulders.

Ned and Johnny, who always wanted just the same thing, had each a bright red pair of mittens, and Elsie and Maggie found joy to their hearts in the possession of two paper dolls, with lovely frocks and hats and cloaks.

To complete the matter, Ben produced from his pocket a bright tin rattle, which he succeeded at last in inserting between the baby's fat fingers.

Oh, what a splendid, splendid supper! and what a glorious time, every way, they did have that evening. I never can begin to tell you, so I won't try.

After the supper dishes were washed Ben had a bag of chestnuts to roast, that he, thoughtful brother that he always was, had been saving up for weeks against this very evening. Then came an ear of corn to pop in the iron spider, and poor papa taught his aching nerves and muscles patience for the pleasure of his children, while Ben led off in a hearty game of "Blind Man's Buff."

After all was done, came the quiet family prayers, and the "Our Father" and "Now I lay me" of the children, followed by the soft, sweet child slumbers, that come alike to rich and poor.

Oh, rare Ben Hollander! God bless you. Many a hoary millionnaire has not learned the first lesson of Christly living, as have you, in your few, young, overburdened years!

Verily, "the cup of cold water, in the name of a disciple, shall in nowise lose its reward."

Redemption and Restitution.

BY R. CADWELL.

We will consider still further the character, condition, and nature of the creature subjected, in order to know to whom it applies, for the same will be the creature delivered. And though the Christian, as a natural creature in his natural state, occupies the same condition as others, and together constitute a party, Dr. Bloomfield calls the "world," (God's creatures), "which waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God." And if this was the Christian itself, it would be waiting our manifestation, or its own manifestation.

But, again, verse 20; "For the world (God's creatures), was subject to imperfection, corruption and misery (not by any will of its own, i. e., not as a punishment for any voluntary demerits of the sufferers, but) by him who thus subjected it; yet with a hope (on their part), that this very creation (i. e., these his creatures), will be delivered from the bondage of corruption, and admitted to the glorious liberty which pertains to the children of God."

I have given this quotation of the Dr.'s found in the reply, because it gives the meaning of "ktisis," and defines the party subjected in words better than I could do it. Whether the above description be true or false, as to character, it can never do away the identity of condition and nature of the creature subjected and delivered, except by converting the deliverance into a redemption; and if this is the hope of the creation (God's creatures subjected), I hope it may appear to be true or false by this inquiry. Can this be done by a fair interpretation? What real reason does exist (except from the creeds of men), for construing the verses in this way? Surely a restitution is not unreasonable or improbable. Does not the Bible teach that man in a natural state in the flesh, and everything created (at least the most improbable of them), will exist, and occupy the mode of living assigned to them, after Jesus is manifested from heaven, and the righteous dead are raised? If not, we might renounce the idea, and allow these verses give us but little definite of anything. Did Paul anticipate a deliverance of the creature creation that had gone into the death state? and that would go there from the time it was made subject to vanity till the time of their redemption from it? We say, No. Or did he mean the subjecting law would be taken off of the living creature, creation (involving suffering, pain and death under it), should be taken off? We say, unhesitatingly, this is what he meant. But to consider the Christian as standing in the common condition of the race, does not seem to harmonize at all. Even if we consider only a very small point, as we have, and may again. It is said, the creature shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption. Now why add any more? Is it not an established fact that they who attain to the resurrection from the dead (the state of corruption), are the children of God? If, then, they were sons, when delivered from the bondage of corruption—and such they were in fact—what is that into which they were admitted? Was it anything that constituted them children of God in them*selves*? For it was "of," or belonged to them as such. That is, they were sons before they could be heirs, or enjoy the freed inheritance—the creature's deliverance. This difficulty of speech is all right, and easily got along with by getting the Bible idea. Christ, heirs the saints, glorious redemption; it is a glorious freedom, but it belongs to God's first-born. Yet it is the Christian's glorious hope, though this glorious redemption and liberty pertains to the Son of God; so the creatures' freedom belongs to the children of God, yet it is the creatures' hope, notwithstanding. Has the natural, mortal creature a hope of deliverance in these verses, 20, 21? If not, the natural, animal creature is never delivered. This seems to be a direct contradiction of the apostle's words, and it does not help the difficulty much to suppose it spoken of the Christian as a natural animal subjected. For, as such, he has no deliverance, not even a redemption, except as to identity of person. For the natural and animal is never resurrected.

This may not be plain enough, and we add here a note—it will cover Rom. viii., 13, 14.

Vs. 22, 23. The first thing that arrests attention here is the confidential convictions of faith—blessed is such a faith as this, together with the life history of the race—in the stirring expression, "we know," and the extent of meaning of the word, "creation," the "creature," or every creature, and the contrast of different ideas, reasons given, to arrive at the different objects the apostle had in his mind, which can alone determine the point.

The next most prominent thing that strikes the mind is the throbs and throes of creation on one side, as the proof of the birth and the deliverance, the creatures, and all nature's hope. And on the other, "we ourselves" travail in pain for the redemption—the Christian's more glorious hope, which to those who "suffer with him that we may be also glorified together," is the proof of its certainty, 1 Pet. iv. 13.

The hope here is a natural hope; it is not the Christian's hope—an incorruptible life. It is nature's hope—the world's animated nature, and the globe itself.

What do you mean by nature? I embrace the whole named. What is meant by animated nature and world? The soul of every living thing, and those whose breath is in the hands of God. These—the race (I am now speaking of—others are involved), were subjected in hope. This God-ordained hope of the realm of nature and the race, made near four thousand years before the ministration of the Spirit and of faith, by the word of the gospel, could not make God's ordinance of none effect, but it came in to fulfil it. Hence they prove each other. The gospel, ministered by Paul, may open the way of life to the natural creature, man—the Christian's hope—a better hope, which they who believe are chosen out of the world, and are not of the world, and though in the flesh, do not war after the flesh; and the manner it is treated by others may consign them over to death. Yet nature's realm continues, and the natural creature, man right on, and will, under the sufferings of the present time, being ministered unto, and to be ministered to, and to be delivered (when Jesus comes), or be destroyed. Which will it be? Let God be true and every man a liar.—Com. neg. and Bible proof. No 6.

And we ask reason, we appeal to revelation, how the sufferings of the human race could affect man and not involve or affect all of the animated creation—"every living soul"—and those whose breath is in his hands—all mankind? And, also, how this can be done, and outward nature's struggles (expressed by the same words), the whole system of things, the earth, the globe, and IT be no proof, also, of its deliverance—its universal hope? We say, and revelation says, it cannot be done. And shall we strike out of this list the more important item, the natural creature, man, as such, and say his pains and struggles indicate no certain God-ordained hope for him? God forbid it. And I am glad, from my inmost soul, that all heaven forbids it. And with the poet I say (with some alteration); "Ah! see the hour will come, the glorious morn, the creature's birth, of heaven and earth; awak'ning nature hears the restoring word, and starts to life in every heightened form, till freed forever from pain and death."

Or, to represent the thing (the opposite doctrine), right, absurd as it is, the apostle stands in the visions of faith, on the extreme verge of this age, with one full fixed eye on the subsiding agonies of birth, of the living race, and the other on the Christian's fulfilled hope; leaving unbelief, which standing (far behind him), with clouded eye on the same, and with firm, self-partial power to crush and destroy, cries out (and now continues to cry, to the saddening of all hearts), "The mother and child are both dead!" but allows the earth to escape its uncharitable, selfish grasp unscathed! This is a greater triumph than the devil achieved over the "living soul" in Eden. This is the triumph of unbelief. Whose is it? Ah! whose? Alg. No. 3, the natural creature and its birth-hope.

Is it not reasonable? Can it be avoided that the apostle had this creature hope in his mind all along, and used words in harmony with it in the preceding verses, and now marks more fully the distinction between the Christian's and the creature's hope, vs. 19, 20, 21? Again, shall we strike out the natural creature, subjected in hope, and attempt to fill the picture by putting into it the Christian? Then the hope of the 20th verse will be identical with the hope of the "we," ourselves, in verse 23. This being the case, what shall we do with the hope of the whole groaning creation on the other side? Or have they no hope? It would be very difficult to make this hope good for anything, if it is not for all the things to which it is applied. Would it not be more wise to allow the hope of the subjected creature to be the hope with which ourselves is contrasted, v. 23, not another to which they are applied?

I here make a quotation found in the reply—"God has subjected the race to vanity in hope, because the creature (creation—the world, the earth), itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God."

"The deliverance here spoken of, seems to be of the earth, or globe itsel." This does not seem warranted by the verse, or by the words used, or by the context.

Here are a number of words, indicating, as a whole, many things subjected, but the "deliverance here seems to be spoken of the earth, or globe itself," implying the Christian, (with whom the contrast is made) is delivered.

Well, these are two most glorious truths; but there is one very important one, besides many others not told or brought to view, in this quotation. And there seems to be a difficulty (and no good reason existing) why they are omitted. This important thing (with God's assistance) we will try to place before the inquiring mind; point out, and thus remove the difficulty. Here is the first point, of two points: Man, as a living, natural soul, finds his existence in this world under a bondage of suffering. The two chief points of this proposition is Bible, confirmed by human experience. Let no anxious mind read any farther, or drop this point and the second, till this creature and its character are settled clearly in his own mind, in the light of the Holy Scriptures. This being done, (here is the second point of four). This living, natural soul (that now is, and will be) was subjected to vanity in hope (by reason of him who subjected it, that this very same creature) shall itself also be delivered, which was subjected. To make the points definite, I have used some of my own language as the sense. The two first points have been confirmed. To one of the two following, our friends, perhaps, and all allow, that the reason is on the part of God; and not for any crime or "demerit" on the part of the creature, of coming into the world, or being in it, under such circumstances of subjected suffering. And this determines the character of the creature subjected, and to be delivered also.

The last point, "itself, also shall be delivered." Is the Apostle to be credited and believed as far as his statement is confirmed by the predictions of the prophets, and the plan, and purpose of God? That this natural soul (or, the nations in the flesh of the above character) shall be delivered from this bondage state of suffering, is clearly set forth. And so is a confirmation of the Apostle's words as may be seen in these articles.

The difficulty considered and removed. If God had provided no better deliverance, or hope for the natural, living soul, than is here determined, it would be only a natural deliverance, or a deliverance merely of the living of the race from this subjected state, and is (in itself considered) the extent of the deliverance or salvation. But while this purpose remains fixed in the Divine will, God is presenting to the natural man, (while living) eternal life, as an object of hope, which changes the condition of those to whom it is addressed; but the living, natural creature, as such, continues, as I have said, to be delivered according to God's purpose, (and as taught of Paul in Rom. viii., 20) from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of, or pertaining to) the children of God. Amen and amen.

If "itself also," is designed to make the contrast between other things "delivered," and those who are led by the Spirit of God, it will apply to this creature, and the other things, involved (as I once thought) as to the earth itself. And with far better reasons and more joyous hopes.

The reason for doing this, as stated, is, it would destroy all distinction between the children of God and others, whom the Apostle says, "shall die," because they "lived after the flesh." The reason here assigned amounts to something like this; it is necessary to cut off the natural creature's hope, verses 20, 22, by introducing into the verses 20, 21, those who are led by the Spirit of God, because sinners will die!

I do not directly see what this has to do with the Apostle's argument. Were sinners, as such, subjected? By no means: and if they were subjected as natural creatures will their dying cheat other natural creatures not dead, out of their hope, when Jesus comes? Besides, something is supposed to be in the text, that requires this interpretation not proved to be there, or liable to be embraced in it. We have introduced this quotation to place it in contrast with previous ideas given in verses 20, 21, with no design to argue the point. There cannot be any reasonable doubt, that the every creature, of verse 22, is the creature of the verses. 19, 20, 21. If this be so, and I see no possible way to avoid it, then we have the Apostle's positive declaration, it shall be delivered.

Therefore, the hope of the creature creation is not a vain hope, or false labor in birth. Are these pains a false conception birth? and true only on the other side? Are not the pains of nature the voice of God in nature? Are not maternal pains birth as true, and considered stronger than Christian sufferings are of the certainty of the Christian hope? Away then with this cursed unbelief, that makes Paul's words mean something, one way, and nothing on the most important things (to be relied upon), in another direction.

Again, is earth all that "they" are contrasted with? Does not the "they" show there were other human beings on the other side? some who had not the fruits of the Spirit? and some who had not so much as heard of the Spirit? Paul would not contrast himself with the material earth.

Besides, if the sinner, as a natural creature, with other natural creatures in common on the earth, also, were subjected to vanity in hope, (and the sinner, as presented in Rom. viii. 13, has since become a sinner in refusing to be led by the Spirit of God, and God has since declared the soul that sinneth shall die, and the wages of sin is death, and if dead are not, and if alive at the manifestation will be destroyed, shall his unbelief make the faithfulness of God of none effect? By no means. For how then shall Christ and the saints judge or rule the world? How shall he govern or rule among the nations, and rebuke strong nations afar off (and as the result of which), will beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks, and shall learn war no more?

Then shall the fruit of the earth be excellent and comely to the escaped of Israel. They shall not labor in vain, or bring forth for trouble; for they are the redeemed of the Lord, and their offspring with them. Can some one tell me how these survived the destruction of the natural creature's hope?—for man subjected in the flesh?

Are not a portion of these nations living under the state of subjected suffering, and will be, when the sons of God will be revealed? They are of the creature subjected to vanity in hope, and many of them have not so much as heard of the spirit, much less, have intelligently refused it. Will they continue, and their natural hope be fulfilled when Christ is revealed? We are forced to this conclusion, whether Paul preached the doctrine or not, in these verses; and are sure these will be delivered from the sufferings of this present time.

The two texts quoted in the reply, Mark xvi., 15; Col. i., 23, to prove the extent of the meaning of the world "ktisis" does not meet the case, in these verses. For the context shows it extends to more than mankind. And they who quote these texts allow it extends to the earth itself; and that it will be delivered also.

From James H. Jacobs.

THOUGHTS ON A SICK BED.

Freetown, N. Y., Dec. 3, 1868.

Br. Storrs: I have been forcibly reminded that I am living in a world of disappointment and pain; for I have been sick four weeks with cold and fever, and now I have the inflammatory rheumatism.

I think that some sicken and die forever; while some sicken and die, but they shall not see death forever; thank God: and I ask all to remember me at the throne of grace, that I may be one, if I die, who will not be dead forever. Jesus said of one whom he loved, who was sick, this sickness is not unto death, (forever). But Jesus said, he was dead; therefore it seems to me that Jesus demonstrated to the world that he had power to break the bands of death, and will retain that power, so that death cannot hold us forever, if we are his.

He will not give life in the future world with no other prospect than to suffer and die. Sin entered our world, and death by sin. The cause of death is sin. This judgment to death was passed (not is to be) upon all men. Now, if there was no promise of life by a resurrection from the dead, the death that all men die would be an eternal damnation; it would make all be as though they had not been. It is believed by all who admit that man is mortal, that there can be no salvation without resurrection; and if no resurrection, what then? Why, eternal damnation, or an eternal extinction of life and being. Then there can be punishment without a resurrection. Thank God, the resurrection saves from damnation: saves all who get it from the punishment of the wicked; therefore the resurrection never was nor ever will be to punish a single person of Adam's posterity. Adam brought sin into the world, and the consequence is misery and death. But Adam cannot bring sin into the future world; and if sin cannot get into the future by a resurrection from the dead, then we may believe, with all our hearts, that there shall be no more sorrow or pain or death after the resurrection. Thank God.

If the wages of sin is death, in the present tense, then the death for sin is now in the world, and all that have died in their sins have the wages for sin; and all that are living now, who neglect the provisions God has made, and die in their sins, will have received the wages for their sins. All this happens in this world; for, the wicked shall be paid where they do their work. Psa. lxii., 12; Gen. xix., 28. Abraham looked toward Sodom and what did he see? Why, that the wicked get their pay where they do their work. I might give a host of Scripture for proof, but I am to sick too think much.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged, as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower; or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 300 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny. — Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—" the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

Bible vs. Tradition; in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

Non-Immortality of the Soul.

BY DR. J. K. FINLEY.

We will now take leave of the account of man's creation, and trace the inspired narrative of what may be termed the Edenic dispensation, and here, if I am not greatly mistaken, we shall find positive proof of the entire mortality of our race.

After Adam's creation, he was placed in the garden of Eden, to take care of it, and a helpmeet was given him in the person of Eve, or, as we would express it, God gave him a wife. Hitherto they were what God had pronounced them in connection with all the rest of his creatures, “good,” that is, they were good in the sense of a perfect adaptation to the ends for which they were created. They were innocent in the sight of God, for up to this time no means had been afforded them, by which to test their characters, and as no law had been given them, they of course had not sinned, for Sin is transgression of law, either positively, or by any want of conformity to its requirements.

The next thing we meet with in the narrative is that they were put upon probation, or trial, and as intimated above, the account of this probation will go very far toward deciding the question of their immortality. Undoubtedly the object proposed for their attainment, if they sustained the trial, was something they did not then possess, as well as something desirable, and of great excellence in itself. According to the views held by the destructionists, man was created mortal, but when placed in the garden of Eden he became a probationer for immortality. His future existence was made to depend upon the result of a moral probation to be determined by himself, or explicitly, he became a candidate for immortality, and of course was raised above the condition of necessary mortality. The commonly received or orthodox theory is that man at his creation was endowed with immortality, and that this attribute was as inherently natural to him, as his reason, or his moral sense, or any other of his natural attributes. His trial or probation was not for immortality, which would be an absurdity if we are naturally immortal, but to decide whether he should continue to retain, what he already possessed, viz.: spiritual life, and in addition to this obtain eternal happiness. Let us now examine the record and see which of these views is sustained by its relations.

Genesis ii., 17; “And the Lord God commanded the man saying: of every tree of the garden thou mayst freely eat, but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest of it thou shalt surely die.” Chapter iii., 19: “In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken, for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return. And the Lord God said: Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil: and now lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life, and live forever. therefore, the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken; so he drove out the man, and he placed at the east of the garden of Eden cherubims and a flaming sword which turned every way to keep the way of the tree of life.”

How plain and simple is the record and how careful ought we to be not to add to, or detract from its true meaning. Yet in order to sustain the common theory and thus mystify where no mystery can possibly exist, a vast amount of labor has been expended to prove that death and life as here used and indeed all the words used in the Bible, have a secondary meaning; and from the contemptuous manner in which their primary meanings are spoken of by orthodox writers and preachers in their sermons, one would suppose it was looked upon as a mark of weakness to believe they ever were used except in a secondary or figurative sense. Now we do not know a writer among the destructionists, or indeed, any person of common sense, who ever disputed the fact, that they are often used in the Bible and in all other writings in a tropical sense. It would be the height of folly for any person to deny the fact; and in our opinion it is equally foolish to insinuate or affirm that in simple narratives they are ever employed in any other than their primary signification. It is the easiest thing in the world for an intelligent reader to decide when they are used in one way or the other. When our Saviour says, “I am the door,” or “I am the vine, ye are the branches,” no person would be so silly as to suppose he meant that He was literally a door or a vine, and His disciples literal branches, but that these were metaphors, by which he intended to convey important truth. So when our Saviour says “Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood, ye have no life in you,” we see at once that the language is figurative. Who can but see that Job uses strong figures when he says: “He hath taken me by the neck and shaken me to pieces; He cleaveth my reins asunder.” The whole book of Job is highly dramatic, and is full of figures and metaphors, and no person who ever read it had any suspicion of their being anything else.

A very intelligent Christian gentleman said to me some time ago, “There is not a single passage in the whole Bible that gives any support to your views;” and upon my repeating some passages teaching our doctrine in the most literal manner possible, “Oh!” said he, “Properly interpreted they are all against you.” Properly interpreted! The question naturally arises, Why interpret them at all? Do they need any interpretation, or even any explanation, to bring them within the reach of the most common mind? I affirm, without the fear of successful contradiction, that there are not any plainer texts, any words more grammatically simple, or more easily understood in the whole Bible, or in any book that was ever written. You will not find a child ten years old, of common mental capacity, that cannot at once understand them in their primary signification; and it is one of the universally admitted rules governing Bible exegesis, that the presumption is always in favor of the primary or ordinary sense of words. We need not, however, appeal to the rules of exegesis or of rhetoric to teach us that the ordinary or common meaning of words is the proper meaning, unless positive proof to the contrary exists. Without this well-established rule, language would be useless to express ideas, as any one can see, and the Bible ceases to be a revelation at all. Discard this rule and the result will follow, that the Edenic narrative, so full of unspeakable importance to every human being, constituting, in fact, the key to the whole Bible, will be resolved, as indeed has been done by some professedly orthodox, into a mere allegory or unmeaning myth. But we are told that words change their meanings and that, therefore, the words used at the present time do not always have the meaning they had originally when the Bible was written. This is an argument that if it had not been written down, one would suppose must have been brought out on the spur of the moment, and without reflection. If it were true, it would strike at the very root or foundation of the whole Bible as a revelation. Besides those who advance it must not forget that we have the same words in which the Bible was written, and know their original meanings. The only support that such an objection can possibly have, is in relation to living languages, which have, in a few instances, changed their definite meanings, but even then there is commonly no trouble in ascertaining their exact meaning; for instance, the word prevent literally means to go before, and it is so understood sometimes in the Bible, although it is generally used now-a-days in the sense of to hinder. But the meaning of terms and words in the Hebrew and Greek have not changed their meanings from that which they originally possessed, because they have been for many centuries what are termed dead languages, that is, are not in common use, or spoken languages, and thus liable to change. Hence the dead languages are often resorted to in writings when it is important that the meaning attached to them should always be understood to be invariably and unchangeably the same.

Again we are told that the records of the Old Testament are explained by future developments in the New Testament. This is undoubtedly the case in relation to plans and prophecies running through the whole history of time down to the winding up of the present age or dispensation. But such an objection as this cannot possibly have any weight in the narrations of accomplished acts or facts. The acts or facts, such as the creation of man, do not require any future development, unless we agree with the Darwinian theory, that man was originally a monkey or something else, and by successive developments became a man. It is saying but little for the intelligence of a people when such arguments are presented to them; but we know when they have no facts, no “thus saith the Lord” to sustain their theories, they will grasp at fancies, no matter how ridiculous they may be, just as drowning men are said to “catch at straws.” Let us now resume our examination of the Edenic narrative.

“In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die,” literally, “dying thou shalt die.” How can it be possible to understand this to mean anything else than that Adam should cease to live? But the orthodox theory does, however, pervert it, to suit a human creed, by saying that death here includes three kinds of death—temporal, or of the body, spiritual, or loss of spiritual life, and eternal death; which last is no death at all, but consists in being kept alive and consigned to the unspeakable torments of hell throughout the never ending ages of eternity. There is but one shade of obscurity in the passage, and that applies to the orthodox as well as to the Destructionists, and that is in the expression “in the day,” etc. They therefore assume, for there is no intimation of it given in the narrative, that spiritual death took place in that day, and therefore it was a part of the penalty. But a little reflection ought to show the absurdity of this assumption; for spiritual death is nothing more than to become a sinner, “dead in trespasses and sins.” Would any person suppose from the account given us, that the penalty was “in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt be a sinner?” Why! this is the very thing for which the penalty was threatened, becoming a sinner by disobeying God's command. But as Adam did not die on that very day, neither go into endless misery on that day, the meaning evidently is, that condemnation to the death specified should take place on that day.

Now I appeal to the common sense of everybody to say, what was the death threatened? What could it be but the extinction of life, ceasing to live? Could God explain it more explicitly than he has done in pronouncing the executive sentence. “Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return.” Theories ought always to harmonize with facts; now what is the fact as testified by the experience of the whole human race? All have died and will continue to die until the final consummation of all things. Animals and vegetables had died, and man, made from the same corruptible materials, was told if he transgressed he should also die. Adam could not possibly have understood it to have meant anything but that. How could he or how can we suspect the existence of any latent sense, or any figurative meaning concealed under such plain, everyday expressions? And I would inquire again of the reader, what it was that was to die? Could the pronoun “thou” have reference to anything else than the living soul or creature, Adam in his totality? If it was only the body, while something else called the soul or spirit did not die, and if this soul was a part of the man, and as orthodoxy affirms, the real man himself, and the body was only the temporary case or house in which the real man dwelt, then I do not hesitate to affirm that the penalty for his sin never was inflicted, and the serpent told the truth. If a culprit was sentenced to receive forty lashes, would the sentence be carried out by inflicting the lashes upon the walls of the cell or house in which he was confined? And is there not as much common sense to justify it as in the other case? Now it is manifest that if the “thou” threatened with death did die, as both the words and facts show it did, then the heathenish fable of an immortal soul constituting a part of the “thou,” is blown to the winds, and falls back to the its pagan paternity by whom it was originally derived from, the “Father of lies,” who said, “Ye shall not surely die.”

The Wicked Dead Not in the Plan of Redemption.

FROM ELD. WILLIAM STUART.

Br. Storrs: During the last year I have stood on entirely neutral ground respecting the doctrine of the non-reliving of the finally impenitent; contenting myself with preaching the plan of redemption through Christ; and at the same time admitting that I could see no way by which they could be affected by that plan; because there are only two men who are peculiarly sons of God, and they are both representative men, namely, Adam the first and Adam the second. Now, as the law of God must be like himself, unchangeable and eternal, and as the first Adam violated his law, thus incurring the penalty, which was death, he could never be reached by any future law; because God could not make another law to contravene the first. Hence Paul says, in Gal. iii., 21, “For if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily, righteousness would have been by the law.” But this being impossible, the race is concluded under sin, namely, the law of sin, which ultimates in death, which death must be eternal, unless God can find a man who will honor and keep inviolate his holy law. And no man begotten after the law of the carnal commandment can do this. But as God made the first Adam different from the rest of the race, and gave him to have life in himself, that is, animal life, so it will be just in God to make the second Adam different from the rest of the race also. And if, after subjecting him to a trial, he succeeds in keeping the law in every particular, he certainly will have a right to eternal life.

Now, as the children were partakers of flesh and blood, he also took part of the same. Heb. ii., 14. That is, he was begotten by the almighty power of God, yet receiving his flesh and blood by the blood of his mother, in the same manner as other children. Thus being made of a woman under the law, with all a man's affections and responsibilities, subject to all his trials and temptations, being tempted in all points like as we are, and yet without sin. For he was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners. He did no sin, neither was there guile found in his mouth; thus keeping inviolate every particular of the law of God.

Now, as the first Adam would have received eternal life if he had been obedient, so the second Adam has a right to eternal life because of his perfect obedience.

But the Captain of our salvation had to be made perfect through sufferings. Heb. ii., 10. But after presenting him as holy and without sin, it is natural that we should inquire in what did his imperfection consist? We answer, not in his thought, word, or deed, but in his being partaker with us in a mortal and perishing nature. And while in this nature he was not prepared to bring many sons unto glory. But he willingly laid down his life for the race; that is, by the grace of God he tasted death for every man; not that he suffered the penalty of the law for us, because God claims the prerogative of forgiving our sins and blotting out our iniquities. But Jesus, by laying down his animal life, was prepared to receive the reward of his obedience. Hence, he was declared to be the Son of God with power by his resurrection from the dead. And as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself also. John v., 26. And as Adam was the generator with power to communicate animal life, so likewise Jesus, the second Adam, became the regenerator with power to communicate immortal life to all those who comply with the conditions of the gospel. Hence Peter i., 3, says, Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again to a hope of life (Syriac), by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. And as a child cannot be born before it is begotten, we can see how necessary it is for us to get into Christ. Because there is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit. For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made us free from the law of sin and death.

We can now see how beautifully the first promise spans the entire arch of man's probation. The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head. Jesus, the spotless Lamb of God, slain, in the purpose of his Father, from the beginning of the ages, typified by the innocent blood offered in faith by Abel, and, under the law, by the mercy seat, which was sprinkled with the blood of sacrifice, while the cherubims which o'ershadowed it, pointed the perishing of the former dispensation forward, and the other backward to the same great offering for sin, which, being accepted of God, opened up the way for all to come and have life. But Jesus says, “Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life:” that is, man will not receive him. “But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God:” that is, by exercising repentance toward God, and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, the regenerator, who presents his own sacrifice in behalf of the penitent, being thus reconciled to God by the blood of the everlasting covenant, and receiving the spirit of adoption whereby we are enabled to call God our Father. But we are only children in embryo. But if faithful we shall be born into the kingdom. For John says, Beloved, now are ye the sons of God; but it doth not yet appear what we shall be. But we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. For if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by or because of his Spirit that dwelleth in you. Thus we see that life from the dead is the only hope of the Christian. And if the impenitent are ever raised from the dead, it must be outside of this plan.

But it is contended that John v., 28, 29, teaches the re-living of all that have ever lived. But when we read Genesis vi., 13, And God said unto Noah, “The end of all flesh is come;” I believe that then and there it did come, and God will never again disturb them.

So it may be said also of the Sodomites, who suffered the vengeance of eternal fire. And if wrath “to the uttermost” came upon the Jews who rejected Christ, that must be the end of them also, because nothing can be beyond the uttermost; for the apostle says, Lust, when it is conceived, bringeth forth sin, and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death. Hence he that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him. John iii., 36.

Now as the word rendered graves in John v., 29, is not Hades (but en tois mnemeiois, in the tombs), may it not have some reference to the rich man who died and lifted up his eyes in torments, as it is allowed that the rich man is figurative of the Jewish people and priesthood, who were not literally, but morally, dead? May it not mean that the gospel would prove a savor of life unto life to some of them, and of death unto death to others?

Be that as it may, it cannot mean the indiscriminate restoration to life of the race, because it is said of some that “God hath visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish.” Isa. xxvi., 14.

But as it is plainly taught that all the people of God shall be delivered from the power of the grave, let us, with the apostles, labor, “if by any means we may attain unto the resurrection out from among the dead;” not to a mortal life, as some would have us believe; because Paul says it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. Let us all endeavor to follow the truth, and be sanctified through it, so that whether we live or die we may be the Lord's.

We have thus briefly presented the two representative sons of God. First, the death man; then the life man; first, the generator, then the regenerator, or the generator again.

Let us endeavor to have our conversation in heaven, from whence also we look for the Lord Jesus, who shall change our vile bodies, and fashion them like unto his own most glorious body, when he comes to be glorified in his saints. Let us follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord. Yours, in the hope of eternal life through Jesus Christ.

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 9, 1869.

The Covenants:

Jew.—You spoke of a supplementary covenant or law, at our last; what are we to understand by your remarks?

Paul.—I mean the promise of the land, which we claim for our client, was made to him by an everlasting covenant without any conditions; and the supplementary or added covenant under which you claim was made after, and contains conditions, and under no consideration can such a covenant invalidate the title of our client. “Brethren, I speak after the manner of men. Now this I affirm, that a covenant engagement previously ratified by God, the law issued four hundred and thirty years afterward does not annul so as to invalidate the promise. For if the inheritance be by law, it is no longer of promise; but God graciously gave it to Abraham by promise.” Gal. iii., 17, 18. Here we are contending for the same thing: the only difference seems to be, who are the true heirs, and under which covenant do we inherit? If under the law, then Jesus and his followers fail in the promise, and it is of none effect. If under the promise, then you fail to receive it under the law. Now that God did give this lands to my client by an everlasting covenant is evident from the language, “For all the land which thou seest will I give to thee and to thy seed forever.” Gen. xiii., 15.

And the promises of God and his gracious gifts and callings are not things to be repented of. Rom. xi. And to show that there is no mistake in the seed for whom we claim, we have run down our title from Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Judah, through that line—down through Salmon, Boaz, Obed, Jesse to David.

Here we have the promise revived to David when he says, “Although my house be not so with God: yet He hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure; for this is all my salvation, and all my desire.” 2 Sam. xxiii., 5.

Again we start on our testimony through Solomon in the line of Kings Rehoboam, Abia, Asa to Osias, down through that line until we come to Zorobabel. Then through the same line to Achim; and then down to Joseph, in the line of Kings. Then start again in Zorobabel on the other line down to Naum; then through Amos, Mattathias, Joseph, Melchi, Levi, Matthat, Heli and Mary, Christ, in either line. And Jesus came according to the promise, to receive the kingdom.

Jew.—Do you affirm that this Jesus came to receive the kingdom.

G.—Yes, Zacharias so prophesied, being full of the Holy Spirit, saying, “Blessed be the Lord God of Israel: because He hath visited and wrought redemption for his people: and has raised a horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David; . . . to perform the mercy with our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant, the oath which he swore to Abraham our father; that He would grant unto us, that we being delivered out of the hand of our enemies, might serve him without fear.” Luke i., 72–74.

“And in those days came John the Baptist preaching in the wilderness of Judea, and saying, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.” Matt. iii., 1, 2.

“From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.” Matt. iv., 17. The proclamation was made, saying, “Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord: peace in heaven and glory in the highest.

“And some of the Pharisees from among the multitude said unto him, Master, rebuke thy disciples. And he answered and said unto them, I tell you that, if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out. And when he was come near the city (of Judah's Jerusalem) He wept over it, saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things unto thy peace; but now they are hid from thine eyes.” (This gospel of the kingdom must be preached for a witness, then shall the end come). “For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee . . because thou knowest not the time of thy visitation.” Luke xix.

C.—If I understand you, you believe Jesus came to receive the kingdom and inheritance at his first advent; and the Jews rejected him and refused to receive him for their king.

G.—So I understand the Scriptures. Pilate asked the question of Jesus, “Art thou a King then?” Jesus answered, thou sayest I am a King. For this cause came I into the world: and for this cause was I born, that I may testify to the truth.” John xviii., 37. “Every one who makes himself a King speaks against Cæsar.” So say the Jews. Pilate saith, “behold your King.” “Shall I crucify your King?” And Peter said unto them, “Ye killed the Prince of life; whom God raised from the dead, of which we are witnesses.” Acts iii., 15.

Now God always claimed a title in this land, and never let it pass out of his hand. So we read in Lev. xxv., 23. “The land shall not be sold forever; for the land is mine; for ye are strangers and sojourners with me.” “Brethren, I mean to say, that the heir, as long as he is a child differeth nothing from a servant, though he be Lord of all; but is under tutors until the time appointed by his father . . . but when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son . . . to redeem those under law, that we might receive the adoption of sons. And because ye are sons (of God) God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying Abba, Father. So that thou art no more a servant, but a son: and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ.”

Now we are ready for our heirship. Jesus Christ, as the seed of Abraham, and as the Son of David, came according to the line in the flesh, and according to the promise at the time appointed. God sent forth the Son, the heir of the vineyard, supposing they would receive and reverence him; but they cried, “This is the heir; come let us kill him and seize on the inheritance. So they cast him out of the vineyard and killed him. What then will the Lord of the vineyard do to them? He will come and destroy these husbandmen and give the vineyard to others . . . They said, God forbid. But he looked at them and said, what then is this that is written, The stone (Christ) which the builders rejected (these Jews were going to build up a kingdom without Christ being the head) the same is become the head of the corner. Whoever falleth on that stone will be dashed in pieces: but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder.” . . . “For they knew that he had spoken this parable against them.” Luke xx. We notice there is no royalty spoken of here as being taken away from them; but the [vineyard; and the people to whom the vineyard is given are a people who have (Christ) the stone for the corner. Christ was the seed of David according to the flesh; and came to receive the inheritance through David; but being put to death in the flesh, the title of David ceases there, as Christ had no issue in the flesh; but he is raised by the power of God, “and declared to be the Son of God with power, as to the spirit of holiness by his resurrection of the dead.” Rom. i., 3, 4

C.—Does the title through David and Abraham cease with the death of Christ?

G.—We answer Yes. If Christ died without any seed the title goes back again into the hands of God, the Sovereign; and Jesus, being his Son by the resurrection of the dead. “If children, also heirs. Heirs indeed of God, and joint heirs of Christ.” Rom. 8., 17.

Here then is no break in our title; for the time in which it was lost in Christ during his death it reverted back again to his Father, and then is reserved for his Son as his coming and kingdom. But more when we meet again. Jabob Grim.

Philadelphia, Jan., 1869.

The Time of Trouble.

Dan. xii., 1; Matt. xxiv., 21.

Br. Storrs: In the generally accepted interpretation of these two passages, a great discrepancy appears, which I cannot reconcile while allowing the fulfilment of the passage in Matth. xxiv., 21, to be in the past. This I have never heard called in question; but I now propose to do so, and give my reasons for it.

The disciples of Christ had asked him concerning the signs of his coming, and of the end of world. After relating to them many things that should come upon the earth, upon nations, and upon his followers, and that the gospel should be preached throughout all the world for a witness unto all nations, he calls their attention to the Abomination of Desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, and says, “For there shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time; no, nor ever shall be.”

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the Herald of Life, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2 20 a year or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All Letters relating to the Herald of Life, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658, New York

All names of persons, sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters confusion and delay are inevitable.

This has ever been accepted, I believe, by those who are looking for the second coming of our Lord, as having had its fulfilment many centuries in the past.

Let us compare Scripture with Scripture, and find our conclusions. In Dan. xii., 1, we read: "And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great Prince which standeth for the children of thy people; and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time," etc. The fulfilment of this, all must, and do admit, will be in the future. This time of trouble was to eclipse all that ever preceded it. Now what does the Saviour say? That this time of trouble, of which he speaks, will be such as never was before, neither will ever be again. We are therefore driven to the conclusion that the Saviour referred to the same time as declared in Dan. xii., 1; therefore the setting up of the abomination of Desolation, with the great tribulation, is yet in the future.

What reason is there for believing that this will yet be in the future? In this very same verse in Daniel, "At that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book."

This declaration, with the standing up of Michael, is believed to be the personal coming of Christ, and the deliverance of his saints. After a careful consideration of the language of the text, with other prophecies in the Bible, I must dissent from any such application of this passage. I fail to find any authority in the Bible for allowing, that Michael, the great prince, is identical with Christ.

It is Daniel's people that are to be delivered, at this time, out of this trouble; nor does it follow that in this deliverance they are made immortal, or that the book in which their names are found, is the "Book of Life."

Whatever may be the meaning of verse 2, in this connection, I am inclined to believe that verse 3 refers to saints immortalized and the glories of Christ. Your Bro. searching for truth. D. J. Ellsworth.

Windsor, Conn., Dec., 1868.

Note by the Editor.—Some twenty years ago we gave our reasons for rejecting the idea that Michael and Christ are identical. To our mind, they are clearly two distinct persons. If we get time we may revise our article on that subject and republish it by-and-by. Whoever reads Dan. x., 5–14, and believes that Daniel saw in vision the coming Messiah, and heard him say, "Michael, one of the chief princes came to help me," must be satisfied that the two are distinct persons. Jude tells us Michael is "the archangel," verse 9; that is, he is the chief or head angel; and Paul informs us "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel," etc.; clearly, we think, making a distinction between the two; and besides, Christ is not an angel in nature; for, "He took not on him the nature of angels:" an expression unmeaning if he was already an angel; and Paul saith, "Being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they: for unto which of the angels said he [God], at any time, Thou art my Son?" etc. Heb. i., 4, 5, and ii., 16.

These testimonies settle the fact that Michael is an angel, and Christ is not; hence the standing up of Michael is not the same as the advent of Christ, however near it may approximate that event. But, as we said, we may elaborate this subject hereafter, if thought best.

Geo. Bangs, Danville, P. Q., writes: Some weeks since an unknown friend kindly sent me your pamphlet, "Life from the Dead," also the tract, "The Judgment, What is it and Where is it?" I have read these with much care and deep interest, as my attention had been called to the subject of which they treat some eighteen months ago by the reading of certain Scriptures, and I had been searching on that point without the aid of any publications or any ministering brother to converse with, who feels inclined to look at the subject with candor. Those pamphlets seemed to be just the thing, and just in time to help me on in the investigation on this point. But I wish to read more of your works on the subject. Please send me the "Six Sermons"—"The Watch Tower"—"Doom of the Ungodly"—"The Essential Baptism"—"Letter to a Clergyman, by Dr. Finley"—and "Moral Depravity;" also the "Herald of Life." I I feel impatient to get the reading of the above-named publications.

Note by the Editor.—The above shows the importance of a greater effort to scatter the "Campaign Documents," and our other pamphlets and tracts. This case is only one of many, of similar character, showing the good that has been done by the thousands of our works that have been scattered in the past few months. Let the work be continued and enlarged.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 20, 1869.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not. he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

A Curious Position.

A subscriber is disposed to discontinue our paper, and speaks as follows:

> The non-resurrection of the wicked dead, and the unconsciousness of men in death, are precious truths with you and me. . . . You deny the personality of the devil. I disbelieve in a "spirit"-devil. I do not believe that he is a fallen angel by any means. According to my present light I must believe in one of two things: Either there is a personal devil, or God is the author of evil.

We are sorry to lose our good brother's patronage; but we are puzzled to know how his personal devil differs from ours. His is "not a fallen angel," nor "a spirit-devil." What more have we ever said? We certainly believe in a personal devil; yea, a multitude of them; their "name is legion." We go a little further in our belief of "a personal devil" than he seems to. We believe if there were no personal devils in the shape of men, real, personal sinners, there would be no moral "evil" at all. God is not "the author of" such "evil." Men are moral agents, subjects of law; and are the sole authors of moral evil, so far as we have any knowledge from revelation. Heathenism, papacy, and a corrupted Christianity have their "spirit-devils"—"fallen angels," once "holy in heaven"—with "cloven feet, horns, and pitchforks;" but God's revelation is barren of such devils. Such devils as Judas, and satans as Peter are plenty everywhere, in the churches and out.

If our scrupulous Br. can tell us what sort of a devil he believes in, and in what respect he differs from the personal devils we admit exist all around us, "who go about seeking whom they may devour," we would be glad to know. If he will visit New York City he can see a half million of devils almost any day, with the "cloven foot" fairly in sight. True, they do not like to be called devils, and try to hide themselves, which is said to be a peculiarity of devils. They do not wish you to think there are any devils except "spirit-devils," who are invisible; and if they can make sure of deceiving you in that way, they will soon "devour" you, if you have anything to be devoured.

However, our curious Br. need not come to New York to find "personal devils;" they are plenty anywhere, even up in good old Vermont, where he lives. We know it is so, for we once lived up there ourself. Our Br. says,

> "Mark you, I do not saddle sin or evil on the devil. The devil had no power to introduce sin or evil into the world."

Your devil, then, is not of much use in the realm of evil. We believe a devil did introduce "sin into the world, and death by sin;" and that devil or satan was Adam—an adversary to his Maker and God. "Adam was not deceived," says Paul, 1 Tim. ii., 14. He sinned with his eyes open to the consequences. He became the first personal devil or satan. He was the first adversary of which the Bible gives us any account. The animal man became the satan, the devil. The animal nature has been the devil and satan from that day to this. Personified, it is "The prince of the power of the air; the spirit [mind, temper, disposition], that now worketh in the children of disobedience;" which Paul declares is the spirit "Wherein, in time past, ye walked according to the course of this world." Eph. ii., 2; and Paul adds, "Among whom, also, we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh [that is our personal devil], fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind [imaginations], and were by nature [the animal nature, or Adamic nature], children of wrath [subjected to a hopeless death], even as others," who are still living after "the course of this world," in the unrestrained desires of the flesh—the animal, or Adamic nature.

Such was, and such is, the personal devil and satan, and it is omnipresent with all men, unless resisted and overcome by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

"Resurrection of the Wicked."

Some weeks since we noticed the fact that Rev. L. C. Collins had been excluded from the Methodist E. Church Conference in Minnesota, for holding views adverse to that church on the end of the wicked. He has, if we are not mistaken, connected himself with the Advent Conference in the West; and while believing in the final destruction of the wicked holds to their resurrection to be judged and die again. He has written a somewhat lengthy article in defence of that position, and against their non-resurrection, which has appeared in the Voice of the West, Jan. 5th and 12th. Br. Collins has written in an excellent spirit, as the following introductory remarks will show. He says:

> I have lately been reading with much interest several works kindly sent me by friends, in favor of the non-resurrection of the wicked. I can but accord to the works I have read, a truly Christian spirit, and admire the earnest manner in which they advocate their peculiar views. Neither do I regard these views as containing in themselves anything that should sunder the bonds of Christian fellowship between brethren looking for the soon coming of the Master, and agreeing in the great question of the final and utter destruction of all the wicked in the end. It seems so desirable that all interested in the Advent cause should keep the unity of the Spirit, and show to both the church and the world the true spirit of Christian toleration, that I feel all minor views, or side issues, should be held in abeyance, and presented so in love as never to create the least dissensions among those who should in the fullest sense be brethren. To me, at least, the above views put up no bar to the fellowship of those who entertain them. It rather seems to me that it is their great kindness of heart, their benevolence toward the sinning race, that has inclined them to their present view. But I am unable to adopt it as the doctrine of the Scriptures.

We admire and love this spirit, and trust it may continue in him and be abundantly multiplied in us all. We may differ with him in the idea of this question being of "minor" importance. It may appear so to him; and for this we do not blame him in his infancy in the Life views. We have passed through the stage of the question he is now in, years ago, and fully understand the process in the mind on this subject. The question must be banished from our thoughts altogether—which is not easy to accomplish—or, sooner or later, the mind will be compelled to adopt the non-resurrection theory; otherwise, it will gradually retire toward the "orthodox" idea of immortality for all, and wind up in endless woe or universal salvation.

Br. Collins' argument in defence of a universal resurrection has in it no new point, and and hence nothing that needs a review beyond what has appeared again and again in the Herald of Life, and can be found in the works we have issued in pamphlets and tracts. At a future time we may notice some of his points, and hope it will be done in a no less kind spirit than he has manifested.

More Progress: Truth Onward.

We are glad to record another step in the progress of the Voice of the West. Two weeks ago we noticed one step in the way of advance; and now we have another exceeding hopeful move.

It seems Rev. A. A. Phelps, Rochester, N. Y., has some misgivings on the question of the judgment. It is not many months since this brother withdrew from the "Free Methodists," having advanced beyond them on the second advent and the end of the wicked questions. In the last Voice of the West he seems to be shaken as to the judgment not taking place till after the resurrection. At least, that appears to be his real difficulty. In the reply to his suggestions, the Voice makes the following statement:

> We think the character of "the judgment" has been misunderstood. To most minds it is connected with the idea of a trial, witnesses on both sides, and all the paraphernalia of a court. This is a mistake Men are on trial now. They will not be tried over again in the last day. Before their death, their cases are decided one way or the other—either written in, or blotted out of the Lamb's Book of Life. The judgment of the last day is the manifestation and execution of decisions; and not for trial.

How much does this differ from the position we have occupied for years? They have been tried before "the last day," for "Men are on trial now," saith the Voice. What else does it say? "They will not be tried over again in the last day," saith the Voice. Now that is just what we have said for twelve or fifteen years past. Further, the Voice says, "The judgment of the last day is the manifestation and execution of decisions; and not for trial." All right again. Just what we have all along maintained for years. Certainly we have hope that Br. Himes and ourself will soon be at one on the Life view.

We may yet differ as to the manner of "the manifestation" of the previous "decisions." We believe the resurrection itself "is the manifestation and execution." The justification or acquittal of the righteous is manifested by their deliverance from the dominion of death: "the gates of hades" do "not prevail against" them. He who has "the keys" unlocks those "gates," and they come forth from death's dominion. Thus the words of Jesus, "I will raise him up at the last day," are fulfilled.

The wicked dead are manifested by being left in hades, by having no deliverance; death holds its dominion over them; and thus the words of inspiration are fulfilled, They "shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on them;" for, "the man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead." See John iii., 36, and Prov. xxi., 16. The Voice admits that "many of" their "ablest minds" are exercised" on the subject of Br. Phelps' inquiry. We are glad to hear it; for it is an omen of progress. Thinking minds, if willing to learn, will inevitably come to the conclusion, at length, that life from the dead is a peculiarity, and belongs only to "the body of Christ"—the "church." All others having no connection with the Life power "remain in the congregation of the dead." To this conclusion we were driven near fifteen years since, and not a misgiving have we had on the question since.

Queries.

1. Is the burning day of Malachi, Peter, and Christ Matth. xiii., in his parable of the wheat and tares, literal or figurative?
2. Does it not transpire in close approximation to Christ's second coming?
3. If so, who are "the left of the nations," to reign over?
4. Is there more than one harvest time?
5. Does not the parable of the sheep and goats, Matth. xxv., 31, preclude probation afterward?
6. Does not the reaping of the earth, Rev. xiv., 14–20 transpire at the same time?

Truth is harmonious; but the above texts seem to conflict with the age to come theory. Please notice these queries as you deem proper. A. B.

Response to the Foregoing Queries.

In order to answer this first query understandingly, it is necessary to learn how Moses and the prophets used the terms "fire and burning" in relation to judgments predicted. We will begin with one of the strongest expressions of God, by Moses, Deut. xxxii., speaking of the judgments He would send on the nation of Israel if they left His service and served other gods, He says, "I will hide my face from them . . . they have moved me to jealousy with that which is not God . . . I will provoke them to anger with a foolish nation: for a fire is kindled in mine anger, and it shall burn to the lowest hell, and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains." It is added, "I said, I would scatter them into corners," etc.

This language is very sweeping; yet we suppose few advent or life believers doubt but the prophecy had its fulfilment in the judgments on the Jews, their city and land, when God overthrew their nation, desolated their land, and scattered them among the nations. The language, then, while it expressed a most fearful literal judgment, is highly figurative.

Compare this with Ezk. xxii., where the Lord reproaches Israel with their wickedness, and says, verse 31, "Therefore have I poured out mine indignation upon them; I have consumed them with the fire of my wrath," etc. Again, Ezk. xx., 47, 48, "Behold I will kindle a fire in thee . . . the flaming flame shall not be quenched, and all faces from the south to the north shall be burned therein: and all flesh shall see that I the Lord have kindled it: it shall not be quenched."

Was this flame and fire literal? Was it not a highly figurative form of expressing a terrible judgment? Nor did that judgment destroy all the people; for "all flesh" was to see that the Lord "kindled it."

If we turn to Isa. xxxiv., we find like language, with an additional item, thus, "For my sword shall be bathed in heaven: behold it shall come down upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse to judgment. The sword of the Lord is filled with blood . . . . For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompenses for the controversy of Zion. And the streams thereof shall be turned into pitch . . . the land thereof shall become burning pitch; it shall not be quenched night nor day; the smoke thereof shall go up forever;" etc.

It is impossible to conceive of stronger language to express a literal and terrible judgment than is here employed. But we all know, though the land of Idumea was terribly overthrown, the language has not had a literal fulfilment by the use of a "sword bathed in heaven," nor have we any reason for the idea that literal smoke is still going up from that land, and that a literal "burning" was what was intended; but a literal and awfully desolating judgment fell upon the land, and it has been in ruins ever since.

It were easy to multiply examples; but these are sufficient to show that the Hebrews expressed terribly destructive judgments by burning and fire, because of their destroying effects; and probably drawing the figure from the literal overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah by fire; which was "an ensample to such as should after live ungodly:" not of the manner in which sinners would be cut off from life; but of their certain and irrevocable doom. As those cities were utterly destroyed, and are "suffering the vengeance of an eternal fire;" so, with equal certainty, will God make an end of the incorrigibly wicked. But even in the case of Sodom, there was a small remnant "left"—Lot's two daughters, who were none of the most virtuous, as their conduct shows; yet from them sprang two nations, viz., Moab and Ammon. See Gen. xix., 36–38. And these two nations are in existence down to the closing scenes in Daniel's prophecy. See Dan. xi., 41.

Now as to "the burning day of Malachi." While it may have reference to the final executive judgment at the end of the present age, it evidently has its first application to a judgment soon after the first advent, or the judgment on the nation of Jews for their obstinate unbelief. That it has its first location there, seems probable from the connection. It is a prophecy relating especially to that nation. God had said, in the previous chapter, "Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me; and the Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: [literally desire.] . . . But who shall abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for, he is like a refiner's fire . . . he shall purify the sons of Levi," etc. Mal. iii., 1–3.

The prophet then, after speaking in chap. iv. of the burning day, says, "Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and terrible day of the Lord: and he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children . . . lest I come and smite the earth with a curse."

Let us now turn to Luke i. Here the angel Gabriel came to Zacharias to give him information as to the birth of John, and, he says, of this son, "And many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God. And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children . . . to make ready a people prepared for the Lord." Verses 17 to 18. This seems to locate Malachi's prophecy, at least so far as a first fulfilment is concerned. We might add, after John was born, Zacharias, "filled with the Holy Ghost," said, "Thou child [John] shalt be called the prophet of the Highest: for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his way;" etc. Verse 76. John the Baptist's mission was to the Jews, and to them only. To them he said, concerning Christ, "He shall baptise you with the Holy Ghost or [Whiting's translation] with fire . . . he shall gather the wheat into his garner; but he will burn up the chaff [the proud and all that do wickedly] with unquenchable fire." Matth. iii., 12.

Thus we have a clear reference to Malachi's prophecy. It is evident the prophecy has its primary application to the Jewish nation and their proud and haughty rulers, Scribes and Pharisees. That fire and burning judgment came upon them, nationally, "to the uttermost." 1 Thess. ii., 16. Yet all the individuals composing the Jewish commonwealth were not consumed in that "burning day:" there has been "left of that nation" unto this day, but the fire has seemed to follow them into all nations where they have been scattered; though it would seem that "neither root nor branch" of their old "proud" aristocracy—the Pharisees and Lawyers—have been left, nor will such ever again possess a standing in the nation.

Now as to "Peter's burning day." That takes place at the end of this age. Not to dispute the question of literal fire being employed in it, it is not quite certain that it is as extensive as the globe. Peter is speaking especially of the destruction of the scoffers of the last day, who are scoffing at the idea of the Lord's coming; and he refers to the old world of "ungodly men;" (compare 2 Pet. ii., 5, with iii., 6, 7,) who were destroyed by water, and tells us, at the close of this age, "ungodly men" shall go into "perdition:" but strong as his language is, it does not follow, that none are "left of the nations," except the saints. It is urged, that as the ungodly of the old world were destroyed by literal water the ungodly at the end of this age will be destroyed by fire. Without disputing that point, these advocates of burning the world, literally, forget that "the heavens and the earth" that then was, before the flood, were not actually destroyed, but only the incorrigibly wicked. They forget, also, that men in the flesh and mortal were "left of the nations" then, and by them the earth was repeopled.

But perhaps it will be said, "none but the righteous were left." That remains to be proved. Noah was righteous; but where is the evidence that his sons and their wives were all righteous? Will it be said, "Because they went into the ark with their father?" So did Lot's daughters go out of Sodom with their father. Noah by faith prepared an ark to the saving of his house: but where is any thing said of the faith of his sons and their wives? or, even of his own wife? Nowhere, and they probably acted only under the influence of fear; or, at best, from the influence of paternal authority. But whatever view is taken of the subject, the fact remains, some of the inhabitants of the old world were left in the flesh, or mortal state. Then Peter's burning day does not necessarily prevent men being left in the flesh; and the prophet clearly states there will be. We might greatly enlarge here, but we must pass it till another time.

Next we take up the "burning day" spoken of by "Christ, in his parable of the wheat and tares, Matth. xiii. "This parable is, manifestly, a representation of the visible church, in its probationary state; and has nothing to do with non-professors, whether in Christendom or in heathenism. It represents "the kingdom of heaven" in its embryotic state, or state of preparation, before its full development. The tares represent false professors, hypocrites and the like. The original, rendered tares, is, literally, "bastard wheat"—that which has a resemblance to true wheat, and yet is worthless. It resembled genuine wheat so nearly that the owner of the field would not trust his servants to "root up the tares lest ye root up also the wheat with them:" showing clearly such a resemblance between the genuine and the bastard wheat that the servants were not now competent to discriminate with certainty, and so were forbidden to undertake the work of eradicating them. Can anyone suppose this applies to all sinners, whether living in Christian or heathen lands?

To our mind, it is a self-evident truth, it relates to the nominal church-professors of religion. You may have the burning literal if you please; it certainly imports a fearful judgment on false and heartless professors at the end of this (aionos) age, by which they will be utterly destroyed: we have no faith that any such will be of "the left of the nations." They have had their day of trial, and are to be "burned," or utterly cut off for their wickedness and in their wickedness.

These remarks must suffice in relation to "A. B.'s," 1st, 2d and 3d queries: 4, 5 and 6 we will notice hereafter, if the Lord permit.

In closing, however, we will remark, that false professors of religion are to be numerous in the last end of this age is evident from all the teachings of Christ and His apostles: not only the "Mother of Harlots" but her many daughters and their children; "children of the wicked one."

The Mortal Resurrection.

Dialogue Continued.

B.—Pleasant evening, this, Br. A.

A.—Yes! but I am glad that we have another evening to talk about the view I hold.

B.—Truly it is pleasant to discuss these views. We thus can learn much from each other. What have you to urge to-night to sustain your position?

A.—Well, I thought that I should stir you up a little on Rom. v., 18. "Therefore, as by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." That's a tough one for you. Ha, ha, ha.

B.—You seem to be more confident with that text than you did with the others. I would like to have you give me your ideas concerning it.

A.—I'll tell you in short order. First: the apostle says, "By the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation." That means, by Adam's sin, death was brought upon the whole of his race. Good folks and bad folks; big ones and little ones, alike die that death. Don't you see?

Second: he says, "Even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life. Nobody can prove to me that this doesn't show that everybody that dies will live again. We must live again whether we are good or bad. Cause why. You see that we don't die for our sins, but on account of Adam's, and justice must be given to all of Adam's race. The free gift comes upon all. The Lord brings all back again to where Adam was before he fell. The Lord is bound to do this. He must do it, or he won't be just. After we all get up, then the wicked must die for their own sins, and the righteous will be made immortal. That's a strong case for you. Do you think that it can be hurt any?

B.—I suppose that this is about the strongest requirement that can be urged in your favor; but I think that I may able to show you that the text is against your position: therefore I shall have to examine it first by asking you some questions. Is "justification to life" a debt which God owes to the race of Adam? or, is it a free gift?

A.—Confound it! What a fellow you are. Why, I—I—why, I suppose—botheration!

B.—Brother, do you not make a distinction between debts and gifts?

A.—I'm in the mud again. I wish M. was here to help me out.

B.—"If the blind lead the blind—"

A.—There. Hold on! Stop!

B.—Keep cool, brother. I do not want to triumph over you, for you are dear to me, for we are alike purchased by the blood of Christ. I simply want truth to be triumphant, and error to be crushed. You have not examined your position carefully, hence you are really at war with yourself. By referring to one point where your theory contradicts itself you hardly can determine where you stand. You state that we do not die for our own sins, but on account of Adam's transgression: therefore you bring in God a debtor to all of Adam's race, with a debt that cannot be cancelled, unless he gives another life to every son and daughter of Adam.

A.—Really, I have always thought so.

B.—If your view is correct, then Paul was sadly mistaken. The text, according to your view of the matter, should have been "Therefore, as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation, so God, who is indebted to all men, must restore their life."

A.—That's really the thing.

B.—To the proper text again: "Even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." Mark you: by the righteousness of Christ the free gift came upon all men. If your view is correct, then Christ's righteousness has nothing to do with the matter. As far as Adam is concerned, our own righteousness would vindicate us from his transgression and its results, as we had no hand in the matter. God's justice could bring us up without Christ's righteousness or death. This is where your view would lead. But if Christ died to redeem us from what your class call the "Adamic death," pray tell me who died or where is the sacrifice for our personal sins? These and many other questions I would like to ask; but we will look at the free gift. What is the free gift?

A.—I supposed it was the deliverance from the Adamic death for all of his race.

B.—Are you willing to abide by the declarations of the Bible concerning that gift?

A.—Certainly!

B.—Listen carefully. "Now we know that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law; that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God. Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight: for by the law is the knowledge of sin. But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets, even the righteousness of God, which is by FAITH of Jesus Christ, UNTO all and UPON all them that believe: for there is no difference; for all have sinned," [Here I must stop one moment, to call your attention to the fact that the "all" here refers simply to the believers: read those last three or four sentences fully:] "and come short of the glory of God. Being justified freely by his grace," [the same all] "through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through FAITH in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of SINS that are past, through the forbearance of God. To declare, I say, at this time his righteousness: that he might be just and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." Rom. iii., 19–26.

In the next chapter, the matter of faith is still further illustrated. In the next chapter to that, we read, "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. But not as the offence so also is the free gift: . . . . and not as it was by one that sinned so is the gift; for the judgmet was by ONE (offence) to condemnation; but the free gift is of MANY offences unto justification."

You see by this that the free gift is not a deliverance from the results of one offence, but of "many offences," even our own. Soon after comes our famous text where it is evident that the "all men" are the same "all men" referred to in Rom. iii., 21–23.

A.—I do not know but that you are right after all.

B.—Wait one moment. I have one more text to produce, which knocks your whole theory to pieces. The word in Rom. v., rendered "free-gift" is karisma, and in the next chapter in verse 23d, it occurs again. Here it is. "The gift (karisma) of God is eternal life." How does that appear to you?

A.—I give up. Yes, sir! I'm beat by the Scriptures. Pretty hard to give in, though. I feel a little riled. But I'll try to keep cool.

B.—We must never overlook the contexts, even though they may confound our theories, and confound us, too. As it is late let me conclude by summing up the matter.

The free gift of God is eternal life. "We are justified freely by the grace of God through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. He is just, and the justifier of him that believeth on Jesus. Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God.

A.—That sounds kind o' good. I have only one more text for you, and if you prove that I'm wrong there, then I'm used up.

B.—Let all error be used up as soon as possible. I desire to be always on the side of truth and to have you there with me. Farewell.

A.—Good-night.

AN EXPOSITION.

"The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished."—2 Pet. ii., 9.

DOES this text prove that all wicked men who have ever lived will be made alive when Christ comes, to be punished? Our opponents will answer, yes!

To meet our opponents, it is necessary at the outset that they should be made aware of the fact that in the original it is not written "THE day of judgment," but "A day of judgment." Thus it is written in every instance in the original where the phrase occurs, with a single exception. There have been a number of judgment days in the past. God is "the Judge of all the earth." His throne is "in the heavens, and his kingdom ruleth over all." Immediately in connection with the text we have three judgment days brought to view: one for "the angels that sinned;" one for "the old world;" and one for "Sodom and Gomorrah."

Concerning the day of judgment in Noah's time we read, "By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by which he condemned the world, and became an heir of the righteousness which is by faith." "And God said unto Noah, The end of all flesh is come before me; for the earth is filled with violence through them; and behold I will destroy them with the earth." "And the Lord said unto Noah, come thou and all thy house into the ark: for thee have I seen righteous before me in this generation." "And every living substance was destroyed which was upon the face of the ground, both man, and cattle, and the creeping things, and the fowl of the heaven; and they were destroyed from the earth: and Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark."

That was the judgment day of "the old world." That was the day which they were reserved to, to be punished. Then, they came to their end: they were destroyed. Noah was delivered out of all the terrible temptations that surrounded him, and was saved from the wrath that came upon his enemies. "The world that then was, being overflowed with water, PERISHED."

The following record shows that Sodom and Gomorrah had their judgment day centuries ago. "But the men of Sodom were wicked and sinners before the Lord exceedingly." "The sun was risen upon the earth when Lot went into Zoar. Then the Lord rained upon Sodom and Gomorrah brimstone and fire from the Lord of heaven; and he overthrew those cities, and all the plain, and all the inhabitants of the cities, and that which grew upon the ground." "And turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes, condemned them with an overthrow, making them an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly; and DELIVERED just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked . . . The Lord knoweth how to DELIVER the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto (a) day of judgment to be punished."

The Jews had a great and terrible day—a day of judgment at the end of their dispensation. "Wrath came upon them to the uttermost." "And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh . . . For these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled . . . For there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people," etc. It was this judgment that the Saviour referred to when he said, "The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this generation and condemn it: because they REPENTED at the preaching of Jonas; and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here. The queen of the South shall rise up in the judgment with this generation," etc. They were not personally present at the judgment with that generation, but their example was an additional testimony against the Jews; for Christ was greater than Jonas or Solomon. Christ said unto the Jews on a certain occasion, "There is one that accuseth you unto the Father: even Moses, in whom ye trust." Moses was not personally present. He was a testimony against them: even so the men of Nineveh and the queen of the South.

There is yet to be another judgment day. Concerning this day we read, "And as it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and the flood came and DESTROYED them ALL. Likewise also was it in the days of Lot . . . But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven and DESTROYED them ALL. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." "And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people; and there shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time thy people shall be DELIVERED, every one that shall be found written in the book."

Thus we find days of judgment brought to view, in the which the godly are delivered while the ungodly are destroyed.

These are days of wrath. The wicked are represented as TREASURING UP unto themselves wrath against the (Gr. a) day of wrath. Thus God reserves them unto a day of judgment. Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, the hearts of the sons of men are fully set in them to do evil. But God is slow to anger and plenteous in mercy. When the cup of the wicked is filled with their iniquity, then it is that the waters of a full cup of wrath are wrung out to them. God does the work effectually and but once.

Truly "the Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto (a) day of judgment to be punished.

The last great day of wrath must be fearful indeed. As the punishment of Jerusalem was more fearful than that of Sodom, being prolonged, even so the last day will be one such as there has never been before." May the Lord help all who read these lines, who are out of Christ, to repent as Nineveh of old did; then they will not come into judgment. The end of this dispensation is at hand. The great day of wrath is near. Destruction is in store for the ungodly. Deliverance awaits the godly. Yet a little while. Yours in hope,

F. H. BURBANK.

NEW YORK, Jan., 1869.

JOSEPH LACIAR, Mauch Chunk, Pa., writes: The Lord bless you and all the brethren and sisters who are laboring in the cause of truth. I ought to have written long since and forwarded some money on the present Vol. of the HERALD; but it is not always convenient for us to do as we would like to: but my whole heart's desire is that the Christian world might have a full opportunity and time to see and hear the great fundamental truths of a future life according to the promises of God in our Saviour Jesus; for I believe it is the last time that will be left. The year upon which we have entered seems to me more like the one in which our Saviour is to come than any previous one since I have been looking for Him. I am looking earnestly forward for the fatal blow to be given to the "City of Abominations," at which we trust the brightness of the King eternal will be witnessed. The Lord help us all to be in patient waiting and watching for the glorious coming.

A NEW YEAR'S GREETING.

TO THE PATRONS AND FRIENDS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE: A year of labor, of self-sacrifice, of entire consecration, of great and holy purposes executed with a flame of love aglow, as when it shone from Jesus' head on Calvary's cross—then will it prove pre eminently a happy year. To such a one I greet you, and earnestly invoke the aid of the divine Spirit that you may gird yourselves for the work, that one may chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight of the enemies of truth and righteousness; not with carnal weapons, but the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. How sweetly sounds the voice of the good Shepherd at this age of the world's history, and on this day, the first of 1869, who will soon call his sheep by name and lead them out of all places whither they have been driven in a dark and stormy day. Although they be hid beneath the earth's surface, yet from their dusty beds he will awake them, for they will hear his voice and follow him. He has promised them eternal life, which it seems he deemed sufficient without the addition of adjectives to make it more possible. Not so the theology of this day, which annexes blessed, happy, glorious, etc. Consistency seems to require these additions to the doom of the ungodly, viz., miserable, eternal life; eternal life in torment; wretched eternal life, etc. What absurd contradictions; and yet they are truth, if the future of unbelievers is endless existence in any form.

How simple and easily comprehended are the good Shepherd's promises to his faithful ones. While such a height, breadth, and depth is encircled as finite can but feebly appreciate, the addition of superlatives but weakens the symmetry and power of the expression, much as it weakens a man's word when enforced by an oath. The connection makes the promise easily understood. Jesus said, "They shall never perish."

Do those who will not hear and follow him perish, or live forever? Those who do, inherit eternal life, while the opposite perish. This seems the logical conclusion, confirmed by Jesus' oft repeated declarations. We are not, I suppose, to understand Jesus as speaking allegorically except in calling his people his sheep. In many other places he promises the same; while the narrative testimony is clear that the oppo ite characters will have the opposite destiny. How little these great principles have been seen and regarded. A brighter star is rising. On this birth day of the New Year, how its illumination passes across the horizon of our faith, burying forever the darkness of paganism, heathen philosophy, inherent immortality and endless suffering. Let us praise our God with a new song to-day. Why were we the favored ones to witness the rising day-star light, but by the good pleasure of our loving Father, through his well beloved Son?

We can now demonstrate to all who wish to learn that "God is love," without one seemingly dark phase in his character that we need to slur over or pass in silence. What does this rich light, so pure and precious, require of us? Effort, work, sacrifice, that others may be enlightened. May it be truthfully said of us, this year, that we have earned all we could, saved all we could, and given all we could to aid in raising our friends and associates from the darkness of bigotry and superstition into the sunlight of the Sun of righteousness. A channel seems often before us promising much. The published pamphlets are read and take root where we could not be heard. All of us, old women and young, can do something toward scattering them. If we cannot carry them, the post-office is open for us. We can send them where we will. In many cases they will be more readily perused not knowing from whence they come. Let us be faithful a little longer. Improve this New Year, or so much as is ours to use. Listening to the voice of the good Shephered, following where he leads, willing to suffer shame for his name, and even the loss of life itself, if he requires it. Jesus' promise makes eternal sure to all who believe. He says none can pluck them out of his hands; or, to place it beyond a doubt, says his Father, who gave them to him, is greater than all, and none is able to pluck them out of his Father's hands.

THE BLISS OF IGNORANCE.

Is there then any joy, exultation, or felicity in ignorance? How is it possible to rejoice in one's ignorance? Is there such a thing as wilful ignorance? Can an ignorant conscience sin? Doctors of divinity have said: "conscientia nescia non peccat. Ignorance, then, in some cases, is bliss—a prolific source of joy and felicity. It is connected with the highest wisdom of man, to be "willingly-ignorant" But what of wisdom? It inflates, puffs up, and engenders pride. "Scientia inflat" yes—insaniens sapientia—insane wisdom that aspires to know things unrevealed—to be wise above what is written.

He has learned much who is willing to be ignorant of those things which the great teacher does not choose to impart. Here is wilful ignorance—blissful ignorance, that no wise man need be ashamed to confess. It is indeed the bliss of ignorance—the highest wisdom. "Go thy way, Daniel, . . . the words are closed up and sealed:"—be satisfied with what thou knowest, and ask not after more, or perplex thy mind to discover what is not revealed. "For of that day and hour knoweth no man." Beware of presumptuous sins. Take heed how you contradict the great Teacher, disbelieve his utterances, or pretend to know more than your Master.

FROM CATHARINE C. WILLIAMS.

BUTLER, BATES CO., MO., Jan. 3, 1869.

BR. STORRS: It is not because I considered myself one on whom the HERALD OF LIFE has no claims; nor yet, because I did not consider myself included when its claims were presented and urged in its columns, that I have waited till this ushering in of another New Year before responding to the appeals made in its behalf; far from it. I am glad to be able to say, even at this late day—enclosed you will find two dollars for the HERALD the current year; and fifty cents for what you can send of tracts. I received the large package of "Campaign Documents," you sent me last Summer; and as soon thereafter as I could, I set myself to work to scatter them; which I did in the following manner: I prepared sets, in some instances; in other cases one or two, according to the person's supposed temperament and interest, which might or not be taken in a new subject; enclosed the same in a wrapper and directed it to them

We live quite a distant from town and are somewhat isolated. Then, too, there has been a great deal of bad weather and high water, for the past six months; and I have had little or no chance to know whether or not the seed sown "has fallen on the right soil. Like other seed it is beyond sight, and there I must leave it in hope. We have a school house commenced. That completed, there will be a place and chance for something to be done to "hold forth the word of life." How it seems, to think of so swiftly nearing the point which will test our faith and hope. I ofttimes think I have reason to fear I shall not be able to exclaim with Paul, "I have fought a good fight," etc. The cares of the world are so engrossing, and necessarily so; or unavoidably, it would seem, when there is much of a family. Then, I have an abiding care and anxiety about our oldest son who went to the army before he was 18; was in almost constant active service till the close of the war: came home with a cough which for the past year has been more or less distressing. We are hoping something from a change of climate from Iowa here, as it is considered more favorable for lung complaint; but at best it is a source of constant anxiety. In any case, and with all, it is wise to lay up a good foundation against the time to come. What a loss to miss of gaining eternal life with all its unimaginable blessedness. As I scan the columns of the HERALD I miss familiar names. I suppose it is because it is with others as with myself, it requires such an effort to get to it, to write; especially something that will interest and instruct. Now, with thankfulness that you have been spared to labor to this day, and the hope that the ability to do so may long remain, I am still one with you, "faint, yet pursuing," though I feel far behind.

FROM ELD. T. K. ALLEN.

WINONA, MINN., Jan. 12, 1869.

BR. STORRS: Some three or four years ago the HERALD OF LIFE was sent my wife by some friends (I think from Philadelphia) for six months. At the end of that time I could not see it duty to help support it, inasmuch as I considered it contradicted the plain declaration of our Lord concerning the non-resurrection of the wicked dead; but still in spite of myself, it had my strong sympathies, and I could only desire that the doctrine was true. Since that time I have read many of your works on different subjects; and especially on Life only in Christ. I see now as clearly as I can see anything taught in the Scriptures, that the wages of sin is the extinction of the animal life; and unless we have a Redeemer, one who can obtain the right to redeem man from the dominion of death, and give him another element of life, he must remain forever among the congregation of the dead, and come to nothing. But as respects his resurrection at the end of the thousand years, to be rewarded according to the deeds done in the body, I am not clear, because there are some Scriptures that seem to teach thus; but I am satisfied that the largest majority of Scripture teaches that he will not have a resurrection from the dead. There are other things that your paper advocates that I can indorse, such as the "Essential Baptism;" although I cannot abrogate water baptism; yet I believe that the baptism of Jesus is the baptism of the Spirit; also, on the manner of judgment. I have stood immovable, for the last twenty years, that this world never will be destroyed by literal fire. I also sympathize with the HERALD, as far as I have read, on the ages to come, etc. I think it essential to have a right theory. If we would have a right practice we must have the baptism of the Holy Ghost: we must love the Lord our God, with all the heart, soul, mind, and strength. We must have that love that is not easily provoked, and thinketh no evil. We must bring every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. We must have the words of our mouths and the meditations of our hearts always acceptable in His sight, that we may be presented without spot and unrebukable in love at his coming.

The cause of truth is advancing. Whole neighborhoods and churches are being revolutionized by the tracts and papers sent out from your office. I am frequently solicited to request you to come out this way and preach.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—Will not the friends of the Life views take courage, not only to sustain and scatter the HERALD OF LIFE, but with renewed zeal and liberality urge on the work of sending out the "Campaign Documents?" How is it possible with so little expense to do so great a work in sending light on the Life views as by means these Documents? They reach persons who could not be reached by any other means; and can be scattered by those who cannot preach otherwise. How else are we to reach many parts of our land which is yet in darkness on this glorious theme of "Life only in Christ?"

Br. Allen's report of what the "Campaign Documents" are doing in his region, under God, shows what may be done in a multitude of other places; and similar reports are coming in from different parts of the field of labor. Many thousands of these documents have been scattered in the past six months; but many thousands more should be immediately sent forth on their mission. Every one of them is a preacher, and will talk to men and women when they are alone and most likely to be benefitted by their silent teachings.

Br. Allen says, he is frequently solicited to request us to come out there and preach. Does he not know that we are out there more effectual ly by our writings, than we could be at our time of life, by our bodily presence? We are out there in those Life messengers, written in greater strength than our physical system would now permit us to preach personally; and, by the help of the Lord, we will still sound abroad, by the aid of the press and the prayers and labors of our helpers, the glorious news of "LIFE FUTURE AND ETERNAL ONLY THROUGH CHRIST," and "GOD IS LOVE."

FROM ELD. J. LEWIS.

DEAR BRETHREN: We received a package of the HERALD OF LIFE through the post-office this day, and were truly thankful for the favor. We mean to hand them out where we think they will do the most good. We contemplate taking a trip over into Missouri soon; and we wish we could have a good supply of the "campaign" tracts to take along; and if we had the money we would order them without delay. But our pockets are empty. Hope it will not be so long. We wish to help on the car of truth. May the Lord bless those brethren that give so liberally to the cause of the one great truth "GOD IS LOVE;" and He does not mean to have misery in the succeeding ages. Amen.

We write for the gratification of our dear friends who look for "Br. Lewis' name;" and we always look over the columns of the HERALD to see if we can find something from the pen of some that we know. The dear HERALD is letting her light shine brighter and brighter; while some others seem to be going out because they reject the truth that "God is love;" and therefore he will not kill twice. Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God. The resurrection is the new birth. Christ is the beginning of the New Creation of God: "For Him hath God the Father sealed." John vi., 27. He (Christ) was made of the seed of David according to the flesh, made a little lower than the angels that he might suffer death, which would have been endless were it not for the sealing impress of the Holy Spirit, which constituted Him the Son of God with power, by the resurrection from the dead, Rom. i., 3, 4, which makes him the first-born from the dead. So then we see, that as in Adam all die—go out of being, to live no more—even so in Christ shall all be made alive. Thus we see the importance of getting into Christ. Not by water, but by the one Spirit; without which (Spirit) all of Adam's race will go down to rise no more. This to our mind is all important; and we hope some one will give us an article with the heading, "The Beginning of the New Creation." Here let me say, that if the wicked dead are resurrected to life, they will belong to the New Creation to die no more. Neither can they suffer any more, being the children of God and of the resurrection. O let us urge the importance of being sealed (begotten) with the Holy Spirit of promise.

H. O. BILLINGS writes, from Lenora, Minn., under date of Dec. 20, 1868: The glorious work is progressing in this State. I can remember the time, and that not long since, when I knew of but one who believed in the doctrine of Life only in Christ, viz., Br. Gladding, of Winona. He tried to convince me that the wicked dead would not live again, and asked some questions that I found it hard to answer. I was for having all up—the antediluvians, Sodomites and all. From that time I began to trim up my resurrection-tree, and before a great while I had most of the branches cut off so far as the wicked dead were concerned; but the old trunk with all the wicked Jews to be raised was yet standing. So I continued till Br. Call came out here. He dug up the old trunk, roots and all; and now when I preach or talk this is one main theme, "No life out of Christ." I have been opposed by the mortal resurrectionists and the like; but still the truth prevails. The shaking time has come, and that which cannot be shaken will remain. The word of God cannot be shaken; and that says, the wicked "shall not see life." I long to be in the field proclaiming the glad tidings that "God is love;" and that men were under the condemnation of death, and God sent his Son, and gave him the "keys of death and the grave;" and now when He does His work it will be well done: it will need no revision. I am much confined, my business demanding my whole time; but I hope to be able to preach some.

C. W. CHICK, Lynchburg, Va., sends us a new subscriber and writes: He is a member of the Methodist E. Church, and the first I have been able to obtain. I hope to send another soon. I continue on all fitting occasions to proclaim the truth of "No Life out Christ" with what ability I possess. Of course I meet with opposition even in the humble sphere in which I operate, and sometimes ridicule; but it moves me not. I have God's pure word for what I believe, therefore I fear not to speak when asked a reason for my hope and faith; which I find is more than many of those who oppose me can do: that is, scripturally. Yours, in the hope of eternal life.

MARTHA JORDAN, Niles, Mich., writes: I like the HERALD OF LIFE much. It is all the preaching I have on "Life only in Christ," except the Bible. I am giving the HERALD to my friends and neighbors. Some are in favor of it, and I hope by the blessing of God they may see the truth that "God is love" and that eternal life is given only to those who seek for it by well doing. "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. If I had means to procure tracts to give people here, I should do it; for darkness covers their eyes. I am striving and praying to overcome sin, putting all my trust in my Saviour, that I may find an entrance into the everlasting kingdom when Jesus comes. Pray for me, that I may be faithful.

BR. CADWELL writes us that a number of errors have occurred in his article on Rom. viii., but especially in the second portion of it, in the HERALD, Jan. 13, he says, "an important error occurs which I wish corrected." The error is found on the last page, third column, 14th line from the bottom: for "absurd," read about.

BR. F. A. BURBANK, who is assisting us in the office, is ready to "preach the word" on Sundays anywhere within a day's ride of this city, with the only conditions that you invite him and pay his travelling expenses. It is your loss if you do not call for his services.

"One More Day's Work for Jesus."

"One more day's work for Jesus,"
One less of fruit for me!
But heaven is nearer
And Christ is dearer
Than yesterday, to me.
His love and light
Fill all my soul to-night.

One more day's work for Jesus:
How glorious is my King!
'Tis joy, not duty,
To speak his beauty;
My soul mounts on the wing
At the mere thought
How Christ her life hath bought.

One more day's work for Jesus;
Sweet, sweet the work has been,
To tell the story,
To show the glory
Where Christ's flock enter in.
How it did shine
In this poor heart of mine.

One more day's work for Jesus—
In hope, in faith, in prayer,
His word I've spoken,
His bread I've broken,
To souls faint with despair,
And bade them flee
To him who hath saved me.

One more day's work for Jesus—
Yes, a weary day;
But heaven shines clearer,
And rest comes nearer,
At each step of the way;
And Christ in all—
Before his face I fall.

O, blessed work for Jesus!
O, rest at Jesus' feet!
There toil seems pleasure,
My wants are treasure,
And pain for him looks sweet.
Lord, if I may,
I'll serve thee more another day.

A Christmas Story.

My Young Friends: You have doubtless looked forward to Christmas festivity with anticipations of much enjoyment, and have in a measure realized your expectations. Did you remember that this was a birth day celebration? not of earth-renowned heroes—but of Jesus Christ, who was born in Bethlehem in the days of Herod the king. This great event was not revealed to kings and counsellors in halls of state, but to a few honest, humble shepherds, who were devout and looking for the hope of Israel. Imagine, my youthful readers, the scene to the north of Bethlehem's sloped fruitful fields, where those shepherds kept their nightly vigils to protect their flocks from the beasts of prey, who left their hiding places during the hours of night in quest of food. In some of those fields David encountered a lion and a bear, who had stolen his lambs. He rescued them and slew the lion and the bear; the moon shone upon them with its silvery brightness, whispering peace and purity; the bright stars spoke to them of God's glory and his handiwork. All nations were hushed in repose, while they, with anxiety, watched for the coming dawn. Suddenly an angel appears and a bright light surrounds them. It is so sudden and such an unearthly brightness that they are terrified; the sweet voice of the angel with his cheering announcement calms their fears: "Fear not," said he, "I bring you glad tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people; for unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Life-giver, (Syriac) which is Christ the Lord;" and this shall be the sign whereby you may know the child, "He is wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger." The bright panorama increases in splendor. Suddenly as the light appeared, there is with the angel, in full view, a multitude of the heavenly host, and the hills of Judea resound with the melody of angelic voices. What celestial harmony! Did ever mortal man listen to such seraphic strains of "glory to God; on earth, peace and good-will to men." Soon as the angels had gone away into heaven, the shepherds said, let us go and see this that has come to pass in Bethlehem, which the angels have made known to us." They went and found the babe and fell down and worshipped Him. They also told what a wonderful vision they had seen. It was noised abroad, and many wondered what manner of child this should be. Well might they wonder. The prophecies concerning the coming Shilo were imperfectly understood. Even now, while his second coming is near, as his own words reveal, how few even among Christians believe or expect such an event.

My young friends, you have often heard of a personage called "Santa Claus," who is represented as riding over hill and dale, over the tops of houses, down the chimneys, Christmas eve, loaded with gifts for the little folks. We even see his portrait in the shop windows. All this is a myth. There is not and never was such a being as "Santa Claus." It is a wicked deception practised upon the children.

The birth of Jesus is a glorious reality, attested by many infallible witnesses. We may well commemorate the event with rejoicing. Imagination cannot paint the scene, or our interest in it, in too glowing colors.

These glad tidings sung over Bethlehem's fields, are for you, my dear ones; for they are for all people. Will you not listen to the sweet invitation to seek Christ early? If so, you will find Him. Then, when the Christmas season of 1869 shall arrive, if it be yours to witness, you can, in spirit, sympathize with the angel band in ascriptions of glory to God, and good-will to men.

A Grandmother.

Redemption and Restitution.

By R. Cadwell.

[Concluded.]

Having made reference to verses 24, 26, we will venture a remark that seems to be on the face of them, and return to the subject again. "For we are saved by hope." Some think this is similar to "We are saved only so as by hope Either way the Christian's hope had a saving power in renewing the heart and forming the life. This was done by having eternal life the object of it. For they who have this hope in themselves purify themselves as he is pure. But the creature's hope does not now save them, and their natural sufferings are no evidence in them, or in us, of eternal life. Theirs is a deliverance that belongs to natural life; freed of its bondage state only; and is one of sense and sight, when it is accomplished.

As eternal life is the object of our hope, and we are saved so as by hope, so the spirit helpeth our infirmities, natural and moral imperfections, and teaches us what things we really need for our best interest, and "maketh intercession for us." In these four respects it is quite different from the creature's, founded upon the deliverance from the subjection to vanity.

We will now return to the first thing noticed in verse 23. The Apostle's soul-stirring utterances—"For we know" this statement was made under the firm and moving convictions of faith, and knowledge of the life sufferings of the creation (every creature; "God's creatures") on the other side, from "we our selves," and this, too, blessed be the name of God, where there is deliverance likewise. For we know prospectively, that, the bondage of its present life-suffering will end by a joyful deliverance. Its long delayed hope will be fulfilled.

"For we know,"— Yes, we know—praised be God, these things, inspire us with the same hopeful, thoughtful prospects; and blessed be his holy name forever, for his goodness and for his thoughts of mercy to the children of men; for they are more than can be reckoned up unto thee. Therefore, let all things that have breath praise the Lord.

"For we know," though the princes of the Gentiles and the rulers of this world will stand up, and their supporters will be gathered together against the Lord and against his anointed, and the lightning's increasing flash across the ecclesiastical and political heavens, and its universal thunder-roar indicate the terrible tempest near, to deprive God's anointed heir of his inheritance, and to cut off the last hope of a freed race and freed earth. But it will not be done. For Jehovah has decreed its freedom and its hope. But the dark, the final hour comes; the last point of the living world, (I see all men's hands upon their loins as a woman in travail) for the birth is reached of final darkness, but at evening tide it is light, and before the morning they are not—gone as the wind that passeth among and cometh not again. Now sing, O ye heavens, for the Lord hath done it; shout, ye lower parts of the earth: break forth into singing, ye mountains, for the Lord hath redeemed Jacob and glorified himself in Israel.

O, let the nations be glad, and sing for joy: for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth. Let the people praise thee, O God, let all the people praise thee; for now shall the earth yield her increase, and all the ends of the earth shall fear him.

Praise the Lord from the ends of the earth, ye that go down to the sea: the isles, and the inhabitants thereof. Let the inhabitants of the rocks sing, let them shout from the top of the mountains. For the Lord will comfort Zion; He will make her wilderness like Eden, and her deserts like the garden of the Lord, I will restore her judges as at the first, and her counsellors as at the beginning; afterward she shall be called the city of righteousness, the faithful city.

O, sing for joy, for he has "ransomed his people from the grave, he has redeemed them from death." He has broken," off from the inhabitants of the earth the "hard bondage" they have been under, and have been made to serve tyrants—the destroyers of the earth. He hath given the nations quietude and repose. They are at peace, "Every man sits under his own vine and fig tree." For the Messiah sits and reigns on David's throne, as Solomon did, with whose reign the nations were in peace." "Thou wilt also destroy the face of the covering spread over all the earth, and the veil spread over all nations."

"In that day shall the branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious, and the fruits of the earth excellent and comely for them who are the escaped of Israel. There shall not be thence an infant of days, or an old man that hath not filled his days; the little child shall put his hand upon the hole of the ass, and the weaned child upon the cockatrice's den. The cow and the bear shall feed, and their young ones lie down together."

And "we know," so far as the evidence given here is of the most reliable kind, that the time in the prophets, and the time of deliverance from the bondage of corruption of the "creature" taught by the apostles, do harmonize. And we do know, that in the representations of the prophets, of the earth and its inhabitants at this time, the deliverance is far greater than that of the saints and the "irresponsible earth itself." Shall we so interpret the apostle to conflict with this, the sure word of prophecy, and with the most natural sense of his own words, with these facts before us?

And besides, a still more important item presents itself to our view in these quotations. Here we see the nations put under Christ's rule and government; singing anthems of gladness and joyful praise for their deliverance and freedom from oppression. The Anointed of God sits on the throne of David, the nations are quiet and at peace. The head of evil, the serpent power, that had dominion over the natural seed of the woman, by the immortal Son of God is crushed—and under which, or during which, for wise purposes, the natural "creature" (man) was subjected to vanity in hope now delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the children of God; and Christ and his saints "crowned with (this) glory and honor," and all outward nature put under man, or rendered subservient to meet the wants of the race or the natural descendants of the woman's seed.

This is the restitution that awaits the living of the human race when Jesus comes. Waft the glad tidings, ye winds and waves, and ye who love the word, and all that go down to the sea, and in the paths thereof, the islands and the inhabitants, with every mountain, hill-top, and valley; echo the glorious anthem of praise and all on earth and in heaven say Amen. Glory to God in the highest; peace and good-will to men. "Selah."

Judgments of God.

"But we are sure that the judgment of God is according to truth." Rom. ii., 2.

The view that is entertained by many that there is but one judgment revealed in the Scriptures, and that at the second advent of Christ, we think is a mistake, and that by the authority of God's word; for this reason we beg to differ from such. We wish to notice briefly a few of the judgments as revealed in the Scriptures.

We will commence with the flood, or the old world. In Genesis we read, "And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of his heart was only evil continually. . . . and the Lord said, I will destroy man, whom I have created, from the face of the earth. . . . and God said unto Noah, the end of all flesh is come before me, for the earth is filled with violence through them; and behold I will destroy them with the earth." Gen. vi., 5, 7, 13. Thus we have a judgment brought to view which is a destruction of the wicked. The reason given why this judgment was poured out upon them was, for their wickedness; it was because the wickedness of man was great. But, say our opponents, we admit that they were destroyed, but that is not the end of them. But what did God say to Noah? "The end of all flesh is come before me." No one can doubt, for a moment, but what He had reference to the flood; for he says, "The earth is filled with violence through them; and behold I will destroy them." The end of all flesh, brought to view cannot be taken in an unlimited sense, for it would embrace all mankind that ever lived previous to that time, and all that would live after; which is not true. It could not even embrace all that lived at that time; only those who were destroyed by the flood. This is proved by verse 17. "And behold I, even I, do bring a flood of waters upon the earth to destroy all flesh wherein is the breath of life." Thus we have it clearly stated that the all flesh includdonly those who were destroyed by the flood of waters. And the Lord said unto Noah, that was the end of them. But if our opponents are correct that they must be raised up at the second coming of Christ and be destroyed again, then their destruction by the flood was not the end of them, but their end is yet future. Let us take heed and not be wise above what is written.

Let God be true if it makes every man a liar; and furthermore if they are to be brought to life at the second coming of Christ, and destroyed again, what is their second destruction for? The first we are clearly told was for their wickedness. It is more probable and more in harmony with God's justice and love to give them eternal life in the resurrection, i. e., if they come up; for they have paid the debt. The Lord said they should be destroyed for their sins by a flood. They suffered it. This is all they were ever threatened with, that we have any account of. To bring them to life again and destroy them, is it not going beyond the revealed penalty, and beyond what God has threatened?

Christ, in speaking of the destruction of the wicked at the end of the world, shows that the destruction of the antediluvians was eternal in its effects. He says, "As it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives and were given in marriage until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and the flood came and destroyed them all." Luke xiii., 27. He does not say the wicked that were destroyed in Noe's day are to be raised up and destroyed; but those wicked who are living at the time of his coming shall be destroyed as they were; not in the same manner, but in the same sense. Paul says that the wicked living at that time "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power," 2 Thess. i., 9, which will be the end of them, as the flood was to the antediluvians. We have the testimony of Paul in relation to the overthrow of the old world. He says, "By faith, Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which also he condemned the world." Heb. xi., 7. How were they condemned? By Noah's faith. After they were condemned, what followed? Their execution. God then destroys them. How out of harmony with the Scriptures is the view that is held by so many, that they are to be brought up; then, condemned, then destroyed again. It looks like folly. It not only looks like folly, but it is folly. May we be directed into all truth.

From Daniel Clow.

Jamesville, Wis., Dec., 1868.

Br. Storrs: To me, the Herald of Life is indeed, what it's title implies: because it contains the evidence of an honest purpose, and the conviction of a just cause. And when I remember the great sacrifice that my dear Br. has made in turning his back upon the popular church to secure the love and the approbation of his Maker, I am constrained, nay, compelled, to believe, that something more potent then earthly considerations (and addressed to your manhood,) punctured the brain, and opened the heart, for the reception of a flood of light that suddenly burst upon the world in 1843, and onward. 1843, the ever memorable epoch, when the Angel, standing with one foot upon the sea and the other upon the land, and sware by him that liveth forever, there should be time no longer, is as fresh in my memory to-day, as when I stood trembling at the altar and pleading for mercy. Nor are my convictions of the identity of the second advent proclamation in 1843—with the said Angel's declaration, diminished in the least by the passing of time. In the order of events, that Angel stands between the sounding of the sixth and the seventh trumpets; just where we may reasonably expect to find him, and his mission is one that we may reasonably suppose has, or will transpire in close proximity with the seventh trumpet; and doubtless will synchronize, not with the midnight cry, but with the going forth of the ten virgins.

On reviewing what I have written, I discover that I have wandered from the only point I had in view, when I commenced; which was simple to acknowledge my ever wakeful gratitude to you, for the numerous blessings that have fallen upon me, through the medium of your efforts to benefit the world, and to convince all that the wages of sin is death, and the judgment at hand.

I hope that you will not accuse me of an attempt to flatter you, (dear Br.) when I say that you have accomplished more in the development of truth and the science of religion, than any other living man. Nor have I a single doubt that the great Head of the church called you out of that church of which you were a member, to combat error and to expose ignorance and folly. I feel that I shall be called upon to bear special testimony in your behalf, at the great inquest, now so near at hand, when life and immortality will be given to all who love the appearing of our Elder brother. Not, indeed, in a literal sense, as we often appear in earthly courts as witnesses upon the stand. But in my prayers, and in the fulness of my gratitude to God for the blessings that flow so freely and so sweetly into my anxious soul through the medium of your pen, while contemplating the grandeur of future life, as revealed in the person of his dear Son.

My Bible was, indeed, open before me, before I even heard of the name of George Storrs; but the popular mythology of this world had well nigh destroyed my confidence in it: and seldom, thought of reading it.

We talk of heathen lands, and boast of our missionary efforts to convert the world; nay, we have compassed seas and land to make one proselyte; and when he is made, what is he? he is a heathen still; and but a step in advance of his former self.

To talk of immortality out of Christ, and independent of his gracious promises, is but little short of heathenism, and blasphemous in in its conception. Long, long years I bowed submissively to this popular delusion, and flattered myself that all was right. But it was when "the darkness covered the earth, and gross darkness the people."

We talk of our advancement in the arts and sciences, and boast of our literary institutions; of our classics, and polite literature; of our theological seminaries, and splendid chapels; of our students in theology, and the numerical strength of church communicants, as if heaven was composed of just such creatures. But what is the verdict of the truly pious and devoted Christian, as he surveys the broad plains of Christendom, in the middle of the nineteenth century? Nay, what is the verdict of every intelligent man and woman in the land; when they gaze upon the strange alliance of the nominal church with drunkards, with liars, with defaulters, with burglars, with thieves and robbers; with libertines, and vile women; with adulterers, and adulteresses; nay, with every species of crime that is known to our laws, and the laws of our God? Is it not, that the evil has got the victory, and the world is sealed for destruction? Nay, we all know, that vital piety is nearly extinct in the land, and popular religion is a foolish mockery.

Am I charged with rashness and a want of charity? Nay, but sadness absorbs my every thought and I feel like weeping, as did the Saviour over Jerusalem. Nor am I conscious of our estimating the facts, as I have drawn fresh inspiration from the lips of H. W. Beecher, in a recent discourse. Hear him, "The city of New York has nearly as many churches as dens of infamy; yet the pulpit of that city allows all kinds of corruption to grow within its borders, until it is second only to Sodom and Gomorrah. Business men, who stand high in the church, set examples before their clerks, that ought to make every honest man abhor them from the bottom of his heart. Ministers are supposed to be the mouthpieces of God; yet they grow fat in the service of the devil by keeping silent, when they should lift up their voices and expose the wickedness of corrupt men in high places."

Is there an adventist in the land that dare talk like this?

The time was, indeed, when they rebuked sin in high, as well as in low places; but latterly they are growing extremely modest, and begin to apologize for their bad conduct in setting time, and honestly proclaiming to the world; nay, they are bowing the suppliant knee to the golden images of the land, and following in the footprints of their predecessors, in establishing metes and bounds, to check, and otherwise cripple us in the free exercise of faith, and the liberty, vouchsafed to all the waiting children.

Organization is the order of the day; the sine qua non of all the true and faithful followers of Christ; and "it cannot be avoided; we cannot acquire a respectable position in the world short of it." Such is the language of modern Adventists. And the shout of victory is heard in the enemy's camp. Lord Jesus, come quickly!

From W. C. Stone.

Boston, Mass., Dec. 21, 1868.

Br. Storrs: In the last Crisis, Br. Damman has asked certain questions. The second "How can sinners be reconciled to Christ, and be saved from their own sins, if not rescued first from their helpless state into which they fell by Adam's transgression?" I think I can answer that question according to the word; and if I speak not according to that, there is no light in me. In the first place, I read that "if one died for all, then all were dead." Now, if some of the new theological teachers would take this stand-point, I think they could see the track so as not to run into the Depot of Universalism. Then they could see that the "free gift" only comes to believers, and that is the free "gift of eternal life." The Universalist D. D. will stand up and declare that the free gift of eternal life came on all men; and also that "by the obedience of one shall many (all, they say) be made righteous:" and this grace of righteousness "reign unto eternal life;" then they ask us to hear Paul to Timothy: "For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour, who will have all men to be saved," (Why have not our new theological friends used this text, and made out a common salvation of all men from the grave to mortal life? "and come unto the knowledge of the truth." The Universalist D. D. further inquires, Will not God's will be done? turns to his hearers and says, you pray the Lord's prayer, "thy will be done?" yes; well, do you doubt? you are not to doubt when you pray; you are told by Paul to pray for all men; and Paul tells you further, that Christ "gave himself a ransom for all;" now will He fail in his mission? No: says the hearer; that's good doctrine, and "some of our neighbors are coming over to it."

Now let us look at some of the words I have quoted. "If one died for all, then were all dead." Who is the man that says that Christ was dead in trespasses and sins? Not one. He physically died; and died for those who are physically dead. But "stop," says our friend, "I know that I am not physically dead; people would call me insane, sure, if I admitted that. I know I have life to-day." The whole condition of the human race is dying, to-day.

Now we will read something about this reconciling unto God. Jesus, in his conversation with Nicodemus, says, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Here is the reconciling point: it is when they believe; and so the hymn is right, "To God I am reconciled:" and further, he says "he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God." Again, we hear him saying to the Jews, John v., 24, "He that heareth my word and believeth on him that sent me hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation: but is passed from death unto life." Now, is this death physical? or as some say it is, a moral death? If so, is the perish a like sort of dying? No; he meant that those who believe on him should not physically perish. So those who believe do pass from the Adamic condemnation of death to life. It is then they are acquitted, freed, or justified by faith, and have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus;" they are "spiritually minded," which is now "life and peace:" they were carnally minded; in death now already condemned, but they have now changed their position before God. He holds them by the law of sin and death no longer; they are made free from death; they enjoy now the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus. But, says our friend, "how is it then that the righteous die now?" That is the plan that God has made; He hath subjected the creature to vanity in hope, "waiting for the adoption," to wit, "the redemption of our body."

But, says our new theological friend, "I don't believe in your death doctrine; dead folks are dead, and alive folks are alive; you must talk that to somebody beside me." Well now friend, What do we understand John to mean, when he says, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren: he that loveth (present tense) not his brother abideth in death?" This then, friend, is the present condition of all unbelievers? The wrath of God still abides upon them; the death sentence is on them, awaiting their execution, being "condemned already." If the first condemnation is death, is it not the first death? and if the second condemnation is a death, is it not a second death? Thus a man by rejecting the offer of salvation through Christ, may receive in himself a condition from which there is no recovery. He dies without a hope of a resurrection; and his friends may truly sorrow for him.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. Earth, not Heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

Unless attention is paid to all these matters confusion and delay are inevitable.

LITERAL FULFILMENT OF PROPHECY.

WE now proceed to an examination of some of those promises which seem to imply a literal gathering of a remnant of the same Judah and Israel that were cast out and scattered. Not the substitution of another people.

Let it be recollected, at the outset, that whatever may be said of the return of Judah or the Jews, from Babylon, Israel, or the ten tribes, never did return from their captivity in Assyria.

See Jer. xxiii., 5–8. "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely: and this is his name whereby he shall be called THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS. Therefore, behold the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say The Lord liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, The Lord liveth, which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all the countries whither I have driven them; and they shall dwell in their own land." Here is a prophecy, so far as it respects the "reign" of that "king," and "Judah and Israel," which never has had a fulfilment. Faith says, It must have its liteal accomplishment; but, unbelief will, doubtless, seek some other course to hide its want of confidence in God's disposition or ability to do what it cannot see how it is to be effected. Again, Jer. xvi., 15, 16, "But, the Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them; and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers. Behold, I will send for many fishers, saith the Lord, and they shall fish them; and after will I send for many hunters, and they shall hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks." The days never have "come," yet, when this has been said, or could have been said, with truth. It remains, then, to be fulfilled. Also, Jer. xxx., 3, 4, "For lo, the days come, saith the Lord; that I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel and Judah, saith the Lord; and I will cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it. And these are the words that the Lord spake concerning Israel and concerning Judah." Here the prophecy is very particular to mark both nations. Again, verse 10, "Therefore fear thou not, O my servant Jacob, saith the Lord; neither be dismayed, O Israel: for lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and shall be in rest and quiet, and none shall make him afraid." Also verses 18–20, "Thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents, and have mercy on his dwelling-places; and the city shall be builded upon her own heap, and the palace shall remain after the manner thereof. And out of them shall proceed thanksgiving and the voice of them that make merry: and I will multiply them, and they shall not be few; I will also glorify them, and they shall not be small. Their children also shall be as aforetime, and their congregation shall be established before me, and I will punish all that oppress them." This cannot apply to anything that has ever yet been done for them. Their "palace" built after the captivity in Babylon did not "remain."

Again, Jer. xxxi., 4–8, "Again I will build thee, and thou shalt be built, O virgin of Israel: thou shalt again be adorned with thy tabrets, and shalt go forth in the dances of them that make merry. Thou shalt yet plant vines upon the mountains of Samaria; the planters shall plant, and shall eat them as common things. For there shall be a day, that the watchmen upon the Mount Ephraim shall cry, Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion unto the Lord our God. For thus saith the Lord; Sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations: publish ye, praise ye, and say, O Lord, save thy people, the remnant of Israel. Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame, the woman with child and her that travaileth with child together: a great company shall return thither." Samaria belonged to the ten tribes or nation of Israel. They have never since that prophecy was uttered "planted vines upon the mountains of Samaria:" but the day shall come when they will do it. This gathering is not of the immortal saints, for, "They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble: for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first-born." That is not the way the immortal saints are to be gathered; they are to be caught up, to meet the Lord in the air:" and this will be with shouting, not "weeping." We would here remark that "Ephriam" is a general name for the ten tribes, of which it was the principal, chief, or "first." Once more, Jer. xxxiii., 7, "And I will cause the captivity of Judah and the captivity of Israel to return, and will build them as at the first." This language is too explicit to be misunderstood. Here are "Judah and Israel," and they are not only to "return" but to be "built as at the first." That never has been done; and it cannot be applied to the gathering of Christians into the new earth, or anywhere else: it can therefore only have a fulfilment, as the language clearly shows, in the building again the Remnant of Judah and Israel into one nation. We shall notice that point more at large hereafter.

We will now look at Zeph. iii., 13, 19, 20, "The remnant of Israel shall not do iniquity, nor speak lies; neither shall a deceitful tongue be found in their mouth: for they shall feed and lie down, and none shall make them afraid. Behold, at that time I will undo all that afflict thee: and I will save her that halteth, and gather her that was driven out; and I will get them praise and fame in every land where they have been put to shame. At that time will I bring you again, even in the time that I gather you: for I will make you a name and a praise among all people of the earth, when I turn back your captivity before your eyes, saith the Lord." Compare this with Amos ix., 14, 15, "And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled out of their land, which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God."

Let us now turn to Isa. xi., 11–16; a portion of Scripture on which as much labor has been expended to remove it out of the way of a literal return of Judah and Israel, as Bunyan represents was done to fill up the "slough of despond" to prevent Christians from falling into it, and which as little effect; for there stands Isa. xi., still; ever in the way of spiritualism, or "no restoration of Judah and Israel." In fact, the more attempts that are made to fill up this "slough" of spiritualizers, the more visible it becomes—the more clearly it appears that all attempts to explain it, except in a literal manner, as relating to Judah and Israel, are vain and futile.

"And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, [there was where the ten tribes were carried, and where a "remnant" of them are found at this day;] and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea. And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, (a phrase which always, we believe, means the ten tribes; they were called "outcasts," not "dispersed," as Judah was: these outcasts are to be "assembled") and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth." From everywhere that they have been scattered. "The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off; Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim." Let it be remembered that the two nations, Judah and Ephraim, before the captivity and carrying away of the latter into Assyria, were almost always at war. This spirit of strife is to cease when their restoration occurs. "They shall fly (implying swiftness) upon the shoulders (or, borders as the original signifies,) of the Philistines toward the west. They shall spoil them of the east together." As Israel spoiled the Egyptians when recovered the first time from captivity, so, when "the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left from Assyria," "they shall spoil them of the east." "They shall lay their hand upon Edom and Moab; and the children of Ammon shall obey them." It is a little remarkable that these are the same countries that "escape out of the hand" of the "overflowing king," Daniel xi., 40, 41. Having escaped the judgment from that king, their minds may be prepared to aid Israel at that time. "And the Lord shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea; and with his mighty wind shall he shake his hand over the river, and shall smite it in the seven streams, and make men go over dry shod. And there shall be an highway for the the remnant of his people which shall be left from Assyria, like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt." Mark the language—"the remnant—from Assyria:" from there, especially, there will be a gathering. What is meant by "the tongue of the Egyptian sea" the event must, perhaps, determine. It may mean one of the forks of the Red Sea, or the entire sea itself. We are inclined to the latter opinion. "The river," we think, is the river Euphrates, which will then be literally smitten at, or near, its several mouths. It is said the original will admit of this translation—"Shall shake his hand over the river and smite it into seven streams." If so, it seems the meaning is, that in that day, God will make the river Euphrates the means of watering and refreshing what is now the "desert" of Arabia, which, in that day, is to be made "like the garden of the Lord." See Isa. li., 3. That desert is included in the territory given to the posterity of Jacob—See Gen. xv., 18, and Ex. xxiii., 31. In this view all is harmony, beauty, order, and God like. In any other view all is fancy, unsatisfying, and confusion.

In our next we shall consider some objections; especially that which says—"The restoration is conditional." If so, we shall show that those conditions will be complied with.

NON-IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

BY DR. J. K. FINLEY.

SOME years ago an excellent minister of the gospel, with a D. D. attached to his name, and who deserved the distinction if any man ever did, heard that I had ceased to believe in the immortality of the soul. Being a near relative and a warm personal friend, he called to see me, full of zeal for my welfare. He was president of one of our best colleges, a man of scholarship and learning, and as familiar with the Bible as any person I ever knew. After expressing his regret at my departure from the established belief of the church, and the clear teachings of the Bible, I said to him: "Doctor, I pledge you my word, that if you will give me one text in the whole Bible that affirms the immortality of the soul, or of man in his natural state, or previous to regeneration by the Holy Spirit, I will give up my present belief and go back to my former belief. "Why, sir," he replied, "the Bible is full of it; it sticks out everywhere." Then, said I, you can give me the text I ask for; I only want one, and I will stand to my pledge. After waiting for some time he had to acknowledge that he could not then recall one. I told him to take his own time, I would give him all the time he wanted. The subject was not renewed for more than two years, although I frequently met with him. At length I reminded him of my pledge, and that I still held myself bound by it. He admitted that it could not be found in the Bible, but said it was unnecessary; that the Bible assumed it, just as it assumed the existence of God. I replied that good and learned men like himself sometimes talked foolishly, because they were not perfect in wisdom and knowledge; but the Bible emanated from God, who was perfect in all his attributes, and it never spoke foolishly. I then appealed to him if it would not be foolish to assume so important a fact which could only be known by revelation, and yet revelation never gave the slightest hint of it? After waiting for some time and getting no reply, I changed the subject, evidently to his relief.

I am pleased to know that I have friends here who are afraid of my going over to infidelity, or, at least, jeopardize my eternal interests; and I now make the same pledge to them that I did to the doctor—just give me the one text. I know I am safe in my offer, for the text cannot be found within the lids of the Bible; it is not there. The phrases immortal soul, never-dying soul, deathless spirit, souls that must live as long as God lives, and all such expressions as we hear so often from the pulpit and in the prayer-meeting, and everywhere else are never used in the Bible. They are human inventions altogether.

And here I would ask the reader, with a single desire to know "What is truth," one question. You know that the most important consideration by which ministers and friends urge you to come to Christ is, that you have an immortal soul that must suffer to all eternity unspeakable torments if you stay away from Him. Now, is it not passing strange, wholly inexplicable upon the orthodox theory, that this consideration is never once made use of or referred to in the remotest manner by the apostles or our Saviour himself, in urging sinners to come to Him for salvation? How can this be reconciled with the common doctrine? Let us now examine the narrative a little further.

The reason God gave for turning Adam out of the garden of Eden was, "Lest he put forth his hand and eat of the tree of life and live forever; therefore he drove him out," etc. What is it to live forever but to be immortal? Two of Webster's definitions of immortality are: "Life destined to endure without end;" "Life that shall never end." And one definition of eternal is "immortal." So that God cut him off from access to the tree of life, lest he should thereby obtain immortality or eternal life in sin. Now if man is inherently immortal or possessed of eternal life by nature, I should like to know how all the doctors of divinity, or all the theological schools on earth, can make sense out of the reason given for prohibiting him from access to the tree of life. 'Tis true they try to explain it away by saying, without a shadow of ground for it, that eternal life always means eternal happiness, which, they tell us, is what Christ came to bestow. Then it follows, unavoidably, that God cut Adam and all his descendants through him, off from the tree of life, lest he should thereby obtain eternal happiness. According to orthodoxy, then, God gave his only begotten and well beloved Son to die the accursed death of the cross to obtain for us what we might have had simply by eating of the tree of life. And we are called from the pulpit, fools, ignoramuses, infidels, disbelievers in the Bible, destitute of scientific knowledge, Sadducees, etc., etc., without end, because we do not believe such absurdities as these; but do believe just what God tells us in the plainest possible language. Nothing, then, we affirm, can be more evident from the Scriptural narrative, than that the object of Adam's probation and of our own probation through him as our head and representative, was eternal life, if he sustained the trial by obeying God; and death, or loss of life, if he failed by disobeying Him. This being conclusively shown from the inspired account, it follows with all force of a mathematical demonstration, that man is not in any part of his natural constitution, possessed of immortality or eternal life, which are synonymous terms; and the good sense of any unprejudiced reader will justify us in closing the direct Scriptural argument with an unqualified Q. E. D.

We shall now proceed to examine the sacred record to see what is the testimony of Scripture in all of its correlative utterances. We do not propose to designate every passage having a bearing on the subject, but enough of them to show what is the connected testimony of Holy Writ. Having established the fact of man's mortal constitution by nature from the Mosaic narrative, we ought reasonably to expect that the whole Bible will agree with his narrative. We do not pretend to say that every text is equally plain, or that taking a text now and then, detached from its connection with the system of revelation, it may not have some apparent difficulties, but this objection applies to all religious questions. It is because of this apparent conflict of texts with each other, that we find the church divided into such a great variety of sects, each honestly claiming they are right and the others wrong, because a few texts appear to sustain their views, and of course, conflict with texts upon which other sects base their theories or creeds. Another source of difficulty arises from the fact that our translators were men who fully believed in the immortality of the soul, and they have translated words and collocated passages contrary to their grammatical construction, to correspond with their established belief, where a correct translation or collocation would have sustained the opposite of their views. This is abundantly shown in a late work of Chancellor Halsted, of New Jersey, entitled, "THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE, ITSELF THE TEACHER AND ITS OWN INTERPRETER;" a work that ought to be in the hand of every theological student. But it is especially important in all investigations into the meaning of texts and passages, that we make them conform to the analogy of the Scriptures. All orthodox commentators admit the binding obligations of this rule, but in many things, practically, they disregard it. They should not lose sight of the truth, that God, before the creation of man, had arranged a definite plan by which all his operations were to be governed, and of course our understanding of the Bible must conform to the plan as He has clearly revealed it.

That plan, so far as its practical operation was concerned, began with the creation of man, and necessarily includes and is wrought out according to the nature of the being for whose interest the whole work was to be carried on and accomplished.

Now, as we learn from the record, man was made innocent, but placed under law, which law was made for the purpose of developing character; if the character developed proved to be in accordance with and according to the will of God, which would be manifested by obedience to the law under which he was placed, he was to secure the enjoyment of unending life; but if he decided to obey his own will in opposition to God's will, manifested by disobeying the command of God, he was to die, to be cut off from life. Man, as we all know, chose to disobey, and the threatened penalty was inflicted. "In (or after), for the preposition or prefix, Bait, or Beth, is defined in both ways, as orthodox critics have shown. "In the day thou eatest thereof—dying thou shalt die." Just here comes in the gospel plan of salvation, which is remedial in its nature, but with which we have nothing to do just now.

We will now quote a few of the corresponding passages to which we have alluded. The that soul sinneth it shall die; All the wicked will He (God) destroy; The end of the wicked shall be cut off; Evil doers shall be cut off; They that be cursed of Him shall be cut off; The transgressors shall be destroyed together; The enemies of the Lord shall be like the fat of lambs, they shall consume, into smoke shall they consume away; Are like the beasts that perish; They shall be as though they had not been; The day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, so that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. We see here an unbroken testimony running through the whole of the Old Testament. The testimony of the New will not, of course, conflict with that of the Old Testament.

John the Baptist, at the very beginning of his ministry, tells us of the wicked: He will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire. Our Saviour said: Broad is the road that leadeth to destruction; also, Ye shall all likewise perish; Ye shall die in your sins. Paul, after giving a catalogue of horrible sins, says: "Who knowing the judgment of God that they which do such things are worthy of death; whose end is destruction. Again: "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction; For the end of those things is death; Savor of death unto death; The wages of sin is death; Death has passed upon all men: As in Adam all die; Shall reap corruption." The Apostle James says: "Sin when it is finished bringeth forth death." Peter speaks of the perdition of ungodly men. Here we have die, death, perish, destroy, destruction, perdition, corruption, burn up, etc., as the uniform testimony of the whole Bible, to the entire mortality of man; they all indicate, in the most unmistakable manner, the coming to an end of existence, as opposed to the perpetuity of existence; they are quoted here only for this purpose. Nearly all of them, however, have an emphatic bearing upon the question, "What is the penalty of sin?" and should we take up that question, will receive a more detailed and critical examination in that connection.

While our orthodox brethren have to admit that there is no passage in the Bible that directly teaches the immortality of man, they claim that the Bible assumes the immortality of the soul, just as it assumes the existence of God. They tell us that there is no didactic declaration of the existence of God, but that the Bible everywhere assumes the fact. If they had said that they themselves assumed it to be a fact we would not have disputed it; but when they say the Bible assumes it, we deny the statement in toto. We say, without qualification, that the Bible never, in a single instance, assumes an important truth or truth of any kind. What is the meaning of the verb to assume? Webster defines it to take for granted or without proof—to take with arrogant claims, to arrogate; to take what is fictitious, Man may assume, and often does, as in the case before us; God never does. Yet while the Bible does not assume the fact, it does give numberless examples where there is so clear an implication of God's existence, that a positive declaration in the most didactic form, could not make it any more affirmative. For instance, in the very first line in the Bible we are told "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." It is self-evident that the fact of their creation by God necessarily implies his existence. The same implication holds good in every passage where God is said to perform any act whatever, and the Bible is full of such.

But we are not left to implication alone in proof of the existence of God. There are many places where the existence of God is positively affirmed, both by himself and by the inspired writers. We will refer to a few of them. 2 Kings xvi., 15, "Thou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth, Thou hast made heaven and earth." Jeremiah x., 10, "The Lord is the true God; He is the living God and an everlasting King; He hath made the earth by his power; He hath established the world by his wisdom, and hath stretched out the heavens by his discretion." Acts iv., 24. "Lord, thou art God, which hath made heaven and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is." Psalm lxxxi. 10, "I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt." Paul in Eph. iv., 4, 5, 6: "There is one body and one spirit; even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all; who is above all, and through all, and in you all."

There are many other places where God affirms his own existence, as, "I am God, and besides me there is none else." God at the burning bush announced himself as the "I AM." Dr. Scott says this "signifies I am He that exists." I believe all orthodox commentators agree with Dr. Scott. In Isaiah, chapters xliii., xliv., and xlv., there are more didactic affirmations of his existence, if possible, than these quoted.

2 TIMOTHY iii., 16.

I HAVE long ago observed that the passage rendered "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine," etc., has a Greek reading which omits the kai (and); and doing so, the original may very literally be rendered "Every God-inspired writing is profitable." Should the kai be retained, it may be rendered, "And every God inspired writing is profitable," etc. Such a rendering will agree better with the punctuation given by Griesbach, which is entirely different from that in the common version, and it serves to connect it with the preceding verse. In that verse the writer tells Timothy, that from a child he had known the holy writings, and then he adds "Every God-inspired writing is profitable." In this place our translators have more closely followed Beza than the original. I find that the translations of the Vulgate, Erasmus, De Sacy, the Spanish translation, and others agree with me. They had then, as we have now, writings which were not God-inspired.—JAMES KERR.—Am. Presb.

THE FUTURE LIFE.

[THE following communication was sent us from Indiana, by "AGAPEA," which he says is a "copy" of an article sent to Dr. FIELD, while our discussion was going on last season on the resurrection question. We give it place by request. The authoress is a most intelligent woman, and very familiar with the Life views.—EDITOR.]

DESTRUCTION WITHOUT RESURRECTION.

I once thought of Jesus' words, John v., 29, that the good and bad would live again, the latter for no other purpose but to die again. But a better acquaintance with the character of God, his foreknowledge, fixedness, and unchangeableness of purpose, together with the way the wicked of the past are uniformly spoken of, viz., as being "Destroyed, perished," etc., as well as of the testimony of the Evangelists "that the children of the resurrection are the children of God," led me back to the time when the "Lamb was slain," and from that standpoint to take a view of the works and ways of God. In so doing, I found it much easier to reconcile Jesus' saying with everything else, than everything else with his saying in the text in John quoted above, allowing He meant as is generally understood. This, then, was the only rational ground that seemed left to me; for Universalism I cannot believe, but I must, if the wicked are quickened by the Spirit of God; and there is no other way for any one to be, as I can see. To say the least, this alone looks God-like to me. The question proposed by some one on Luke xx., 34–37, viz., "Can this text be harmonized with the destruction of the wicked after a resurrection?" has doubtless puzzled many reflecting minds. I claim a place among these, and now venture to present the result of reflections on this subject in the form of a solution to the problem involved, if you deem it fitting and relevant. (It was not so deemed till more than twelve years after.)

The first thing to my mind that seems necessary in order to harmonize the resurrection of the wicked and their "second death" with the declaration of Luke, together with Mark and Matthew, that those "who are worthy to be raised are as the angels, and can die no more," is to find out the nature of the resurrection of the wicked, called by Jesus, the "resurrection of damnation," and also what the "second death" means; a phrase which we see does not occur till we get to that book of symbols—Revelations; although the wicked are frequently spoken of throughout the Bible as being destroyed. In order to get at an understanding of these, I invite the reader to go back with me to the time when "Eternal Life" was promised; which was "before the world began," Titus i., 2, and take a seat in the council chamber of those convened.

When the creation of man was the subject of the deliberation, the result of the deliberations of Infinite Wisdom we see at first appearing in the shape of helpless, dependent, knowingless, breathing forms; which, after a lapse of years, are capable of becoming independent, God-like creatures, the crowning work of creation, at first without much training. There is little except form to distinguish them from the rest of God's creatures; and like them they are flesh and blood, and must die. Yet to such beings is pronounced eternal life. The first great obstacle that presents itself is death; which effectually excludes all from such a hope, unless removed.

The Son of God offers himself a "ransom for all;" and thus death is at once virtually abolished, and all the unavoidable consequences of our helpless state and dying natures are at once overcome, till manhood begins to reign, or reason bears sway. In the sense that "death is abolished," we are all alive, and a virtual resurrection all may claim.

It remains now for each one to say whether in his or her case death shall be actual or not; and the same in regard to the resurrection. Arrived at the period when the laws of God are binding, this then becomes the question for him or herself to decide. If, then, instead of yielding an humble, glad, willing obedience to its claims, we prefer our own ways, we must feel the truth of Jesus' words, "he that believeth not is condemned already." Thus is the judgment of God eternal; ever against or in favor of each one, as the case may be, as fast as they come to years of accountability and choose their course. Do we seize this chance by forsaking the evil and choosing the good?

Then are we passed from "death unto life." Or do we prefer the pleasures of sin for a season? Then are we dead, virtually so, the second time; for the natural or first death we all know is for no fault or choice of ours; so "death unto death" is the irrevocable doom of those who intelligently make this choice, as well as of those who "sin without law," both being alike corrupting in their influence and incapable of being a "law to themselves."

Now what bearing have these remarks on the question proposed? Let us look over a little. The case as here presented stands thus: Jesus says those that believe not are condemned already. Condemnation must follow judgment; and all that remains after being condemned is the execution of the sentence, unless the criminal is pardoned and cleared; and as we have seen, all die once and are made alive again virtually, which must needs be done first in order to place mankind in a situation to avail themselves of the promises of Life. If this chance is forfeited, there is no chance for them. No Saviour to abolish death again and make them alive again; and "they know the judgment of God," that those who commit such things as "every body does, who does not love God," is "worthy of death;" and when such come to die, "there is no hope in their death." Their title to an actual resurrection is forfeited. Only those who have been "begotten again by the word of God," and are formed for, can enter into Life. The Son of Man is empowered to "execute judgment also," as well as to judge; and when the time shall arrive to make known his sentence, or when he shall "judge the quick and the dead," which seems necessary in order to make public what was before known only to the parties concerned and their God, He being alone capable of deciding justly as to their fitness or unfitness to live, all that seems necessary in the case is to do what he said he would, viz., "Raise them up," and leave those who are "laid in the grave like sheep" to their fate, in accordance with Jesus' words, "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." Their being quickened is sufficient proof of the fitness of the former, as is the non-quickening proof of the unfitness of the latter class. Then is their destruction known and sealed; and thus can the saying of Luke (and I might add Mark and Matthew) be true, that "they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, die no more; for they are equal to the angels," etc., and "God who calleth things that be not as though they were, is the God of all such, whether sleeping or waking; but he is not a God of the dead.

A PROPOSITION.

NILES, MICH., Jan. 19, 1869.

EDITOR HERALD: Allow me to trespass upon your time, from a desire to extend the the word of life to those of our friends who may possibly be enabled to receive the truth by a judicious course of procedure, which otherwise, and heretofore, has been all but impossible to do, from the fact that there existed a prejudice for fear the palladium of their stronghold might be taken, as this view has always been considered an attack upon their most sacred religion; which, if they but knew it, would but be, as it is of ours, their highest glory, and an all-powerful addition to their faith. Since many have been disarmed to such an extent as to be induced at least to read more thoroughly upon the great question of the after-life as we hold it; so to lead many a faithful one to entertain a more favorable regard and charitable feeling toward each other, thereby gaining advantage ground step by step, a position obtained only by carefully bringing before the mind for contemplation such books and arguments as will be allowed, which has been the base in this vicinity with the prolix and close analytical reasoning of our Dr. J. K. FINLEY, on those interesting subjects and answers now being published in your paper; which, by his known standing and Christian character, has disarmed prejudice to such a degree, as to have awakened thought long at rest on these vital questions, and we trust have taken a deeper hold than if they should have come from another source ever so well accredited. The means to extend the word of life we feel is furnished to our hands in these writings; we would therefore submit the matter to you for advisement, and if agreeable to you, by pledging our mite (for we are few of like faith) for the purpose of a re-issue of the same in pamphlet form. A few of us feel a deep and abiding interest in the word of life, and the truth of Robt. Lloyd Collier is verified, "that there are not ten sectarians in a thousand that have a clear idea of what they believe." If this ignorance among the masses is to be overcome, we must give them something they will read, or how can there be expected of such, an advancement at all? We pledge ourself to raise $30 toward the same when arrangements are effected. Waiting in the meantime for your sanction, I remain truly yours, young in the True Faith, "No Life out of Christ."

R. FOWLER.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—The proposition of our young friend is worthy of consideration; and we would be glad to see the writings of Dr. Finley embodied in a pamphlet and circulated far and wide. We cannot, at this time, make even a probable estimate of the cost. When his articles have all appeared we shall be able to speak more definitely, and trust there may be a sufficient demand to warrant their issue in pamphlet.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 27, 1869.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"GOD IS LOVE."

THE sermon on the above subject, by the Editor, has been published by request in a Tract, and is added to the "CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS." Hundreds of them have been sent out the week past, and we are now prepared to furnish any amount at short notice. There is an Appendix containing three pages on "LOVE" itself; and five pages occupied by a "REMINISCENCE" of the author of the sermon. This can be separated from the other part, if any do not wish to circulate it. The tract contains twenty-four pages, and is sold at $2 per 100, and postage when sent by mail, which is twenty-six cents additional.

To those who cannot pay for Campaign Documents, but will circulate them faithfully and judiciously where they will be read, we will send parcels as our funds will allow. Make known your wants, and we will do the best we can for you; but collect all the funds in your power, thus increasing our ability to work the more effectually. The Campaign Documents have done and are doing a good and great work. So we hear.

"ADVENTISM: THE MASK OF AT LAST."

IN our issue of Dec. 23, 1868, we published remarks on an article in the Voice of the West, which opened with these words:

"After a long time the author of "Adventism" has thrown off the mask. It was impossible to hide the fact that he ignored the two resurrections, generally held by Advent believers; though the attempt was made to conceal it in Adventism. The author of that work, after months of silence to the charge of a simultaneous and mortal resurrection of both saints and sinners, has come out in the Voice of the West with a programme of his 'resurrection and judgment.'"

In our remarks on his "programme" an important error occurred, and before we discovered it, the whole edition was printed. We immediately corrected it in our next issue, as follows:

"A CORRECTION.—In the HERALD of Dec. 23, fourth column inside, 13th line from the bottom, strike out '[the change.]' In the 5th line from the bottom, for 'precedes,' read follows."

We deeply regretted that these errors occurred, and made all the haste we could to correct them.

To our article the author of Adventism has replied, filling three columns of the Voice of the West, of Jan. 19. His virtuous "wrath is kindled" against us, especially for saying what we had no intention of saying, and what we corrected as early as possible. We presume the Voice overlooked our correction, or it would have suppressed so much of the reply of the author of Adventism as relates to that point; or, at least, have given our correction in a note. We therefore overlook the following expression in the reply:

"Can it be that George S. can stoop to such foul perversion as this to sustain a tottering system? I have hitherto supposed him to be an honest man, but mistaken in his theology; but must he throw himself into this dilemma to save a sinking craft?"

We accept the reproof for our negligence in suffering the error to occur in our article. But we suggest, inasmuch as we did give, in the paragraph going before the error, the exact words of the author of Adventism, if charity would not have suggested that there was no design to deceive, as our error could be easily detected, and was detected by our friends immediately?

Moreover, in the third column of his reply, among other quotations from our article, he gives our words, thus:

"But we have by this new invention, 'two stages in the resurrection of the righteous;' first, the 'coming to life;' after that, the 'change to immortality!'"

Would a discerning mind, with a little charity in exercise, not have seen that twice stating his view correctly, the one error was not intentional? and that a careful reader would see it, as our friends did, at first sight?

It might be expected that we should respond to some other parts of the reply of the author of Adventism; but the state of mind, he seems to be in, forbids it, at this time, except to give our readers an idea of the spirit that appears in his article. Here is the last paragraph but one. He says:

Why I have been so shamefully used by the editor of The Herald, to gratify his spleen against Adventism, I know not, unless it is because Adventism has been called for and circulated by thousands while his works of equal size have hardly gone by tens. Adventism was not written to combat The Herald's view, and it received no attention from the author only incidentally when opposing the popular idea of reward before the judgment; but the editor fancied himself the target, when he was hardly thought of by the author, and has been splashing around like a whale with a harpoon in him, till he has made himself so blind that he fancied he could see a "mask" to Adventism, and probably feared there were some heavy batteries there ready to deal death upon his favorite theory.

If our readers cannot judge for themselves, in view of such an explosion, as to the propriety of our taking any further notice, at present, of an article written in such a spirit, we are mistaken. We simply add, the insinuation in this last extract, that we hold the "idea of reward before the judgment" is a mistake. If any wish to know our views on that subject, they will find them in our tract on "The Judgment." We might, also, add that our "SIX SERMONS" on the Immortality question have probably had a circulation of one hundred and fifty thousand in this country, and ten thousand in England; so that we have not much "spleen" in reference to Adventism's superior circulation. After its author has time for sober reflection he may be noticed again.

"ADVENT CONFERENCES."

"MAKE us a king to judge us like all the nations." So said the Elders of Israel to Samuel, when he was old. The thing grieved Samuel, and he expostulated with them, and showed them the evil that would arise from such a course; but they would not hear, and replied, "Nay; but we will have a king over us; that we also may be like the nations;" etc. See 1 Sam. viii.

In 1842-3, it was often said by a prominent Advent leader of those days, and who still lives, "If we ever become a sect we will be the youngest daughter of the old MOTHER OF HARLOTS."

After the failure of the set time of those days, it was soon discovered that the same leader, with others, was disposed to take steps toward some sort of organization, manifestly to exclude such men or doctrines as they might think likely not to harmonize with their views.

A conference was called in 1845, but not as a permanent organization. Some "Resolutions" were passed, etc. The movement itself we were opposed to, and did not attend the conference. We regarded it as the entering wedge to a systematic organization so soon as the minds of a free people would bear it. How much or how long the voice of warning raised by ourself and some others at that time, retarded the movement that was destined to develop the "Youngest Daughter," we do not know. One thing however we do know, we have never by word or deed favored organizing conferences or churches with the name of Adventists, thus to become known as a sect; fully believing those who held the Advent or Life views were not called to any such work, but to spread these truths, as far as possible, among all professed Christians, whatever their organizations might be.

We have not sought to break up any of the churches that were in existence, or to persuade any one to leave those churches, if they could remain in them and be free to believe what their own convictions told them was the truth of God, and be allowed to let their light shine on others. Ministers, of course, belonging to those churches, if they embraced views new, or different from the church's standard, or creed, must, if faithful to their ordination vows, withhold their new views from their ministrations, or else withdraw from the ministry of such church. If they believed themselves called to preach the truth of God, and were satisfied their new views were contrary to the creed of the church with which they were connected, they must necessarily disconnect themselves from said church as a matter of good faith with the ministers of that body.

We have never, however, favored the formation of churches founded on our peculiar views, or as an organization with a distinctive name; fully believing such organizations were likely to hinder the advance of truth among other Christians. Yet we have not opposed the coming together of brethren and sisters in one locality and calling themselves a church of that locality, provided they did not tie themselves to a set of opinions which could not be changed by honest research and an interchange of thoughts one with another. Any other course we regard as tending to raise up lordships in the body, and so imperceptibly to destroy individual responsibility, and ultimately enslave the body to designing men, who would "seek their own, and not the things which are Jesus Christ's." On this ground we stand and have stood for the last near thirty years, we belong to Christ; and to him alone is our responsibility for what we teach.

We have lived to see not only churches organized, calling themselves "Advent Churches," but conferences by the same name. We have regretted this movement, foreseeing what we believe to be a tendency to lordship, and attempts to suppress any advance in knowledge, and a stereotyping process which would make the body just like any other sectarian organization, and as impenetrable to new truths as older sects, if not more so, from the idea that they are better than other sects because, as they suppose, they are in advance of all others.

We have seen this process of organizing conferences, especially, with deep sorrow. Next come "Resolutions:" advisory, of course, at first; but presently dictatorical; next, penal; excluding every one from their body who presumes to preach or teach what the majority of their body do not wish to have preached among them; thus coming to a level with all other bigoted and stereotyped sects against whom they have so often declaimed. Thus the point is reached and the place of the "Youngest Daughter" is occupied.

We have had occasion to speak against the proceedings of these self-created bodies several times; aware, however, that we incur their censure by so doing, and we have forborne as much as possible to speak against such a course, hoping the Lord himself would soon put an end to these things by His personal appearing and kingdom. It would seem, however, by this very delay of His appearing, the originators of these conferences are stimulated to extend their power, and we cannot avoid thinking of Aaron and Israel making a calf while Moses was in the Mount.

These reflections have forced themselves upon our mind in looking over the field and seeing the tendency to multiply conferences, and especially by the doings of "The late Conference at Buchanan," Mich. Among other things done at that meeting appear the following:

(1.) Resolved, That it is not only the right and privilege, but even the duty of the Advent-Christian people to maintain their church and conference organizations: not that we claim there is no genuine Christianity outside of our organization, but as a distinct people we have a great dispensational truth committed to our trust, viz; the immediate, personal advent of Christ, and its kindred doctrines.

(2.) Resolved, That all Adventists truly owe to them selves and to their brethren the work of identifying themselves with us in an organized capacity—thus merging their moral, social, and financial influence and aid in the cause we love, and thus augmenting churches and conferences in strength and influence, and increasing their power to do good to perishing men.

Here, in the first resolution, our "duty" is decided for us. Who authorized them to tell us what our duty is? Each of them may judge for himself what his own is, but we do not recognize or acknowledge any right this or any other self-constituted body has to tell us what our duty is. We meet this usurpation at the door. It is the first step of the "Youngest Daughter" to lord it over God's heritage; and if yielded to, our individuality is gone, and we exchange our responsibility to God for a subjection to men. The resolution is very modest in admitting that there may be some "genuine Christianity outside of our organization." "What! genuine Christianity" where men neglect their "duty!"

The second resolution declares, "That all Adventists" (of course, this means all believers in the Advent of Christ nigh) "truly owe to themselves and to their brethren the work of identifying themselves with us in an organized capacity," etc. To this we reply, "Who art thou that judgeth another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth. Yea, he shall be holden up: for God is able to make him stand." Rom. xiv., 4. You may judge of what you "owe," but you cannot judge for others.

We do not admit your right or authority to tell us what we "owe" in these matters. We honestly believe such organizations as conferences, where our duties are marked out and imposed on us by the few who happen to be members of them, are an usurpation of men over the minds and actions of God's freemen, unwarranted by the Bible, and of a most dangerous character; and that the history of the church for many long centuries past has shown these bodies to be the projectors and upholders of heresy and persecution; out of them grew the monstrous despotism of papacy with all its abominations; and her daughters have followed in her footsteps, denouncing all who would not conform to their conference and synodical decrees, thus forcing men to keep silence, whom God had enlightened, on pain of exclusion from Christian fellowship, if not following them with a bitter persecution, and death itself, if in their power.

What guarantee have we that the "Youngest Daughter" will do any better, as she grows older and begins to feel that she is a "power?" She already shows signs of feeling her importance, as the above resolutions show. Her voice seems to say, "Make us a king to judge us, like all the denominations around us: they are great by means of their organizations, conferences, synods, councils," etc; "let us be like them." Expostulate with her, and show her "the manner" (1 Sam. viii.,) of these denominations in shutting in error, and shutting out truth, and she stops not, but cries out, "Nay; but we will have" conferences "that we may be like the" churches around us.

As Samuel's voice was not heard, or his counsel regarded when he protested against this conformity of Israel to the nations around them, so it is not likely that our feeble protest will be heard so as to arrest these movements in bringing out the "Youngest Daughter," decked in the attire of her Mother—proscription, pains and penalties for non-conformity to her mandates. We may not live to see it; but, if the Lord does not arrest it by his coming or providence, some will see it.

This "Advent Conference at Buchanan" did not close without showing their determination to "be like the" other churches by adopting the following:

Resolved, That a General Conference of Advent Christians be called, to be composed of representatives from all the States and Territories of the United States, and the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Resolved, That this conference shall consist of delegates from the several Advent Christian Conferences of the United States and Canada, each conference being entitled to three delegates. Provided, that in States, Territories, or Provinces where there are no conferences, and isolated Advent Christian churches exist, such churches may unite and send one delegate.

So they aspire to rise to the pinnacle of other churches soon as possible. Next, they resolve to appoint a "committee, to make arrangements for the time and place of the meeting of said General Conference." It was then,

Voted, That the following commitee of seven ministering brethren act as a commitee to carry out the objects of the resolution: Eld. John Couch, Eld. S. G. Mathewson, and Eld. Miles Grant, of the East; Eld. Joshua V. Himes, Eld. O. R. Fassett, and Eld. William Sheldon of the West; and Eld. John Porter of Canada.

Thus ministers, as usual, in "the nations"—denominations around them, are to lead off in carrying out the work of organizations; and of course directing in the action of such bodies; and in fact controlling every thing relating to the affairs of such conferences, while inferior ministers, or less favored ones, together with the larger portion of laymen, must stand aloof and foot the bill of expenses, and thank their rulers for telling them their "duty," etc. Truly, these are days of improvement backward toward Egypt, from whence we came out to find the liberty of reading the Bible and understanding it for ourselves, as those who must give account each one for himself. Have we not fallen on the "perilous times" of "the last days?" We say to all, "WATCH."

"THE AGES TO COME."

RESPONSE TO BR. BISHOP. (SEE OUTSIDE.)

WE regret that our brother should seem to take our strictures on his previous article unkindly. We know they were written by us in the kindest spirit; and we hope to be kept from any other spirit in this response. In his article we have prefixed figures to the paragraph to which we reply, to avoid repeating his words. The reader will therefore please turn to his article and read his paragraph before reading our remarks under the corresponding figure.

"1." We think we did not "misconstrue" our brother's words. What he "designed to say" we had nothing to do with, because we had no knowledge of it. What he did say we stated in his own words at the head of our strictures. See HERALD of Dec. 16. In the same paper is his article entire. We gave his "language a fair construction," as it reads. If he "designed" to say something else, he should blame himself, and not us. His emendation, in the present article, does not help the matter, so far as we are concerned, for that which he says is "the only reason ever urged by age to come believers" was not urged by us at all, but was disclaimed, explicitly, at the outset of our strictures.

"2." To say that we "indorsed" what we explicitly disclaimed is a little too strong a statement to carry much weight with an unprejudiced mind. The quotation he makes from our words refutes the charge of our holding "that it is necessary to send the gospel to those who are alive when Christ comes, because they have not heard it before."

"3." To this paragraph we need only reply, "May not God do what he will with his own? Is thine eye evil because God is good" and merciful beyond what a mortal may think is fair? "Shall the thing formed say to him who formed it, Why hast thou made me thus? why dost thou give to others more than thou hast given to me?" Is not our brother himself "benefitted in a manner he could not have been benefitted" if he had lived five or six centuries ago? or even fifty years ago? If so, has "God's grace or mercy led him to perform a needless act?"

"4." Will our Br. "tell us why the gospel is preached in" this "age, if it is not for the purpose of saving" men? For all that he knows, "it is the best and only plan by which" we "could be saved" in the present age.

"5." The most we can make out of this long paragraph is, If God bestows grace on the heathen, who are left after Christ comes, it is "not grace" because they "do not need it." So it was quite needless for Christ to command his disciples to "Go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature;" for the "favor is not needed." We do not see but this is, truly, "another gospel." If our Br. is right in his position, "all the world" had "previously sufficient light, or truth," etc. What use, then, of becoming martyrs, as the disciples and others have been, to carry the gospel into heathen lands at all, seeing they had "sufficient light, or truth, previously," etc.?

"6." This is a lengthy paragraph. But our Br. seems to be lost in mists he has attempted to raise. He is professedly responding to our "strictures" on his previous article, and yet he does not touch it with this long paragraph at all. He is all the while beating the air. If he intend his shot for some one else, let him say so, and not make his remarks as if they applied to our position, for they do not. We disclaimed in our "strictures" any sympathy with the idea that "the gospel is preached to the heathen in the ages to come, because they have not had it before." We have made no such statement, and have repudiated it in the strictures of Dec. 16. Why, then, take this false position toward us? We cannot think it is with design. If through carelessness, we beg him to examine our strictures again, and not to make hasty conclusions. We affirm, there is not a sentiment in that article of ours that warrants the language our Br. uses toward us in this paragraph.

"7." This paragraph is a mere assumption. "If there is to be preaching in the ages to come it is" because God chooses to have it so. And who shall disannul his counsels?

"8." On this entire paragraph very little need be said, except to caution the reader not to forget that God does give more light to some than to others. He gave more to those who lived "after Christ came," the first time, than any nation or people ever had before, and may he not, if he pleases, give more light to those "left of the nations," after "Christ comes" the second time, than he has ever yet done, without being liable to the charge of "doing an absolute superfluous work?" The Jews were very much offended that Christ should be preached to the Gentiles, or heathen. Had they had light enough before? Truly, in a Jew's mind, it was a "superfluous work" to send the gospel to the heathen. Let not professed Christians show the same selfish spirit, lest we fall into a like condemnation.

"9." Our brother, after wasting words on an issue of his own raising, and entirely foreign to our "strictures," says at last, "We come now to . . . the main question." He leaves off where he should have begun. But how does he state "the main question?" Does he state it fairly? He says it is, "Will immortal saints, in the ages to come, preach the gospel to the heathen?" etc.

How does this statement agree with the facts? See our strictures, to which he professes to reply. We there stated the question which we defended, as follows: "Is there reason, from the statements of prophecy and promises, (to believe) that the gospel will be proclaimed to those 'left of the nations' after Christ comes?" In the statement of the question we said nothing of the agency to be employed in this work; we made no affirmation that it would be "the immortal saints." After defending the affirmative of our question, toward the close of our remarks, we said, "If God is pleased to employ his immortal saints in carrying the glad tidings to the 'left of the nations,' after Christ comes, we, for one, shall esteem it a blessed work." Our brother, it seems, is of a different mind in the matter: it appears to him to be "doing an absolute superfluous work." Well, we have no idea God will force any one to do it; but "if" he "is pleased to employ" us in such a work, we shall not dispute the matter, or reason about its being "superfluous:" we think he knows best what to set us about; and we certainly do not wish to be idle: we would rather be employed somehow, however humble the work might be.

Our Br. will see we do not consent to his changing our question for one of his own invention, and demanding of us to respond to his demand for a text that affirms his form of the question "in so many words." Can he tell us "where is the text that declares in so many words" what the immortal saints will do? or, what will be their employment? What will they do, brother? Where is the text that has "a positive declaration" what exactly they will be employed about? Shall we say, "Until such a text is brought forward there is no evidence to justify our faith," that they will have any employment at all? and so, for the want of the "one text," the old idea of "sitting on a cloud and singing Alleluia, forever," may be their glorified work.

We have an idea there will be no drones or idlers there. We think all such will stop this side of "the immortal saints." What work these saints will be employed in we do not pretend to know farther than they will be "kings and priests unto God and the Lamb." If they have a priesthood, it certainly implies their business will be to teach somebody; and if so, there must be some to be taught. And, as they are to exercise their office "on the earth," there would seem to be somebody or some creatures to be instructed. Are they men or cattle, or what kind of beings is it they are to be "kings and priests" to? Now, "we do not ask for anybody's construction of certain texts. . . We ask the clear, positive, unequivocal statement of" what class of beings "the immortal saints" are going to act as "kings and priests" to. Do you certainly know it will not be "the left of the nations?" If you have proof that it is not, please give us the text. In these remarks we have only shown our brother how his demands can be turned against himself, after having stated the question to suit himself. We shall, however, make our further remarks in view of our own statement of the question.

"Probation," implies trial; and trial implies two things, viz., the possibility of success and of failure. Under moral government, success brings reward; failure punishment. In view of this statement, let us look, first, at Zech. xiv., that our Br. has so summarily disposed of.

The first part of this chapter shows that the events open with a state of things that have not yet occurred, and is a clear statement of the coming of the Lord, when "his feet shall stand upon the Mount of Olives . . . and the Mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof," etc., ver. 4. Also, "The Lord shall be king over all the earth: in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one:" ver. 9. Likewise, it is a time in which most awful judgments are inflicted on the wicked, so terrible in character that it is said "there shall be no more utter destruction;" so that it is clear it is the last great drama of general wrath. See verses 10 to 15, inclusive.

Now we come to verse 16 and onward. "And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations ('all nations,' ver. 2), which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles. And it shall be that whoso will not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem, to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain. And if the family of Egypt go not up, and come not, that have no rain, there shall be the plague, wherewith the Lord will smite the heathen that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles. This shall be the punishment of Egypt and the punishment of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles."

Here, then, are the elements essential to a probationary state. Obligation imposed, and punishment to be inflicted in case of disobedience, on "every one that is left of the nations" after the judgment of that day when the Lord is King over all the earth. To say there is none left but the immortal saints is a flat contradiction of the text. Here is something more than "intimation" that "somebody" is to proclaim (which is preaching), to "the left of the nations" their obligation to submit to the King, the Lord of hosts, and the "punishment" to follow if disobedient. This certainly looks like preaching to them. We say not who does it, but clearly it is done. Not to dwell on this text, we hasten to another our Br. looked at and dismissed suddenly, viz., Isa. lxvi., 19.

That this text relates to what takes place after the Lord comes none can well deny: "For behold the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebukes with flames of fire; for by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh; and the slain of the Lord shall be many;" verses 15, 16. "For I know their works and their thoughts; it shall come, that I will gather all nations and tongues, and they shall come and see my glory; and I will set a sign among them, and I will send those that escape of them unto the nations," [naming several, and adding] "to the isles afar off," [not to particular nations only, as our Br. intimates, but to the isles afar off, which covers the other nations not called by name. And who are they? those] "that have not heard my fame, neither have seen my glory; and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles."

Can any candid man make anything else of that, but "preaching to the Gentiles;" and that, too, "after the Lord comes?" Somebody then preaches to them; whether it is the "immortal saints or returned Jews," or somebody else, we pretend not to say; but they are clearly persons who had escaped the judgments of the periods of the Lord's coming. Let us compare Zech. xiv., Isa. lxvi., with Psa. xxii., 27–31, thus;

"All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord; and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee; for the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is governor among the nations . . . . A seed shall serve him; it shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation." [Are these immortal saints? or, who are they? Well] "They shall come, and shall declare his righteousness unto a people that shall be born, that he hath done this." Here, again, it looks as if somebody will preach after "the kingdom is the Lord's. . . . unto a people that shall be born." Will our Br. take the responsibility of saying these preachers were not "immortal saints?" We do not say they are, but can he prove they are not?

The evidence is not so scant, as our brother seems to imagine, in proof that there is an age or ages to come wherein there will be probation to some "left of the nations;" and of course somebody to act as priests to teach and instruct them. We have only space to notice now one or two more passages. Rev. xv. John had seen the great wine-press of the wrath of God trodden, in the previous chapter, and he now sees victors "standing on the sea of glass having the harps of God. And they sing the song of Moses . . . and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy; for all nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest." Here are the redeemed saints telling what is to be done after God's judgments are past, or made manifest. If these things are so, see how this text harmonizes with Zech. xiv., Isa. lxvi., Psa., xxii., and a multitude of like texts which we may hereafter present to our readers. Our articles on the "Literal Fulfilment of Prophecy" may, perhaps, sufficiently bring out the texts referred to.

As to our Br.'s statement that the nations named, Isa. lxvi., do "not now exist upon the earth," we have only to say, it is a mere assumption. Nations often change their names without destroying their location. They are called by the names then known; that those names are lost does not prove that such people do not now exist. But "the isles afar off" do exist, and will exist; and this sufficiently covers the ground of a future proclamation to those "left of the nations" after the Lord comes.

We will mention one more text touching the matter at issue, viz., Zech. viii., 20–23, which will be seen to harmonize with and confirm all the others. "Thus saith the LORD of hosts; it shall yet come to pass, that there shall come people, and the inhabitants of many cities; and the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, Let us go speedily to pray before the LORD, and to seek the LORD of hosts; I will go, also; yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the LORD of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the LORD. Thus saith the LORD of hosts: In those days, it shall come to pass that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew" [have it a literal or spiritual one, as you like], "saying, We will go with you; for we have heard that God is with you."

Here are enough "Thus saith the LORD" to satisfy the most incredulous, unless callous to conviction, that the gospel is to be proclaimed by somebody in a manner, and to be attended with a success that never yet has been known. If these things have been done in the past, show us when and where. But beyond all doubt, in our mind, they are in the future, either before or after Christ comes the second time. If before, then the prospect of a speedy return of our Lord is cut off. If after, then there is a glorious work to be done in the hated "Age, or ages to come." The spirit that hates that work, seems to us, like that manifested by the Jews at or near the first advent. Let us be patient. Time will reveal God's will in all these matters, and verify his word.

THE MORTAL RESURRECTION.

DIALOGUE CONCLUDED.

A.—How d'ye do, this evening, Br. B. I'm right glad to see you again. If you're all ready I'll give you my last text.

B.—It will be very desirable. Make the best of it. Strengthen it all you can.

A.—Well, here goes. "And the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world." That's it. Christ gives his flesh for the life of the world; yes, the world: not a part of it. If he gives his flesh for the life of the world, then all the world will live again, whether they have been good or bad. That is the way that God is the Saviour of all men: that is the way that in Christ shall all be made alive: that is the way justification to life came upon all men. You can't dodge that text anyhow. Say on, Br. B.; what do you think of it?

B.—You have forgotten that you have already given up some of those texts that you have referred—"

A.—Yes, yes; I forgot. Well, give us your idea of the text that I commenced with.

B.—It is found in John vi., 51. I need not utter many words concerning it. Jesus has declared that he is the "bread of life," which came down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not die. Then he declares, "I am the living bread which came down from heaven. If any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever; and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I give for the life of the world."

A.—That's it.

B.—Wait a while. I will quote further: "The Jews therefore strove among themselves, saying, How can this man give us his flesh to eat. Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink his blood ye have NO life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day." I need not quote further.

Notice; he gives his flesh for the life of the world, but he states that unless they eat of that flesh there is no life in them. That would preclude their having an after life. They are already reckoned as dead. They are condemned already. They have no reason to consider themselves as "alive from the dead." But he that eateth of Christ shall live by him. "As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father, so he that eateth me shall live by me. This is that bread that came down from heaven: not as your fathers did eat manna and ARE DEAD: he that this bread shall live forever."

Jesus is the Saviour of all men in the sense that he offers his flesh for them; but if they eat not of that bread, then they must perish. It is impossible for them to live by Christ unless they eat of him. That is the way the Saviour has decided the matter.

A.—Beat—beat—beat. I give in. I've been in the wrong. Now, brother, I've got to own up. I've been so mad with you in days gone by that I called you a fool and a knownothing, and I've tried to set folks against the doctrine you preached, and have helped to keep you out of a good many churches where they always thought considerable of you, though they didn't like your doctrine. I've treated you coldly, and scolded, and fretted and worried, until I got to be as sour as vinegar. I was mad as a hornet with Storrs. Grim I hated, Bishop I called any thing but gospel names. Then there was Campbell, Matthias, and a lot of others that I called dry backsliders and lots of other names. All the time I had no spirit to pray. Hatred was in my heart, and love was driven out. I ask pardon for all.

Now I mean to eat of Christ and to abide in him that I may not forever die. God bless you.

B.—Praise the Lord. May his grace, mercy, and peace abound toward you. Farewell.

"SUBSTANTIAL" SOUL.

BISHOP CLARK, of Rhode Island, recently delivered a lecture in New York on the subject of "Man, or the living machine." He commenced by calling attention to the complicted machinery necessary to imperfectly represent the motions of the heavenly bodies in an orrery. Suppose, he remarked, the great machinery of the universe had to be moved by such mechanical devices. How it would be encumbered by springs, and pulleys, and ropes, and levers. What elastic cords would be required to allow the comets full scope and play in their eccentric courses. But these heavenly bodies are held in their places and impelled in their motions by an invisible force. He said there were very many machines in the audience as wonderful and as complicated as the universe. Every man is a machine of the most wonderful structure, in which all the principles of chemistry and dynamics are brought into play. Man is a machine, not only capable of wonderful achievements, but possessing the power of reproducing itself. Man exhibits in his own organism all other kinds of machinery. He is a complete locomotive. He contains a complete system of telegraph wires and batteries, through which information is conveyed from one part of his body to another. The speaker was eloquent upon the ages that preceded the creation of the human hand. When great monsters, beneath whose tread the earth trembled, lived, and beautiful birds built their nests in the trees. Insects innumerable swarmed in the air; yet no progress, no improvement was made until the human hand was created, with the human intellect to guide it.

The Tribune's account of the lecture says, the lecturer regarded "the soul as substantial, requiring food and favorable conditions of climate as much as the body. It was the soul that saw, and heard, and, in fact, that took cognizance of external things through the senses. The image might be formed on the retina of the dead man; his tympanum might vibrate, but the dead man could not see and hear. If the soul could see, and feel, and hear through these physical organs, why not without them?"

Our Christian brother, then, the Rt. Rev. Thomas M. Clark, Bishop of Rhode Island (we cannot admire his multiplicity of titles) maintains that it is the soul that sees and hears, and takes cognizance of external things through the senses. We heartily agree with him as to the fact, but widely differ as to what the soul is; he holding it to be an immortal something which inhabits the visible structure; we that it is the man himself, the material organization. Upon the assumption that it is an immortal soul that sees and hears in the case of a human being, can Mr. Bishop Clark tell us what it is that does precisely the same thing in the case of other animals? Does his theory invest them with immortal souls? His logic inevitably involves it. He asks, "If the soul can see, and hear and feel through physical organs why not without them?" We will reply by asking him a question. When a man is subjected to the influence of chloroform, or other powerful anæsthetic, a suspension of nervous power is effected, during which he can neither see, hear, nor feel; but is wholly unconscious. If he possesses a conscious entity that can see, feel, and hear without the agency of physical organs, why can it not do so while those organs are temporarily rendered insensible? Or, in other words, how is it possible to produce general anæsthesis? According to the Bishop's idea of man's nature, give a man a certain quantity of a powerful anæsthetic, and he will know nothing; give him enough to stop his breathing, and he at once knows more than all the world beside. Marvellous logic! Stupendous thought! Whence did he receive it? We know it was not from the word of God. Paul said that a bishop, among other qualifications, should be "apt to teach." We are simple minded enough to suppose the faithful old soldier of the cross meant "apt to teach" the truth. But then, Paul did not live in this enlightened age; and if his lot had been cast in this part of the stream of time, his doctrines, so unpopular in these days, would be an impassable barrier to his ever being "Bishop of Rhode Island."

A clerical friend, of unquestionable orthodoxy, related to us, the other day, the following incident. A friend of his, a country merchant, being one day in a loft of his store, descried some cattle in a field where they did not belong. He, almost involuntarily remarked aloud, though no one was with him, "I wish those cattle were out of that field." His dog, a sagacious fellow, who was at the time standing by him, immediately walked down stairs, went into the street, and ran to the field and drove the cattle from it. No remark was addressed to him; he simply saw the cattle in the field and heard his master's remark. What was it that saw and heard in this case? Consistency would compel Bishop Clark's theory, which is pretty nearly the popular one, to answer, "A separate entity called the soul." The image of the field and cattle was impressed upon the dog's retina, and from that, by the Bishop's telegraph system, was conveyed to his brain; while the words of his master fell upon his ear, and their sentiment was by the same telegraphic process likewise conveyed to his brain. The two enabled him to comprehend the situation of affairs, and his action plainly indicates that he reasoned, in language of his own, "The cattle are in the wrong place: my master wants them driven out, and I will do it." This was an intelligent act on the part of the dog; one which he would not have performed had he been less experienced in the service of his master. When that dog dies, the same "image might be formed on the retina;" "his tympanum might vibrate" to the same words but the dead dog could neither see nor hear, therefore, if the bishop was right it was an immortal dog, or an immortal soul in the dog, which saw and heard. We think, however, he would reject this conclusion, notwithstanding it is no less reasonable and legitimate than the one he accepts in the case of the dead man.

If God can and does endow brutes (as is clearly the fact) with power to see, feel, think, exercise the volition of will, and reason without being invested with a theological "soul-entity," why may he not endow a man with the same powers of a quality capable of vastly greater improvement, and constituting him a subject of moral law? That he does, is consistent both with reason and revelation. Few persons are so ignorant of the various forms of animal existence as not to know there is to be found among them almost every quality in the scale of mental development until mankind is reached, the lower orders of which are little above the higher orders of brutes.

It will probably not be denied that all vertebral and brained brute animals are susceptible of mental improvement in some degree and some of them, among the higher orders, to not a little. There is little less diversity in the degrees of human intellectual development than exists among the inferior orders of animal creation. This difficulty, however, our Rt. Rev. brother dexterously surmounts by affirming the soul to be "substantial requiring food and favorable conditions of climate as much as the body." Of course. How else could he explain why some people, or whole classes of people have so much more intelligent souls than others? But, alas, just here the bishop has kicked himself entirely out of orthodox traces. The soul isn't immaterial, not it. It is "substantial, requiring food and favorable conditions of climate." At one fell swoop he has divested it of every feature peculiar to orthodox notions of its immortality. As Bishop Clark has progressed so far as to have learned that souls are "substantial," and that they require favorable conditions of climate, it may not be too much to hope he will yet learn that the Bible soul is the man himself; and that for immortality he is wholly dependent upon a resurrection from the dead, or a change, if alive at the coming of the Lord; which can only be had by and through Jesus Christ, the LIFE-GIVER. May he be led to know and love the truth.

THE SMITING OF THE IMAGE.

"This image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his thighs of brass, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, that smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors."—Dan. ii., 32–35.

THESE words are quoted in support of the view that advocates the resurrection of the wicked dead. We admit that the gold, the silver, the brass, and the iron represent the kingdoms of Babylon, Medo-Persia, Grecia and Rome; but we do not admit that it is necessary that all the individuals who composed these kingdoms in the past should have a resurrection in order to be broken to pieces together by the "stone that was cut out (of the mountain) without hands."

In the eighth chapter, Daniel's vision of the same events is recorded. He sees four beasts—one, like a lion, with eagle's wings; the second, like a bear, with three ribs in its mouth; the third like a leopard, with four wings upon its back; the fourth, a dreadful, and terrible beast with iron teeth, and ten horns. Our opponents admit that these beasts represent the four great kingdoms that were symbolized by the four kinds of metal in the image.

Daniel says, "I beheld till the thrones were cast down (lit., set, placed,) and the Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like pure wool: his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him: thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him: the judgment was set and the books were opened . . . . I beheld even till the (fourth) beast was slain, and his body destroyed and given to the burning flame. As concerning THE REST OF THE BEASTS, they had their DOMINION taken away; yet their LIVES were prolonged for a season and a time."

It is evident from these words that Medo-Persia, Grecia, and Babylon exist at the time of the smiting of the image upon the feet; or, in other words, at the time of the judgment upon the fourth or Roman beast. They are called "beasts" still, but they have no dominion: yet their lives are prolonged for a season and a time. Surely there is nothing in all this to indicate the resurrection of all the dead who have composed these kingdoms in the past: if it does, then the Ancient of days put, the wicked Romans into the fire "a season and a time" sooner than he does the Babylonians, Persians and Grecians.

In the vision of the image, the beast does not swallow the head; the belly does not swallow the head, breast and arms; the legs do not swallow all the preceding. Neither do the beasts devour each other. The image still exists: the beasts are still four. The DOMINION of the head, the breast and the belly, or in other words, of the first three beasts, is taken away, but their lives are prolonged.

Newton remarks; "But if they (the Jews) say, 'How can he break in pieces the gold, the kingdom of the Babylonians, destroyed long ago? how the silver, the kingdom of the Persians? how the brass, the kingdom of the Macedonians? for these are past long ago, and are come to an end—how can he destroy kingdoms which are already destroyed?' But to destroy others in which these are included, amounts to the same thing."

One thing is certain: no part of the image is represented as passing out of existence until all the features of the iron or Roman empire have been fully developed. The three beasts that are synonymous with the gold, silver and brass, are not represented as dying and having a resurrection, but as living even until after the judgment has set upon the fourth beast. The DOMINION of the gold, silver, and brass, or of the first three beasts, was taken away, but their lives were prolonged. Hence, there is no difficulty in seeing how all can be broken to pieces together.

These thoughts are suggested in answer to the oft repeated assertion that the resurrection of the wicked is taught in the vision of the image. Such a doctrine cannot be found there. May the Lord open the eyes of his children to see the blessed truths that are shining into our hearts. And may our hearts be open to receive more truth. We have had to unlearn much: we yet may have much more to unlearn. The Lord will give wisdom to all who ask for it. Praise his name, for the instruction that he has already given us. At times my cup of joy overflows. Every portion of truth causes the waters to rise higher and higher. Truly the word is meat and drink.

May grace, mercy, and peace abide with the readers of our paper, and with all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, is the prayer of your affectionate brother in Christ.

THE DISCUSSION.

IT came off at Neptune Hall according to announcement. The hall was well filled with an attentive audience. Br. Hanford had matters pretty much his own way. His opponent evidently was not qualified to discuss the question, and would do well to put his cause into abler hands. The discussion was conducted by both parties with an excellent spirit.

F. H. BURBANK.

EMELINE WOOD, Albany, N. Y., writes: Will you send me more tracts? I have distributed all I have received. I hope it may be so ordered that Br. Wolcott's tent may come here next summer. The word saith, Whatsoever we ask in Jesus' name, believing we shall have it. I do believe. So I am distributing tracts, hoping it may be the means of preparing the way for a tent meeting here in the summer. I wish to do all I can while I can see, for I have been almost blind and unable to sew. My eyes have been much worse this week. I have been much cheered by a letter, and their mite, from Br. and Sr. Hamilton. May the Lord bless them. How their letter did cause my heart to rejoice in God my Saviour; and it gave me courage to go on in the strength of the Lord. Also, another dear Br. sent me encouragement. May God reward him abundantly. I do feel that I have the prayers of many. May God be very merciful to us all. My faith in the promises is strong; for the word saith, "He is faithful who hath promised; who also will do it." God is deepening his work in my heart; and though afflicted, I lift up my heart and rejoice that our Father in heaven pities our helplessness. He calls us to "lift up our heads, for our redemption draweth nigh." I feel to say in my heart, "Come, Lord Jesus." Dear ones, be encouraged. May our blessed Saviour own and prosper our labors abundantly this year, and give us all things richly to enjoy.

E. L. PARKER, Mt. Morris, Mich., writes: I am an old man of sixty-eight years. I am doing all I can to advance the truth respecting the coming of Christ the LIFE-GIVER, his kingdom and the inheritance of the saints; believing in the sleep of the dead, the resurrection of the saints and the utter destruction of the wicked. Had I the money I would send for a dozen of "Bible vs. TRADITION;" but it is only little I receive for preaching and spend all my time in the work. The doctrines is new to all in this county. I have been breaking new ground for the year past. A few old professors have come into the truth, and now a number of the unconverted are inquiring the way. I would be very happy, if I had the means, to scatter the light more widely, distributing tracts, pamphlets and books; but I must be content to do what I can and trust in my Father for the rest. Your Br. in hope of a resurrection out from among the dead ones.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Friends of Jesus and his truth, help us to send tracts, etc., to such laborers: These calls must be heeded. We shall send some tracts this week.

OBITUARY.

FELL ASLEEP in Jesus, August 11, 1868, Br. JOHN THOMAS SWEET, of Providence, R. I., aged 53 years and 5 months.

Br. Sweet's death was caused by the fall of a large stick of timber which he was assisting to hoist with a derrick at the city coal yard, which struck him upon the head cutting a large gash, also upon the neck, severing the spinal cord, causing a paralysis of the whole body below the wound. He was unable to move any part except his head a very little, without assistance, for two weeks and four days. He remained in this suffering condition, growing weaker and weaker until he could not speak. He was conscious to the last; when he fell asleep without a struggle.

His greatest desire was, that he might live to see Jesus come. He fully realized that death is an enemy, and that without the coming of Jesus to raise his dead it would be an eternal sleep.

Br. Sweet, since the commencement of the preaching of the good news of the soon coming of our Lord, has been a firm believer in the time of the advent as indicated by the signs of the times and prophetic periods.

He has for several years believed the great crowning truth of no resurrection except for those who have an interest in Christ, the great LIFE-GIVER.

Having known Br. Sweet for a long time I feel assured that he sleeps in Jesus; and although called so suddenly to give up the life that now is, yet having found a vital union with him who is the "Resurrection and the life," he has thereby secured that better life which is to come; and in a calm, unbroken, unconscious sleep he is waiting the manifestation of the sons of God.

He leaves a wife and daughter, who mourn his loss.

We know they will come again from the land of the enemy in the morning of the resurrection: then to be clothed with immortality, and never again say, "I am sick;" sickness, sorrow, pain and death, are felt and feared no more.

Poetry.

"Only a Little While."

"Only a little while," O, patient heart!
Only a little while to bear the cross!
Thine of earth's woe is but a trifling part;
No time to mourn thy loss.

Only a few short hours the sun is hid;
Stars, even then, are glimmering in the sky;
So little joys your darkness gleam amid,
And yet you pass them by!

And he is dead but for "a little while;"
Think of the morn when he shall rise again;
Think of a deathless life beneath God's smile,
And free from grief or pain.

"Only a little while," poor, stricken one;
Bear up, and bravely smile above the woe;
After the night will rise a brighter sun,
And tiny stars yet show.

"Only a little while;" Death is a sleep
From which we waken to a fairer day;
Nay, stop not in the press of life to weep—
Soon grief will pass away.

Children's Department.

"Mamma, I'm God's."

My Dear Young Friends: It is a long time since I have had a talk with the little readers of The American Presbyterian. I think you would like to hear about a little girl who once startled her mother in Philadelphia by saying to her, "Mamma, I'm God's."

I met her in Leamington, in England, a few months since, and her mother told me all about how her dear child learned to say these words. I think it will interest you to hear the story.

She came with many other children to one of my children's meetings in Calvary church in Philadelphia, a few years ago, just to hear some stories; but her good mother had been praying most earnestly that her daughter might hear some words about the Saviour's great love to us that would make her feel what a sinner she was not to love him in return. And God answered that mother's prayers.

At the close of the first meeting a good many of the little ones were weeping for their sins. They felt that they had broken God's good laws, and that they deserved to be punished. But we told them that Jesus Christ, God's only Son, had suffered on the cross for sinful children, and that God could now receive them and forgive them all their sins, only for Jesus' sake, "who loved us and gave himself for us."

After the ministers and Christians present had spoken and prayed with the children, one by one, there were still a good many when the time came to close the meeting, who felt their sins a heavy burden, and we told them as soon as they got home, to go at once into their own rooms, and to kneel down and give themselves right up to God, as their loving Father, and that he would receive them as his own dear children for his Son's sake, that he would forgive them all their sins, and at last take them to live with him in his beautiful home in heaven.

This little girl just believed every word that was told her; and so, when she got home, she did not even stop to speak to her mother, whom she loved dearly, but she passed right by her and went up to her own room and was there for a good while.

Her mother wondered at this, for her little daughter never did such a thing before.

After a long time she came down to the drawing room, and said to her mother, "Mamma, I'm God's."

Her mother looked her full in the face but did not say a word.

Again the little child said, "Mamma, I'm God's."

Even then, her mother, who was a good Christian, was taken so by surprise that she did not answer a word. After a little, her child, still looking earnestly at her mother, asked, "And have you nothing to say to me?"

"Ah, yes, my child, sit down and tell me all about it."

She then sat down and told her weeping mother what we have told you.

And she closed by saying, "I did give myself up to God, and I know he received me and forgave me all my sins for Jesus' sake who died for me."

From that day that child showed by her changed life that she was truly a child of God, and that he had really changed her heart. She was as happy as a lark, day by day. Before, she had often given her mother a deal of trouble, but from that day to this, he has been the comfort of her beloved parents. Several years have now passed away, and she is still clinging to the Saviour, and what is better still, she is doing all she can to lead others to trust and love him.

A few months ago, when I was holding some children's meetings in Leamington, I saw her among those who were asking, "What shall I do to be saved?" She was pointing them to the Saviour, and telling them that he had suffered, "the Just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God." She is now with her parents going to Jerusalem, to see the place where the loving Jesus "was wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities."

In a nice little letter to me she says: "Several years ago, during a course of meetings held by you in America, I gave my heart to Jesus. I still love my Saviour dearly, for 'He first loved me and gave himself for me.' Pray for me that I may daily grow in grace. . . . We are soon to visit that land where Jesus lived and died, and I expect much pleasure in reading your 'Sketches of Palestine,' in those places which it describes.

"Your affectionate friend,

Now, my dear little reader, can you truly say: "I am God's?" He is as ready to forgive you as he was that little girl in Philadelphia. Stop and think how much the dear Saviour suffered in order that God might forgive us and make us his own obedient children.

Read the twenty-third chapter of Luke, which tells about the dreadful death the loving Jesus endured for us. And then go away alone and kneel down and offer this

Child's Prayer:

"O Lord! I know I have not been thine; I have not loved thee nor obeyed thee. I am sorry for it. I am sorry for all my sins. But O, I am the most sorry that I have never loved and trusted our precious Saviour who bled and died on the cross that we guilty sinners might be saved. O God, forgive me all my sins, and change this wicked, hard heart, and receive me as thine own child, and then I, too, can truly say, 'I am God's.' This I ask for Jesus' sake." Amen.—Am. Presbyterian.

"The Ages to Come."

BY ELD. S. W. BISHOP.

1. Under the above heading we find an article in the Herald of Life, made up of strictures on our article in the same number, headed "God seen in his Works." In those strictures, if we are not mistaken, our language is entirely misconstrued from its real import. We are there made to say that the advocates of a future age of probation after Christ comes, urge as a reason why the gospel is to be preached to heathen nations in that age, is because God is necessitated, from being placed under obligation to said heathen nations, to cause that the gospel be preached to them. This we did not say, so it appears to us, even by implication. No such idea is found in our article, by any fair construction of its language. What we did say, or designed to say, is this, that the only reason ever urged by "Age to come" believers why the gospel is to be preached to the heathen after Christ comes, in any conversation ever had with them on this point (and we have talked with not a few), is because they have not previously heard it.

2. To our mind this same reason is endorsed, if not clearly urged, by the author of these strictures. He says, "If the gospel is to be preached to any left on the earth after Christ comes, it will be done by grace, or of the free gift of God's mercy."

On this we ask, will God's grace or mercy lead him to perform a needless act? If the mercy of God leads him to appoint that the gospel shall be preached to heathen, after Christ comes, does not this conclusion force itself upon our minds that it is for the purpose of benefitting them, in a manner they could not have been benefitted had this appointment not been made? So it looks to us.

4. Will some one tell us why the gospel is to be preached to heathen in the next age if it is not for the purpose of saving them? or, is it merely to gratify the fancy of those who preach it? If we allow that the preaching of the gospel, in the next age, to heathen nations, is for the purpose of saving them, and if we allow that God's wisdom is as perfect as his sovereignty is all powerful, from the fact that this is the plan he has devised to save them, it is the best and only plan by which they could be saved.

5. Suppose it is of grace, what then? Does that fact change these conclusions? Not at all. Grace, or favor bestowed on those who do not need it, is not grace. It is a mere waste of kind intentions. The very idea conveyed in the sense of the word is that the recipient of God's favor needs the blessing given. If the favor is not needed, the work of bestowing it is absolutely superfluous. The reason why God's mercy leads him to bestow grace or favor upon any of Adam's race is because they need it. "God so loved the world" that he gave his Son to save them. If mankind had needed no Saviour, none would have been provided. God had purposed man's salvation, and this purpose laid the necessity upon him to send Christ into the world as the Saviour of those who believe. But the necessity was of his own creation, and does not originate in any obligation due the race. Precisely thus is it in the case before us. If the purpose of God has fixed a plan that the gospel shall be preached to heathen nations after Christ comes, it is because they need it. And they can need it only on the principle that they have not previously had sufficient light, or truth, to enable them, by having faith in it, to form a character in harmony with divine mind. Had [they] had such light, or truth, its rejection would have doomed them to eternal death, as the receiving it would have entitled them to an endless life, on the principle laid down by the author of these strictures; which principle we will show by-and-by, by quoting his own language.

6. We are now prepared to state a principle. James positively declares that "The wisdom that cometh from above is . . . without partiality." Impartial justice would require that every man, and every class of men, who are placed in precisely the same relative position to the divine plan, shall be dealt with just alike. Therefore, we repeat, if the reason why the gospel is preached to heathen in the "ages to come," is because they have not heard it before, the same reason, on the principle of impartiality, would demand that all who have died in the past in precisely the same condition of ignorance, shall be raised from the dead to hear the same gospel, under the same advantageous circumstances. It amounts to nothing with us to argue God's sovereignty in carrying out a partial arrangement. I am well aware of the fact that God will do as he pleases "with his own," but I am led to inquire, in the language of one of old, "shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" I have very often, in the past, heard precisely the same argument, based on God's sovereignty, urged to prove the doctrine of unconditional predestination. But I have never yet been convinced that because God has absolute power he will lay aside one of his attributes. His impartiality is an eternally fixed principle in his character, and he will never do anything contrary thereunto. Consequently, if there is to be preaching done to heathen, after Christ comes, it must be done to all who have lived and died heathen in the past.

7. If there is to be such preaching done in the "ages to come," it is for reasons shown above.

8. But the author of these strictures has shown, in the article we are reviewing, that no such reason exists in the case of heathen nations. His language is as follows: "He (God), makes no man responsible for that he never had and could not obtain. He knoweth who, among all nations, and in all ages, have acted up to the light or means they have had, and marks them for his own when he makes up his jewels: and though they have never seen or heard of the written word of God, yet he has 'not left them without a witness,' which they have 'given them in themselves.' Though their light may be dim, God is not unmindful of their struggles to conform to it, and he knoweth if they had the light we have they would improve it, and so he counts it to them for righteousness, through Jesus, though as yet they have never heard that name by the hearing of the outward ear." To this we subscribe our most hearty approval. It contains our views nearly in the precise language in which we would have been pleased to have stated them. Now Paul in Rom. i., 19, 20, and ch. ii., 12–15, applies this same principle to all the heathen. This being true of them, to ordain that the gospel shall be preached to any of them in the future, after Christ comes, is to do an absolutely superfluous work. This a God of wisdom will never do. In all we have said above, let no one get the idea that we charge the author of the article we are considering, with intentionally misrepresenting us in our views, for we entertain no such thought.

9. We now come to consider the main question at issue, viz., Will immortal saints, in "the ages to come," preach the gospel to the heathen, or "the left of the nations?" If they will, where is the text that declares it in so many words? We ask barely one text that contains such positive declaration. And until such text is brought forward, there is, with us, no evidence to justify our faith in such a proposition. We do not ask for anybody's construction of certain texts, or for any inference drawn from any text or texts. We ask the clear, positive, unequivocal statement of the fact, if fact it be. The words, "left of the nations," occurs in Zech. xiv., 16, but in this text, so far from declaring any such thing, there is not the slightest intimation that anybody is to preach to them, much less that immortal saints are to do it in the "ages to come."

Isa. lxvi., 19, is quoted by age to come believers as proof that immortal saints and restored Jews are to preach the gospel to heathen nations after Christ comes. But does the text say so? We answer, not one word is said in the text about either class. It does read, however . . . "I will send those that escape of them" (the nations) etc. But who knows that "them that escape of the nations" are either immortal saints or returned Jews? I do not know it, from the fact the text does not even intimate any such thing; and for this same reason I do not believe anybody else knows any such thing. Mark well, these "escaped of the nations," are sent to particular nations named, to wit, Tarshish, Juel, Lud, Tubal and Javan. If this text teaches that the gospel is to be preached to anybody in the "ages to come," it is to these very nations named. Not one of these nations now exist upon the earth, consequently, if this preaching is to be done after Christ comes, from the fact that these nations have long since passed away into death, they must be raised from the dead in order to hear the preaching. Here again this theory brings up to the same conclusion; probation in the age to come to resurrected heathen nations.

Two Little Horns.

In the book of Daniel there are two little horns brought to view agreeing in nothing but the name. The horn of Dan. vii., had eyes and a mouth; that of Dan. viii., had no such appendage. The first—"shall speak great words against the Most High and shall wear out the saints of the Most High." Dan. vii., 25. The second "magnified himself even to the Prince of the host," (or put Christ to death. Was that Papal? No, it was Pagan Rome), "and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away and the place of his sanctuary was cast down." Dan. viii., 11. Wars of the Jews, book sixth; chap. two. "And now Titus gave orders to his soldiers that were with him to dig up the foundations of the tower of Antonia and make him a ready passage for his army to come up, while he himself had Josephus brought to him, for he had been informed that on that very day which was the seventeenth day of Panemus (Tamuz) A. D. 70, the sacrifice called the daily sacrifice had failed." This was accomplished by the little horn of Dan. viii., long before the horn of chap. vii. came into existence. The former desolated the Jews, and destroyed their mode of worship, (God willed its abolishment, having provided a better), the place of his sanctuary (or Jerusalem) was cast down or destroyed on account of the wickedness of the people. The latter were to persecute the saints of God, not on account of their wickedness, but for the truth which they held. The little horn of Dan. viii., sprang out of one of the four divisions of Grecia: it was the beginning of Rome. The little horn of Dan. vii., did not come up until Rome had been in existence for hundreds of years; until she had established herself as the dominant power, and had been divided into ten kingdoms symbolized by the ten horns. Then by plucking up three of the ten was this peculiar horn established "He shall also stand up against the Prince of Princes (Pilot was Cæsar's mouthpiece) but he shall be broken without hands." Dan. viii., 25. Babylon was broken by the hands or arms of the Medes and Persians; and they in turn by the Grecians, etc. But this horn symbolizing Pagan Rome is to be broken without hands. Is it to be broken by the coming of Christ? No. Why not? Because it has already passed out of existence. How? By the spread of the truth. The Apostles found the Roman world entrenched behind some four hundred gods; and they went everywhere, saying, "There be no god," and they overcame them not with hands, but with the truth, which is mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds. The gospel revolutionized the Roman Empire, and while in this transition state Constantine divided it into eastern and western. Yet it requires the two divisions to make Rome. In the early history of this horn (A. D. 70) he polluted the sanctuary of strength and took away the daily sacrifice. In his latter history (A. D. 533) he placed the abomination (Papal Rome) that maketh desolate, Dan. xi., 31. Thus the little horn that took the dominion of the world from the Greeks and held it for centuries, after producing a greater monster, gave up the ghost.

From Byron Ambrose.

Deerfield, N. H., Jan. 11, 1969.

Br. Storrs: While the doctrine of "No life out of Christ" is as dear to me as ever, the only paper that proclaims it is read with more interest after seeing so many who write for its columns at Springfield last fall. I often think, with satisfaction, of the meeting enjoyed in Br. Wolcott's tent, and of the sermon preached by yourself from the stand.

Although I do not recollect hearing the same ideas preached before, yet my attention had been called to something very similar a year or two previous. About two years ago, Elder Joy, of this state, wrote a tract opposing Advent doctrines, especially, the unconscious state of the dead, and the literal destruction of the impenitent. Said tract was subsequently reviewed by Elder J. V. Himes.

Elder Joy says: "What is the second death? We answer, the exact opposite of eternal life. If therefore, eternal life be happy existence with Christ endlessly, the opposite is a miserable existence away from Christ forever."

To which Elder Himes replies as follows:

"If eternal life means happy existence with Christ endlessly, then life such as we now enjoy is happy existence with Christ temporally. Life is animate existence; eternal life is eternal animate existence. Whether the one or the other be a state of happiness or misery is dependent entirely upon other causes than simply the existence itself.

"It is because the righteous can be happy that God will give them eternal life; and it is because endless existence would be eternal torment to the wicked, that God in mercy will let them be as though they had not been. (Obad. 16)

"The opposite of life is death; the opposite of eternal life is eternal death—a death without a resurrection. If it be said that this is no punishment, then it also follows that eternal life is no reward."

Query: If God's mercy will prevent him from giving endless existence to the impenitent wicked, because such existence would be eternal torment to them, will it not also prevent Him from giving them a future life at all, if they are dead, and "as dead as they can be," and a future life cannot be to them a life of happiness? Or, in your own language, "If God is love, and love will bring up the wicked dead; let them come."

But what particularly interested me was Eld. H.'s remarks on the "new birth."

He says:

"We do, most of us, believe it (the new birth) occurs at the resurrection; and the Scriptures confirm our faith."

Further on he says:

"He (Elder J.) will probably allow that there is a difference between being 'begotten' and being 'born.' We believe in a 'change of heart,' in a begetting to a lively hope; Every one who believeth that Jesus is the Christ hath been (not born but) begotten of God. John v., 1.

"The first birth is literal, physical; the birth of the Spirit is also literal, physical: but the body is a Spiritual and immortal body; the first was to mortal life, the second birth is to life eternal. If the resurrection be not the new birth how can Christ be called the first-born of many brethren? He was not the first-born by natural birth; He was not the first-born by conversion, for he never sinned; and needed no conversion; but he was the first-born from the dead (Col. i., 18.) The first raised from the dead to die no more."

How can Br. Himes believe, or even endorse the doctrine of a mortal, simultaneous, resurrection of the whole race, or even a resurrection of the impenitent wicked at all, without first answering his own arguments? And, secondly, how can they be answered by him or any one else?

A Man Forgetting His Errand.

A man came to Mr. L. one day, and said, "I have something against you; I think you have wronged me, and I am come to tell you of it." "Do walk in, sir, (replied Mr. L.) you are my best friend. If I could but persuade all my friends to be as faithful with me, I should be sure to prosper in divine things. But if you please, we will both pray, in the first place, and ask the blessing of God upon our interview." They prayed; and after they rose from their knees, and had been much blessed together, Mr. L. said, "Now I will thank you, my brother, to tell me wherein I have wronged you and what you have against me." "Oh," said the man, "I really don't know now what it is; it is all gone from me; and I believe I was in the wrong myself."—Selected.

If all those who profess the name of Christ, would act upon the above principles, there would be less hard feelings among professors than now exist.

W. H. Whitman.

Galesburg, Ills., Jan. 1869.

From W. H. Whitman.

Galesburg, Ill., Dec. 28, 1868.

Br. Storrs: Nine days ago we had word sent us by one who believes that man is immortal by natural generation, that our views on the resurrection would be attacked by an Advent preacher, and wished us to attend and hear the doctrine of no future life out of Christ demolished. So we travelled five miles to a school house (where we had been in the habit of speaking) to hear it. But we were surprised to find that the preacher hardly touched on the resurrection. His text was, "What shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?" He then went on and preached a good discourse, showing that the doom of the wicked was destruction, and not endless life in misery. Our friend who sent us word felt considerably whipped himself, we thought; for the preacher came down heavy on immortal soul and endless misery believers. And he did it so mildly and in such a good spirit, that we could not help loving him for the spirit he manifested toward those who differed from him. He is an example on this point for others to follow: for many that we are acquainted with, who claim to be the true children of God, if one should differ from them and at the same time be just as sincere and honest as they themselves, yet they will brand him as infidel, and do all in their power to destroy the reputation of their opponents. Can such men be followers of him "who when he was reviled, reviled not again;" and who, also, said, "love your enemies; bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you; that you may be the children of your Father which is in heaven. For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same? And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? do not even the publicans so?" What a grand and sublime lesson is here taught us by our Life-giver. It seems that the denominations of our day are following in the path of the publicans. If two should differ on an important Bible question, must they split off from each other? Would it not be better for them to meet and talk their difference over in the spirit of meekness, and pray to God for light on the subject, rather than fly off in a passion and separate? In such a case they never can do each other any more good. If those who differ would meet together, and pray one for another that they may be led into the truth, we feel sure there would be less division in the world. But it is lamentably true that as soon as an organization is formed, they will become stereotyped, and commence going in a circle; and if one of their number should happen to advance some truth outside of their circle, and contend for it, they will have to go out of their assembly. The readers of the Herald seem to be alone in different localities and seem to be persecuted more for their faith than any other people. May God bless them in all their trials. And may we all continue to do our duty to God and our fellow mortals, and bear our trials with meekness and patience, and at last have an entrance in the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

A gentleman, ——, Pa., writes: I subscribed for your excellent paper last August. I enjoy it much. I have read every column of its contents with great satisfaction, although I have met with much opposition for doing so, as I am a member of the Methodist E. Church. Some say it is a dangerous paper, etc.; nevertheless, I love it. I want all the numbers, so that when I have read them I can loan them out to my neighbors. It staggers some of my orthodox friends who have never seen the Herald of Life.

Note by the Editor.—The author of the above is a physician, and seems disposed to take hold in earnest on the Life views. May he prosper in receiving light and in scattering it abroad. Let all our friends take courage. There are tens of thousands who will gladly receive the light on the Life question if it is fairly brought before them. This gentleman took the Herald through one of our subscribers, and is so thoroughly converted to its views that he can hardly wait one week's omission, as was the case during the holidays.

Telling his Fortune.—A youth, in the employ of his uncle, a noble, energetic sea captain, took it into his head to smoke. One day the uncle coming suddenly into the counting-room, saw him puffing away, What, said the captain, you smoking? Well, he continued, if you keep on I can tell your fortune. "If you keep on smoking you'll go to chewing, and if you go to chewing you'll go to drinking, and if you go to drinking you'll go to the devil."—The Temp. Journal.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. Earth, not Heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. The Soul Saved or Lost. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1869. VOLUME VI.—NUMBER 17. WHOLE NUMBER 255.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2 20 a year or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658, New York

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the POST OFFICE, COUNTY, AND STATE must be given, and written plainly; and if a CHANGE is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters confusion and delay are inevitable.

LITERAL FULFILMENT OF PROPHECY.

WE now come to consider the objection to Judah and Israel's return and settlement in Palestine, that the promises of it are conditional. For the sake of the argument, we admit it. Will they repent? That is now the question. Ezk. vi., 8, 9, "Yet will I leave a remnant, that ye may have some that shall escape the sword among the nations, when ye shall be scattered through the countries. And they that escape of you shall remember me among the nations, whither they shall be carried captives, because I am broken with their whorish heart, which hath departed from me, and with their eyes, which go a whoring after their idols: and they shall loathe themselves for the evils which they have committed in all their abominations." Here their repentance is expressly stated in the most unequivocal language. Again Ezk. xi., 14–20: "Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, son of man, thy brethren, even thy brethren, the men of thy kindred, and all the house of Israel wholly, are they unto whom the inhabitants of Jerusalem have said, Get ye far from the Lord: unto us is this land given in possession. Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God: Although I have cast them far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come. Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God, I will even gather you from the people, and assemble you out of the countries where ye have been scattered, and I will give you the land of Israel. And they shall come thither, and they shall take away all the detestable things thereof, and all the abominations thereof from thence. And I will give them one heart, and I will put a new spirit within you; and I will take the stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them a heart of flesh; that they may walk in my statutes, and keep my ordinances, and do them; and they shall be my people, and I will be their God." Here can be no mistake. The persons spoken of are the literal seed of Jacob. The Spirit of God as we may suppose, to prevent all cavilling, makes the language doubly strong. The Lord says to Ezekiel—"Thy brethren, even thy brethren;" and as if that were not strong enough he adds—"the men of thy kindred." As though he had said—"Now understand, Ezekiel, that I mean the literal seed, and not the spiritual, as some may hereafter think." This prophecy states clearly not only that they will repent but that God will remove their stony heart and give them a heart to obey him.

Look now at Hosea v., 14, 15, and vi., 1, "For I will be unto Ephraim as a lion, and as a young lion to the house of Judah; I, even I, will tear and go away; I will take away, and none shall rescue him. I will go and return to my place, till they acknowledge their offence, and seek my face: in their affliction they will seek me early. Come, and let us return unto the Lord: for he hath torn, and he will heal us; he hath smitten, and he will bind us up."

Here the two nations are spoken of, and it was before either of them went into captivity. The Lord said after he had "torn" them he would leave them to their reflections; but declares that they will acknowledge their offence and seek him, and that they will do it with the assurance of his mercy. Also God assures them of his mercy when they repent; chapter xiv., 4, "I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely: for mine anger is turned away from him."

Again Zech. xii., 9, "And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem." That marks the period spoken of as does the previous part of the chapter; then he adds, verses 10–14, and chap. xiii., 1, "And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplication; and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his first-born. In that day shall there be a great mourning in Jerusalem, as the mourning of Hada Rimmon in the valley of Megiddon. And the land shall mourn, every family apart; the family of the house of David apart, and their wives apart; the family of the house of Nathan apart, and their wives apart; the family of the house of Levi apart, and their wives apart; the family of Shimei apart, and their wives apart; all the families that remain, every family apart, and their wives apart. In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness."

Here the matter is set in a clear light, in regard to their repentance, and conversion, finally. This appears to take place at the time that our Lord Jesus manifests himself to them, as Joseph manifested himself to his brethren in Egypt, after he has proved them. They look on him whom they, in the persons of their fathers, had pierced and mourn; and they are shown the fountain opened to wash away their sins. But, says an objector, "that will be conversion by sight, and we do not believe in any such conversion." "What if" you do "not believe? shall" that "make the faith of God without effect?" How was Saul of Tarsus converted? Did not "the Lord Jesus appear unto him in the way" to Damascus? See Acts xi: That this was a real appearing and not a spiritual one is clear from the apostle's own words, 1 Corth. v., 3–7, "For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures: and that he was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve: after that, he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep. After that he was seen of James; then of all the apostles. And last of all he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time." Just as truly as Jesus was seen of the 500 brethren, and of all the apostles, so sure he was seen of Saul of Tarsus; and he saw him last of all, consequently it must have been after "a cloud received him out of the sight" of the apostles, from Mount of Olives. Paul then was turned from his sinful course by having "seen the Lord;" and in speaking of his conversion, 1 Timothy i., 16, he says—"For this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might show forth all long-suffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting." Is Paul a "pattern" for us? No. We have never "seen the Lord." And if we had never given ourselves to God in Christ, and he should now appear, we should expect and justly too, that we should be destroyed instead of saved; for we have enjoyed privileges to know Jesus Christ that probably, not one in a thousand of the present posterity of Jacob ever enjoyed. Who then was Paul "a pattern" to? I answer to those spoken of Zech. xii., xiii., who shall then see the Lord, as did Paul and mourn as he did, and "wash away" their "sins" as he did, in the day that Ananias came into him and laid his hands on him and the "scales fell from his eyes;" yes, in that day the "blindness" that has "happened in part to Israel" will be "taken away"—the "scales" will fall from their eyes—"the veil" will be removed.

To this same point our Lord himself bears testimony. See Matth. xxiii., 37–39, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." This was said to the Jerusalem that stoned the prophets, etc., from them our Lord would withdraw himself, and they should see him no more, till they should say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; clearly implying, that then they should see him; and so Zechariah informs us, as we have seen. Our Lord gives us to understand when that shall be. See Luke xxi., 24, "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." When the times of the Gentiles is fulfilled: that is, their time of treading under foot Jerusalem. Till then, "I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits, that blindness in part has happened to Israel, until the fulness [of what? clearly the fulness of times] of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved; as it is written, 'There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer and turn away ungodliness from Jacob; for this is my covenant unto them when I shall take away their sins.'" Rom. xi., 25–27. Here all is plain, if we have no concern only to find out simply what is truth. Why should any body ever make Israel in one verse, here, mean literal Israel, and in the next spiritual? But it is said—if we apply "all Israel" to the literal seed, it will include all the dead Israelites as well as the living. That is a mistake; especially if it can be shown that the phrase "all Israel" signifies no more than the living Israelites at the time spoken of. That such is the fact see 1 Kings xi., 42. "Solomon reigned in Jerusalem over all Israel forty years." Did he reign over all the dead Israelites during that time? Again, chap. xii., 1, "Rehoboam went to Shechem; for all Israel were come to Shechem to make him king." Does that include all the dead Israelites? Or, necessarily, all the living ones? Probably the women and children did not come. These examples of the use of the phrase can be easily multiplied; but, we have given enough to establish the point that all Israel, or the whole house of Israel, are not phrases by which it can be shown that any more persons are intended than those alive at the time spoken of.

Thus, all the pains that have been taken to fill up this, another "slough of despond," to those who wish to prove no return and conversion to literal Judah and Israel, has been lost, and they must fall, still, into the same miry place till they will be willing to let the railroad that the Lord has laid remain unmoved. For, though "God" has "visited the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name," yet, "after this I will return and build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down, and I will build again the ruins thereof, and set it up: that the residue of men ["every one that is left of the nations," Zech. xiv., 16,] might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, [the nations and isles afar off, that have not heard my fame or seen my glory;" Isa. lxvi., 19,] upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, that doeth all these things." Acts xv., 13–17, with Amos ix., 11–15.

We might almost say to some, who have talked so much about the "little book," Daniel, as the Lord said to the Israelites anciently: "Ye have compassed this mount long enough," etc. Try, friends, to make yourselves as familiar with Moses, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea, Amos, Zechariah, etc., as you have with Daniel. Do try to see if you have obtained all the light on those prophecies that there is. It is true, we think there is some light in Daniel yet that you have not received. Daniel is very clear on the point we are endeavoring to bring out. We will look at him a few moments and then close. Dan. viii., 15. Who are "thy people," in that verse, "brought forth out of the land of Egypt?" Are they not the posterity of Jacob? Clearly so. Verse 20, Daniel says "While I was confessing the sin of my people," etc. What people were they? Surely the same as before. Again verse 24, "seventy weeks are determined upon thy people," etc. Is not that people, also, the posterity of Jacob? Beyond a doubt they are. In chap. x., 14, Gabriel says to Daniel—"I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days," etc. That must be the same people as before. Again chap. xi., 14, "The robbers of thy people shall exalt themselves," etc. Are not thy people here clearly the same literal posterity of Jacob? To us it is perfectly clear they are. Once more Dan. xii., 1: "Michael, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people." No intimation of any other people yet than those who have uniformly been spoken of as thy people. Again, "There shall be a time of trouble—at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that is found written in the book"—that is, that are alive. Here is the living remnant of Judah and Israel to be delivered at that time, agreeable to the prophecies already presented in the previous part of this article; "and," besides the deliverance of thy people, at the same period, "many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake," etc. How the deliverance of thy people will be accomplished may be the subject of another number. That the literal posterity of Jacob are Daniel's people to be "delivered," when Michael stands up, is clear to our mind.

NON-IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

BY DR. J. K. FINLEY.

HAVING last week given quite a number of passages that teach the existence of God, both by positive assertion and by implication as strong and irresistible as the most positive affirmations; we now call upon our orthodox friends to bring forward one single text that affirms or implies, or hints at the doctrine of the inherent immortality of the soul in the remotest manner, if they can; and knowing they cannot, how absurd and heaven daring their arrogant assumption that the utterances of the Bible in favor of the soul's immortality stand upon a par with its utterances on the existence of God. It is true they find the word soul in the Bible, but in the very passage where it first occurs, in connection with the formation of man, it is evidently applied to the man as a whole, and ought in strict correctness, as many eminent orthodox writers admit, have been translated creature or animal. Dr. A. Clark, whose scholarship and learning are universally acknowledged, says: Nephesh or enphesh chaiah, is "a general term to express all creatures endowed with animal life." Professor Stuart says: "nephesh chaiah is a generic term for living creatures, animals or animated beings." And yet forsooth when applied to man, just as it is to all the inferior animals, it teaches that he has an immortal soul! It is as hard to argue against such assumptions, for they are not arguments, as it would be to argue with a person who should insist upon it that two and two marbles make four, but two and two apples make six, and there is just as much reason or sense in the one case as in the other.

The philological argument deducible from the meaning of the Hebrew word enphesh, and its Greek equivalent psuche, as used in the Bible, is unswerable, and is of itself sufficient to settle the question of the non-immortality of the soul. It is this, and is so simple as to be easily understood by any one. The Hebrew enphesh is translated soul. The inspired writers of the New Testament render it into Greek by the word psuche, and psuche is the only word in the New Testament that is translated soul. Whatever psuche means that is the meaning of enphesh. Now the apostle Paul in 1 Cor. xv., 42 and onward, says, speaking of the dead: "It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power." In the next verse referring to this corruptible, dishonored and weak body, he says, "It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body; there is a natural body and there is a spiritual body; and so it is written, the first man Adam was made a living soul, the last Adam was made a quickening spirit." The Greek of verse 44, epeiretai soma psuchikon, translated, it is sown a natural body, or literally a soulical body or person, for soma means either body or person. Egeiretai soma pneumatikon, it is raised a spiritual body. Here we see the adjective psichikon derived from the noun psuche, which orthodoxy says means an immortal soul, is used to designate this corruptible, dishonored, weak body, while the immortal body is designated by an entirely different word, pnumatikon, having a totally different signification, being derived from pneuma, which is the word translated spirit. Now when the same word can be made to indicate a body, both weak, dishonored and corruptible, and also powerful, glorious, and incorruptible, then, and not till then, can it teach the immortality of the soul.

The same passage informs us that "There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body; howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual." The natural, or animal, which was first, is derived from the first Adam, who was made a living soul or creature, which is the corruptible; the spiritual is derived from Christ, the last Adam, who is a quickening Spirit. This life or quickening, can of course, from the connection here, refer only to the incorruptible and immortal life with which we are raised from the dead. This doctrine so plainly inculcated by the Apostle Paul agrees with his other teachings, and is in perfect accordance with the declaration of our Saviour in his most interesting and instructive conversation with Nicodemus. He said to Nicodemus, without any qualification whatever, "that which is born of the flesh is flesh, that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." This birth of the flesh, all will admit refers to our natural birth derived through the first Adam, and is as Paul expresses it "of the earth, earthy." If there had been any spiritual nature belonging to our natural constitution, our Saviour would undoubtedly have spoken of it to Nicodemus; but so far from alluding to any thing more than flesh, he immediately contrasts it with the birth of the spirit, thus showing that we have no spiritual nature, until we get it by the regenerating power of the Holy Spirit.

These plain undeniable facts, in reference to the soulical or corruptible and perishable nature of man, are beginning to have their effect on some of the most conservative of the orthodox teachers. I am acquainted with a very distinguished Professor in a Presbyterian Theological Seminary, who preached six years ago, that the soul was not immortal, but that the spirit is the immortal part of man. This, too, is the doctrine taught in Lange's great commentary, which is now being republished in this country, and which is commended by the orthodox papers, in their notices of it, as one of the best commentaries ever written. In the commentary on Thessolians, page 95, we have "To Pneuma is the spirit, the highest and distinctive part of man, the immortal and responsible soul in common parlance; Psuche is the lower or animal soul, containing the passions and desires which we have in common with the brutes." The great majority, however, of the present generation of preachers will continue to preach and pray and talk about the immortal soul, although they cannot find the expression, or the idea, in the whole Bible. But it is gratifying to the lovers of Bible truth as opposed to human tradition to know that their number is rapidly diminishing, and it will not be many years until the doctrine will disappear before the irresistible force of truth, in spite of traditional prejudice, fostered and sustained by human creeds. May God speed the day when this libel on his character shall take its place alongside of its kindred, and not any more abhorent and repulsive doctrine "that there are infants in hell not a span long." They are twin relics of those barbaric ages of the Church, when antichrist shut off all access to the Bible, and should be consigned back to that apostate Church, whose practice has always taught that "ignorance is the mother of devotion," and whose priesthood resorted to the most disgusting performances, to save the souls of unborn infants from the torments of their fancied hell.

We will now examine a few of the inferential reasons that have been advanced in support of the dogma of natural immortality. And here I would say that inferences ought always to be drawn in accordance with plainly revealed statements; in other words, positive revelations must not be set aside or give way to inferences from doubtful passages, and especially when these passages may be explained equally as well in accordance with the analogy of the Bible. This should be borne in mind, because the inferences by which the orthodox views are sustained derive nearly all their weight from the previous belief of the immortality of the soul. Our opponents ought in all fairness, first show that the Bible teaches that we have a soul, that this soul can live separate from the body, and that it is necessarily immortal. In discussing any other subject, it would be required that the foundation principles or facts should first be established, then show that the inferences are fairly deducible from them. The course of those who advocate the immortality of the soul has been, to prove its existence by their inferences, then that their inferences are legitimate, because the soul is immortal. This is reasoning in a circle, and can be made to substantiate any proposition, no matter how absurd. No intelligent person would regard it as proper on any other mooted question whatever.

Thus in the case before us; some of the texts brought forward may be made to look as if they gave support to the doctrine of immortality, but this appearance depends on the assumption of immortality to begin with; but taking the whole plan and object of revelation into the account they may be made to appear as they truly are, entirely in agreement with the fact that the soul or man is not immortal. One of the first objections is derived from the expression often found in the Old Testament "gathered unto his fathers." Here it is assumed that as the patriarchs and others were not in some instances buried in the same tomb or cemetery or country with their father, it must mean that their souls were united after death. This expression was used in speaking of the death of Abraham, and Joshua tells us in chap. xxiv., verse 2. "Your fathers dwelt on the other side of the flood in old time, even Terah, the father of Abraham and the father of Nachor, and they served other gods." In verse 14 he says, "Put away the gods which your fathers served on the other side of the flood, and in Egypt, and serve ye the Lord." Verse 15, "Choose you this day whom you will serve, whether the gods which your fathers served, on the other side of the flood; or the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell." Here then we see that the father of Abraham, and all the fathers of the children of Israel, both on the other side of the flood (or Euphrates river) and in Egypt were idolators, and according to orthodox belief, when they died their souls went to hell and were suffering the torments of the damned. Of course the argument derived from the expression "gathered to the fathers," is good, it proves that Abraham's immortal soul went to join his heathen father's in hell. A similar expression is often applied to the very worst kings of Judea and Israel, some of whom had God-fearing parents; so that according to orthodoxy, good and bad go together to a place of torment or of happiness. The expression was undoubtedly a conventional phrase by which they meant simply that they were gathered, or slept together in death. Certainly it gives no support to the idea that they were together in any place or condition of conscious existence.

Another proof of immortality is attempted to be drawn from the question of Job xiv., 14. "If a man die shall he live again?" Job answered the question in such a way as shows he had no idea of the soul as a conscious entity when man died. He says, in answer to his question, "All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come. Thou wilt call and I will answer thee; I will wait till my change come." Job shows here that his hope was in the anastasis or resurrection of the righteous, as he more fully shows in chap. xix., verse 25, and onward: "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand in the latter day upon the earth, and though after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God, whom I shall see for myself and mine eyes shall behold," etc. The marginal reading, which is almost always the literal and therefore the most correct one, is "After I shall awake, though this body be destroyed, yet out of my flesh shall I see God." Job's question, in order to give any support to the orthodox view, should have been, "If a man die, shall his soul continue live on in another state of existence?" This, with an affirmative answer, would have been hard to get over. But alas, for orthodoxy, neither his question nor answer gives the least support, but on the contrary is utterly opposed to the idea of any consciousness between death and the resurrection, and is in harmony with all the rest of the Bible on this subject.

We come now to Paul's vision as related in 2 Cor. xii., 2, and onward: "I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body I cannot tell, or whether out of the body I cannot tell, God knoweth) such a one caught up to the third heaven. And I knew such a man (whether in the body or out of the body I cannot tell, God knoweth,) how he was caught up into Paradise, and heard unspeakable words which it is not lawful (or possible) for man to utter." Paul says he could not tell whether he was in or out of the body; if he means by this that he could not tell whether his soul was out of the body, it will be difficult for us to decide. But if it was his soul, which he says nothing about, then he was according to orthodoxy, dead; for, according to orthodox belief, death consists in a separation of the soul from the body, and if his body was dead, and his soul alive, it is unreasonable to suppose he did not know the fact. The key by which the difficulty is solved, will be found in the first verse: "I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord." He undoubtedly meant nothing more than that he did not know whether, while rapt in vision, his body was caught up to heaven or not. His visions were about of the same character with those of John in Patmos, when he saw and heard things which appeared to be transactions then going on and accomplished, which really had no existence, but have been going on for the last fifteen or sixteen hundred years, and some of them not accomplished yet. We have a similar occurrence in the gospel, viz.: the transfiguration. Peter, who was present on the occasion, tells us it was a glorious representation of the honor and majesty of Christ in his kingdom of glory, which kingdom is not yet set up, and will not be until he shall come in the glory of his Father with all the holy angels. See 2 Peter i., 16, 17 and 18. We believe no one would explain Paul's vision in any other way, if an unscriptural theory did not require the grasping at all such straws to keep itself from drowning. We can furnish our friends with some passages far more plausible and direct, in their favor, to prove the soul or spirit can be separated from the body than this of Paul's. 1 Cor. v., 3 and 4: "For I verily as absent in body, but present in spirit, have judged already as though I were present concerning him that hath so done this deed. In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, when ye are gathered together, and my spirit with the power of our Lord Jesus Christ, to deliver such an one," etc. Col. ii., 5: "For though I be absent in the flesh, yet am I with you in the spirit," etc. Was Paul's deathless spirit present in Corinth and Colosse while his body was in Rome? If so then he was dead and he must have died quite a number of time before he finally suffered a martyr's death.

THE COVENANTS:

C.—GOOD evening, Br. Grim. At our las[t] you ran the title to the inheritance promised to Abraham down to Christ, and there, if I understood you correctly, you make the promise to cease in that line. What do you do with the kingdom from that point? for there are many prophecies relating to the kingdom yet unfulfilled. We venture to say there is not one individual who rejects the future ages, who has any self-constituted view of the prophetic word, or even a theory that is satisfactory to himself, if he would be honest before God, and confess the truth.

G.—That is strong language, and I think altogether uncalled for. A future age is one thing, but your interpretation of the future ages quite another. When you say there are many prophecies yet to be fulfilled in relation to the kingdom, will you please inform me which you refer to?

C.—There is the one in relation to the building of the temple in Ezekiel's closing chapters; surely that temple has never been built.

G.—I have examined that with some interest, and I might use your own language—I have never found a man who has a consistent view of those chapters. If you call it a prophecy, I call it a promise dependent upon certain conditions found in Ex. xliii., 9: "Now let them put away their whoredom . . . . and if they be ashamed of all that they have done show them (the picture of) the form of the house, and the fashion thereof." Here is the condition required of them in order that they may have the promise fulfilled.

C.—Don't you believe the promise will ever be fulfilled?

G.—No, for the reason that the time during which God made the promise has passed away. It was during the added or supplementary covenant marked by Daniel's seventy weeks. During that time they might have had all that God had promised them. There are certain things connected with this promise which cannot be fulfilled. We read in verse 19th of of this same chapter, "And thou shalt give to the priests the Levites that be of the seed of Zadock, which approached unto me, to minister unto me, saith the Lord God, a young bullock for a sin offering;" so also 24–27th verses. In arguing this question in Heb. vii, we read, "If, therefore, perfection were by the Levitical priesthood (for under it the people received the law), what further need that another priest should arise after the order of Melchizedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron. For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change of the law." Here the writer argues the Levitical priesthood belonged to the law; and when the law changed there was a necessity for a change in the priesthood. And in chapter x. we are told that the offering and sacrifices were to cease when Christ came into the world to make an end of sacrifices by the offering of himself.

C.—What do you understand by prophecies, as you seem to make a distinction?

G.—I understand a prophecy to be an event that takes place, or is to take place, in which there can be no change or condition. I will give you an illustration. Num. xxiv., 17. "I shall see it (the destruction of Moab), but not now. I shall behold it, but not nigh: there shall come a star out of Jacob, and a sceptre shall arise out of Israel, and shall smite the corners of Moab and destroy all the children of Seth." Also Dan. ii., 29. "As for thee, O, king, thy thoughts came into thy mind upon thy bed what shall come to pass hereafter: and he that revealeth secrets maketh known to thee what shall come to pass." Then follows the history of the world. Now God just takes Nebuchadnezzar and sets him down at the end of the age, and asks him to look at the map of the world. We make our maps of the world after the history had been completed. In prophecy God makes the history of the world as it will be; or, in other words, he takes the prophet and sets him down at the end of the age and shows him the world's history in advance. Now there are no ifs or ands in the matter, for the prophet sees the thing done. The prophet saw five universal kingdoms, and nothing can change the programme.

C.—Is there nothing that man can do to alter the condition of the world from what Daniel saw in vision?

G.—No: if there could be any change then Daniel would not have seen it. You might just as well ask me if there can be any change in history of the United States that is past. If God had given us a history it would have contained the rebellion, and all the outgrowths. Prophecy is merely writing history in advance.

C.—Are not all the blessings promised Israel of the same nature?

G.—No. The most of them are promises based upon conditions; and according to my understanding of the Scriptures the blessings promised to Israel were confined to a space of time, marked by Daniel's seventy weeks. That time was fixed for the winding up of the blessings of the Mosaic covenant, or the added covenant, on account of transgression. Daniel is informed that "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people (Daniel's people), and upon thy holy city (what for?) to finish transgression, and to make an end of sins (under that first covenant), and to make reconciliation for iniquity (under their covenant), and to bring in everlasting righteousness," (under the new covenant.) And, as we remarked at our last meeting, John the Baptist, Jesus and his disciples, came preaching the time is fulfilled; and Jesus informed them it was the time which belonged to their peace. Now any time between the utterance of the prophecy, and the rejection of Jesus as their King, God could and would have fulfilled all the blessings promised to them, but when they had filled up the measure of their iniquity the whole polity changed; and as the Jew in his blindness intended to build up their kingdom and polity without the use of God's foundation stone, Christ, He has overthrown the whole building and commenced the true house which he promised David he would build for him, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone.

C.—One word before we part about Jesus at his death ceasing to be the heir of Abraham: What do you mean?

G.—I mean that the relationship between Abraham, David, and Jesus Christ, was a relationship pertaining to the flesh, or as we say, a blood relationship; and if Jesus Christ gave up his blood-life as a ransom for his people, no more to take it up, he lives now by the new relationship, being quickened by the Spirit of God, and now lives as the Son of God, and becomes the true heir of the land which God promised to Abraham's seed; for the land was not promised to Abraham in the flesh or in mortality, but in immortality for an everlasting possession.

C.—What then becomes of the kingdom?

G.—The kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and as such Daniel saw it, and as such it was promised to David, and such it will be when Jesus receives it.

C.—Was it the same kingdom which was promised to Israel in the flesh or in mortality?

G.—As I understand it, it was not; that kingdom was but a continuance of the temporal kingdom over which David and Solomon ruled; but the kingdom which God promised to build for David's Son, far exceeded anything that David or Solomon ever saw, and was to stand as long as the sun and moon endureth.

ELD. S. PARRY, Sandy Hill, N. Y., writes: The last few numbers of the HERALD OF LIFE have been quite "a feast of fat things;" especially your remarks on prophecy. Your views on the New Jerusalem are what I have long held as explained by the Revelator, "The Bride, the Lamb's Wife," in contrast to Babylon: both mystical cities. To show that your words have done me good, I enclose $10 to promote the cause.

THE VOICE OF THE "YOUNGEST DAUGHTER."

OUR paper had hardly left our office last week before the World's Crisis of the same date came to hand. We were glad we had not seen it before our remarks on "ADVENT CONFERENCES" were in print. Our strictures on those conferences were uttered none too soon, as will appear from the following, taken from the "REPORT" of one of these self-created bodies, which lately met at Bristol, R. I. The Report says:

A resolution touching the non-revival of the wicked dead being offered, it was Voted, That the old resolution touching this question, passed by this conference years ago, be re-read and reprinted, as the mind still held by this conference. The old resolution reads:

"Resolved, That without wishing to be dogmatical we, as a conference, express our convictions that a doctrine known as the 'Non-resurrection of the wicked to life,' is unbiblical and untrue; and as such does not receive our approbation or support; but on the contrary does receive our disapprobation heartily expressed herein. Let us love those who do believe so, who give us good reason to believe they are Christians by a well ordered life and a godly conversation."

This resolution was very modest, merely a kind of "advisory" beginning. Our views are only "unbiblical and untrue" according to their "convictions." Had it been only the expression of individuals, as such, no harm would be likely to result from it. But it is a self-organized conference, as "unbiblical" as they suppose our views of a future life are. It was the entering wedge to further action at a latter day; and that day has come. This self-created body now moves forward. This late conference now speaks "great swelling words," as the following preamble and resolutions show. The Report says:

The interests and prospects of the Advent National Camp-meeting came up, and after some remarks a committee was chosen to draft a resolution, or resolutions, embodying the suggestions which had been made, to be submitted to the conferences for their acceptance and adoption. The committee reported the following resolutions, viz.,

1. Whereas, the large tent whose banner was "No life out of Christ," did devote its time, energy and talents almost wholly during our National Camp-meeting at Springfield last August, to controvert the Scriptural hope of a "resurrection," "both of the just and unjust," and to argue and discuss their no-life notions contrary to the principles of campmeeting management embodied in the Preamble and Circular letter adopted by the A. C. Association, Aug. 26th, 1864, and,

2. Whereas, silence is inexcusable on the part of true believers when, under such circumstances, the gospel hope is publicly, openly, and constantly assailed, to the detriment of babes in Christ, brought on to the campground to be nourished in the things of God, and,

3. Whereas, a peaceful, harmonious, and profitable meeting is impossible in view of such strife and controversy, Therefore,

1. Resolved, That this conference do petition the camp-meeting committee to remove such source of strife by requiring the "Life and Union" tent, so called, to drop the advocacy and discussion of its favorite theme at our National Camp-meeting, and uniting upon the great theme of the "Kingdom at hand," work for the good of all; and,

2. Resolved, That, if this reasonable and Christian request be refused, said tent be requested to separate from us—as Lot from Abraham—all claims to camp-meeting property being amicably and justly settled.

These resolutions were unanimously adopted.

The numbers preceding the Whereases and Resolutions we have affixed for the convenience of reference.

"1. Whereas." This contains several inaccurate statements. 1. No time was spent in the tent named "to controvert the Scriptural hope of a resurrection." Just the reverse of this is the truth. We contended earnestly that the hope the Bible holds out is that of a resurrection from the dead. 2. We did not "discuss" our views "contrary to the principles of camp-meeting" agreement, at the meeting at Springfield, Mass., last August. As to the "Preamble and Circular letter adopted by the Advent Christian Association, Aug. 26, 1864," we had nothing to do with it, and never had. It was something which took place when camp-meetings were held at Wilbraham. The meetings at that place ceased forever at that place in 1867, and the believers in "No future life out of Christ" were then invited to unite with those who did not accept our views, and to aid by our efforts and money in procuring and fitting up a new camp-ground in some other location; and our opposers themselves had some of our brethren appointed on the committee for that purpose. The brethren holding our views paid several hundred dollars to that object. It was expressly understood that we were to be considered at perfect liberty to promulgate and discuss our views in our tent, "whose banner was, 'No Life out of Christ,'" without its being considered any breach of good faith to those differing from us. The Preamble and Circular of 1864, of which this "whereas" speaks, was made null and void by the new arrangement at Springfield: and these brethren, at the late conference in R. I., start their building on the sand; and will, most likely, find "the rains descend and the winds blow" in such a manner that their "house will fall," and its sandy foundation be swept away.

"2. Whereas." This is a dictatorial assumption of power to decide on the character of our preaching. They affirm that "The gospel hope is publicly, openly, and constantly assailed" by us. We can hardly allow ourself to give expression to our view of the character of this usurpation of authority over our faith. Who made them "lords over our faith?" Who gave them authority to sit in judgment on our teachings and to condemn us as heretics? If they have such authority, let them show their credentials. Do not our friends see this "Youngest Daughter" is fast coming to maturity? Well for us all that she thus early shows her true character; far better to meet her in an open field than in hidden places.

"3. Whereas." The tent spoken of had "a peaceful, harmonious, and profitable meeting;" and Br. Grant was invited to preach in it, and we think he felt very peaceful in doing it; and we are sure all of us enjoyed his ministration; if others who kept away from our tent, or only came there as spies, felt it was "impossible" for them to have a "peaceful" time, we know of no one to blame but themselves: and we would suggest that they hereafter remain at home and pray till they learn to possess their souls in patience. We now come to:

"1. Resolution." Little need be said on this resolution. It speaks for itself. It petitions the camp-meeting committee to put a gag in our mouths, and dictate to us what we shall do in the matter of obeying God. Yea, more: they ask that committee to violate their pledge to us that we should have unrestricted liberty to preach in our tent and carry on our meeting there according to our own views. Yes, brethren of that committee, you are asked to violate your pledge to us and to God in this matter. Dare you do it? We do not believe you can be guilty of any such perjury, even if the beautiful Youngest Daughter does entice you to such a crime. She may plead her youth, and petition you to consider her unrest, and lack of peacefulness while believers in "Life only in Christ" are "sitting in the King's gate." We can assure the young lady, we have an "Esther," who has some influence at court, and the "Youngest Daughter" may yet find her gallows, erected for us, will bear her own weight.

"2. Resolved." This resolve appears very modest. We were only "required," in the preceding resolution, to shut our mouths, and "obey men rather than God;" and now, "if this reasonable and Christian [!] request be refused" (what then? why) "said tent be requested to separate from us—as Lot from Abraham," etc. This is extremely modest: they are Abraham; we are Lot! There is a saying somewhere in the Bible, like this, "He that exalteth himself shall be abased." We have no doubt that saying is true. If these brethren are determined that their dictation shall be enforced, or a separation shall take place, they may take the responsibility; the believers in Life only in Christ went on to the camp ground at Springfield, of right, and with a full understanding that they surrendered none of their rights of promulgating their faith, not only in their own tent, but anywhere else, when not interfering with the public preaching on the stand; and they did not violate their part of that agreement. If our opposers are dissatisfied with their part of it, they can "go out from us," if they choose; but they should not suppose we are to be driven out by threats, or bought out, except by our own consent. If they are the Abrahams, it might do them good to study his character. Abraham was willing to "go to the right hand or to the left," and allowed Lot his choice. See Gen. xiii. These Abrahams seem determined to choose for us, Lots, that we shall not have any place on the camp-ground: they are, however, very kind; they will not thurst us out till "all claims to camp-meeting property is amicably and justly settled." But what if there cannot be such a settlement? Must we be compelled to sell out, or be sent empty away? So the dictational resolutions would seem to imply: and "These resolutions were unanimously adopted," saith the Report.

A few more Advent conferences, we trust, will put the Lord's freemen on their guard against any connection with these "Youngest Daughters." We ask you to read again our strictures on these conferences, in last week's issue.

"WISDOM SHALL DIE WITH YOU."

IN the Advent Herald—an "orthodox" paper—an attempt is made to put our views of the resurrection of Christ at war with Jesus' words. The following is its wise effort:

MATERIALISTS VERSUS CHRIST.

"Jesus answered and said unto them, Destroy this temple [he spake of the temple of his body], and in three days I WILL RAISE IT UP." John ii., 19–21.

"There is nothing in the Bible to warrant the idea that Christ raised himself from the dead. Such a view is a virtual denial of his death." George Storrs, in the Herald of Life, Nov. 4, 1868.

"We find no proof that Christ raised himself. Such an idea is absurd."—Miles Grant, in the World's Crisis, Feb. 21, 1865.

If we were disposed to retaliate on our cotemporary we might head our article, "ORTHODOXY AT WAR WITH THE HOLY GHOST." Orthodoxy will not question but that the apostles and prophets "spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost"—or Holy Spirit. Now, which shall we believe, the Advent Herald's construction of the words of Jesus, above quoted, or the testimony and construction the Holy Spirit puts on those words? Orthodoxy itself ought to tremble at the presumption of taking the explanation of that text out of the hands of God's Spirit.

Let us look first at the prophecy. "THOU wilt not leave my soul in hell" (sheol), etc. Will the orthodox Herald tell us who saith this? Was it not, according to their own theory, the Messiah—the Christ? Who, then, is the "THOU" whom he addressed? Was not that THOU the person who was to bring the Christ out of sheol—the death state? If the Herald is right in its construction of John ii., 19–21, then the text Psa. xvi., 10 should read, "I will not leave my soul in hell," etc. But, unfortunately, the text cannot be tortured to read according to their view of the subject. The person to be raised speaks of another person who shall raise him out of sheol—the state of the dead; and that other person he calls "THOU;" so it was not himself.

Peter, on the day of pentecost, quotes this text from Psa. xvi., and says, "This Jesus hath GOD raised up, whereof we all are witnesses." Acts ii., 32. See the connection. Again, Peter says, "Ye . . . killed the Prince of life, whom GOD hath raised from the dead; whereof we are witnesses." Acts iii., 14, 15. Further, "Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost, said, Ye rulers of Israel . . . Be it known to you all and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom GOD raised from the dead," etc. Acts iv., 10. Again: "The GOD of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree," etc. Acts v., 30. Yet more, "GOD anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost . . . whom they slew and hanged on a tree; Him GOD raised up the third day," etc. Acts x., 38–40.

Next let Paul speak: "Though they found no cause of death in him [Jesus], yet they desired Pilate that he should be slain . . . but GOD raised him from the dead." Acts xiii., 28–30. "We declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise made unto the fathers, GOD hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second Psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. And as concerning that he [GOD] raised him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption," etc. "But he whom GOD raised again saw no corruption," etc. Acts xiii., 33, 34. Again: "The times of this ignorance GOD winked at, but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent, because . . . . He will judge the world . . . by that man [Jesus], whom he hath ordained; whereof he [GOD] hath given assurance unto all, in that He hath raised him [Jesus], from the dead." Acts xvii., 30, 31. Let us hear Paul further: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thy heart [that he raised himself from the dead? Is that it? The Advent Herald says, Yes; but did Paul say so? No: he saith, 'if thou shalt] believe in thy heart' that GOD hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." Rom. x., 9.

But again Paul saith, "GOD hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by his own power." 1 Corth. vi., 14. "Knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise us up also by Jesus." 2 Corth. iv., 14. Still another: "Paul, an apostle (not of men, neither by men, but by Jesus Christ, and GOD the FATHER), who raised him [Jesus] from the dead." Gal. i., 1. Once more: "What is the exceeding greatness of his power . . . which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand," etc. Eph. i., 19, 20.

The construction the Advent Herald has put on the language of Jesus is buried so deep beneath the avalanche of truth that it bids fair never to be "raised up again;" but we will heap up a few more "smooth stones" for a monument, that all who pass by shall understand how and where it is buried. "Like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the FATHER," etc. Rom. vi., 4. "To whom also it [faith], shall be imputed [for righteousness], if we believe on him who raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead." Rom. iv., 24. "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. viii., 11.

"If Christ be not risen . . . we are found false witnesses of GOD, because we have testified of GOD that He raised up Christ: whom he raised not up, if so be the dead rise not." 1 Corth. xv., 14, 15. "Through the faith of the operation of GOD, who raised him [Christ] from the dead." Col. ii., 12. "Ye turned to GOD from idols to serve the living and true GOD; and to wait for His Son from heaven, whom He raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come." 1 Thess. i., 9, 10.

Thus Paul, by the teaching of the Holy Spirit, has set the seal of commendation on the notion, promulgated by the Advent Herald, that Jesus raised himself from the dead; and we will now let Peter speak once more to cap the monument. "Who by him [Christ] do believe in GOD who raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory, that your faith and hope might be in GOD" (1 Pet. i., 21), and not in the speculations of men.

We do not think we need enlarge on this mass of testimony till the Advent Herald can bring at least one positive text that saith Jesus raised himself up from the dead. May we not well ask, if the orthodoxy of our exchange is not at war with the Holy Ghost, when it flings to the wind the mass of positive testimony that GOD the Father raised up Christ from the dead? Is there no way to explain John ii., 19–21, without assuming that Jesus taught that he would raise himself from the dead?

Our language, in the HERALD OF LIFE of Nov. 4, 1868, is opposed to the idea "that Christ raised himself from the dead." We have now shown by a mass of inspired testimony that GOD the Father raised Jesus from the dead. Is that the same as raising himself? If so, please substitute Jesus or Christ in any or all the places where it is affirmed GOD, or the Father, raised him from the dead. Take one example, viz., 1 Corth. xv., 15: "Yea, and we are found false witnesses of Christ, because we have testified of Christ that he raised up Christ; whom Christ raised not up," etc. Take any of the other texts we have presented and see where the Advent Herald's orthodoxy would lead. Try the experiment all through, and behold how you "fall into the ditch" at every step.

Let it be distinctly understood, in none of our remarks, now or last November, have we touched, or intended to touch, the question of what theologians call his "divine nature." We have spoken only of "the man Christ Jesus." Paul saith "there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus." 1 Tim. ii., 5. Whatever else Christ Jesus was, he was perfect man. You may say he was also God, or the Son of God, or what you please; but he was perfect man, or he could not ransom his brethren. It was on manhood the divine law had its claim, and manhood must magnify that law and make it honorable. The Christ, therefore, must be possessed of perfect manhood, or of a perfect human nature, so as to be "tempted in all points like as we are," and by a perfect obedience magnify the law, or vindicate its claims on humanity, and thus vindicate justice in taking the life of the transgressor. Having vindicated the law by a perfect obedience, showing that its claims were just and righteous, he, by the appointment of God, his Father, voluntarily submitted to death, the legal condition of all Adam's race, thus meeting the law in its highest claim on humanity; and also vindicating the law in its highest claim, God having pledged himself to raise up the Christ—the anointed—from the dead, by his Spirit; so that though Christ was put to death in the flesh, he was quickened by the Spirit, or made alive by another life principle than that of blood: he is now "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." Rom. i., 3, 4. His blood-life he never took again. To affirm he did, is to say, He took back the offering and sacrifice he made by shedding his blood, and hence "there is no remission of sins;" and our High Priest, though gone into the Holy of holies, has no offering there to present. Such a view makes void the atonement, and Christ died in vain.

But he did enter on his high-priesthood, presenting "his own blood" in the Holy of holies, and therefore had not taken it back as a principle of life. He hath the power of an endless life by having been quickened by the Holy Spirit, and has thus become the head of a new creation, the believers in him having become partakers of the same Spirit which quickened Christ into life from the dead; and he being the head, the power of an endless life is in him, and hence he has become the resurrection and the life to all that believe on his name, and receive from him life from the dead at the last day: He being now head over all things to his church, who are his body, and will live from the dead because he lives, and has all power in heaven and in earth given into his hands to consummate all the purposes of love to his body; and death is to be unlocked by him for all who are made partakers of the divine nature, having received it from him, the God-given fountain of eternal life; for, "this is the record, that God hath given unto us eternal life; and this life is in his Son: he that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." John v., 11, 12.

We return to the declaration that Christ did not raise himself from the dead. "Himself" includes something more than the Advent Herald intimates. It insinuates that if Christ raised his "body" that is the same as raising "himself." Does our exchange really believe his body was himself? If it answers, No; then the raising his body does not prove he raised himself. We ask it again: What was himself? Do you say, as orthodoxy generally does, "The soul is the essential man?" Very well. Did his soul die? "O no, say you. Very well, again. Then if he raised his "body" he "did not raise himself," you being witness. So, in fact, you have admitted that whatever the raising of his body or temple might mean, it did not mean to raise himself; and thus, though you threw a stone at us, you have broken your own window and left ours unharmed, according to your own theory.

We conclude our remarks in the language of Paul: "Now the GOD of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect to do his will, working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory forever and ever. Amen." Heb. xiii., 20, 21.

Now, Br. Herald, be a little more cautious in selecting the stones before you make war on us, and charge us with being "versus"—against "Christ." Be sure you understand yourself, if you do not understand us. We wish you a safe deliverance out of all the evils of error; and be assured, we feel none other than a spirit of brotherly kindness toward you, widely as we differ from you in some things. We wish you all prosperity in winning men to Christ and to life eternal.

INQUIRIES ABOUT CHRIST.

I would like to know your views with regard to the personality of Christ; the nature of the relationship of the Son to the Godhead bodily. If he be not God, one with the Father, how could God give his glory to another? What is your view of John i.? I am somewhat puzzled at some expressions in the HERALD on the subject; even a short time since, you say, Christ is not an angel, but superior to them. Do give us an article on that subject.

B. A. B.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.

WE are always glad to give light where we have it; but we have seen, heard, and read so much on the great controverted question, "Who is the Lord Jesus Christ?" that we have become settled that none of the contending parties—whether Trinitarians, Arians, Unitarians, or Socinians—know anything about it, so far as their theories are concerned; and they are all striving to do that which our Lord and Master has plainly said is one of those things which is not revealed, and therefore cannot be known, and yet each of the contending parties assume that they do know; and so put themselves "in the seat of God;" for Jesus saith, "No man knoweth who the Son is but the Father." Luke x., 22; and Matth. xi., 27.

We may be met, in relation to these texts, by the opposing parties, with "home-made Scripture." They quote it thus: "No man knoweth who the Son is but the Father, and he to whom the Father revealeth him." Will these parties turn to those texts and see if they can find their reading? We know they cannot. The whole verse, Luke x., 22, reads thus: "All things are delivered to me of my Father: and no man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father; and who the Father is but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him." Matth. xi., 27, is in nearly the same words, and expresses the same thing; both show that the knowledge of "who the Son is" is confined to the Father alone; and that no man knoweth this secret.

After laboring for years on the puzzling theories of the different contestants, and looking over their contests in the church for long centuries past, and seeing the fruits and bloody persecutions which had attended these controversies, and contemplating the spirit of proscription and the uncharitable spirit that has been produced by them, some ten years since we became settled that all these contending parties are at war with each other from a disregard (whether ignorantly or not, God knoweth; we do not) of the words of our Lord Jesus Christ; they wish to know, or profess to know what he said, "No man knoweth but the Father." Their controversy is with Christ himself, and is an assumption (whether wilful or not we know not; God knoweth), of knowledge belonging to the "Father" alone. Hence the fruit of such controversy has been to fill the church with a spirit of hatred and persecution, instead of love and good will to all who accept Christ as God's appointed Redeemer and LIFE-GIVER.

As to ourself, we have no test theory on this question. We have an opinion; but opinion is not faith; and hence we have hitherto never put our opinion in print. It is much easier to give an opinion than to prove who the Son of God is; for that "No man knoweth." Hence, there is no evidence by which to demonstrate that the opinion is correct. We have not the slightest objection to giving our opinion, so far as we are personally concerned; yet if it is given, how many would at once seek to enter the arena of controversy on the subject; and we have long since determined that we will never state our opinion on the question and allow ourself to be drawn into controversy about it for the reason that "No man knoweth who the Son is but the Father," and therefore to state an opinion as to who he is, and attempt to defend it for truth, would be to act in disregard of our Lord's words, just as all Trinitarians, Arians, Unitarians, and Socinians are doing, and have done for centuries past; for they all pretend to know who the Son is, and just what relation he holds to the Godhead.

Now, perhaps our inquiring friend will be more "puzzled" than ever. Very well; we can help him out of it, if he will follow our direction, so that his mind will be at perfect ease on the whole subject, as ours is. It is simply this: Receive every inspired declaration of the Bible concerning Jesus Christ, unquestioningly. "But how shall I reconcile this declaration with that which seems to speak opposingly?" you ask. We answer: Do not attempt it: let both stand, and receive them as they read, and allow no man to put a construction on them to alter, or to attempt to harmonize them, as they will call it. Remember this question of who the Son is, is the great mystery of the Bible; and because it is so, and no man knoweth who he is, therefore receive whatever inspiration saith of him, and leave the explanation with "the Father," if he ever chooses to make it." Perhaps he never will, any more than he will explain his own self-existence. Be content, then, and not strive to be "wise above what is written." Receive Christ as having "all power in heaven and in earth given into his hands;" so that, by the Father's appointment, "He is able to save unto the uttermost all that come unto God by him." Let alone all those sectarian and anti-sectarian speculations as to who the Son is, as they gender not only inexplicable "puzzles," but strife, hatred, separations among Christians, and destroy love, and thus make us unlike God, and so unfit us for that pure and holy society which is to be established in the kingdom of God. Pursue this course, friend "B. A. B.," and you will find rest on this subject that is impossible to find in any of the labored and laboring theories in Christendom, which have so long rent the body of Christ, been the reproach of Christianity, and shed the blood of martyrs.

May "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion [koinovia—the fellowship] of the Holy Spirit, be with you all. Amen." 2 Corth. xiii., 14. "If there be, therefore, any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship [koinovia] of the Spirit . . . fulfil ye my joy that ye be like-minded," etc. Phil. ii., 1, 2.

Beautiful Thoughts.

Many beautiful thoughts are connected with this life, though it be full of toil and sorrow. In the depths of affliction, of temptation, or poverty, it is a beautiful and consoling thought to consider that an individual, who now sits at the right hand of our heavenly Father, can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. He was once acquainted with poverty; a wanderer in this vale of tears, not having where to lay his head. He was tempted in all points like as we are, and, hence, in this respect, he can most feelingly sympathize with us in our most trying hours.

With the scenes of nature there are associated many beautiful thoughts. I love to linger on the banks of the limpid stream as it goes dashing along, generating joy to the beholder, and adding life and beauty to the vegetable world—but faith beholds a stream, far more beautiful to contemplate, that flows through the paradise of God. Angels gaze upon its pellucid waters, and cherubims upon its golden shores chant the praises of Jehovah. The human mind is lost in contemplation of the scenes immortal glory which lie "just over there." Here we sing, inquiringly, "Shall we gather at the river." But there one triumphant song of gratitude and praise, like the "voice of many thunderings," will roll up in the presence of God, and be re-echoed from the strains of golden harpers. What are the beautiful thoughts of earth compared with these scenes? The scenes of earth are within our comprehension, but it will be when we are made partakers of the divine nature that we shall be able to even form a partial idea of the glory and beauty of the future.

Again, it is a beautiful thought to realize that there is "a life in the future," and that the future life is a gift of God. What glories centre around this thought! How the love of God—(his whole character)—clusters in glorious rays about this! I never saw it so fully as I have in my recent consideration of the Divine plan of redemption. Only the purified—the spotless—the children of God, will have part in this life in the future. How desirable that we seek the friendship of one who can confer such a gift! Said this Life-giver, "ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." "Blessed are they that do his commandments that they may have right to the tree of life."

But there is still another beautiful thought connected with the future life. The first moment of realization will be in the midst of those glorious scenes just mentioned. The first moment of consciousness will be immortality; the first sight will be one of glory. And all will be enduring. Here death robs us of our dearest and most beautiful objects. The impress of decay is marked upon everything. But there, in the beautiful home that Jesus has gone to prepare for his followers, everything will bear the stamp of immortality.

How good the Lord is to place the full realization of all these within the reach of dying mortals, and how just he is to deprive man of even the sight of the glorified state who will continue a rebel to the most righteous law-giver that it becomes his privilege to obey! William H. Spencer.

Rochester, N. Y., Jan., 1869.

Opposition To Truth.

BY WM. W. DOUGHTY.

Opposition to truth manifests itself among religionists who have no desire to know truth from error; who do not have a searching spirit to find out what God has in store for those who love him, and the time when they are to receive it. Some old theory that they have been taught to believe from their childhood, no matter how corrupt it may be, or how much it dishonors the Lord, seems to satisfy them. If the fathers believed such and such doctrines and were Christians, so can we believe them and be Christians. Such logic is used by some individuals. This rule might work very well if the Lord was not continually revealing truth to his church adapted to their spiritual wants. This we know He is doing; for we read, "The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. Prov. iv, 18. And in the time of the end, "many shall run to and fro and knowledge shall be increased." Dan. xii, 4. Hence men could entertain principles of doctrine, years ago, which they cannot now entertain and be justified; for doctrines that have been preached in the past have been proved by the Scriptures of truth to be false, and men cannot hold to false views of God's purposes and plans, knowingly, and be honest. Hence it is the duty of every one who professes to love God to study and investigate, instead of opposing every view that is presented, though it may be new to him. We read that the "Bereans were more noble than those of Thessalonica in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily to see if those things 'which the apostle preached' were so." Acts xvii., 11. Their nobility consisted in searching, instead of opposing what they heard.

We will find it is a great deal better to search than to oppose. Jesus told the Jews to search the Scriptures; for in them they thought they had eternal life. All Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works; 2 Tim. iii., 16, 17. How men have suffered physical persecution for preaching present truth, because they had a disposition to search to find out what truth was. The Apostles suffered martyrdom for preaching Jesus' death and resurrection, because it was present truth in their day, by those who profess to love God.

This spirit is now manifested toward those who are preaching present truth to a perishing world, who are dying without hope of a future life, instead of being immortal to suffer endless torments. Those who advocate this doctrine are called infidels; but this does not stop the progress of truth. The Lord will have it preached in spite of all the opposition it has to meet with. The time has come when His name and character shall no longer be dishonored as being a God who would torment his enemies to all eternity. "God is love," is the testimony of holy writ. 1 John iv., 16.

This stands in defiance of the God-dishonoring theology of endless suffering. "I have set before you life and death," says Jehovah. Deut. xxx., 19: not life in happiness and life in misery; for "the dead know not anything," Eccl. ix., 5. "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. vi., 23. How completely the Scriptures of truth annihilate the natural immortality doctrine, and show that man is mortal and perishing, going out of life without hope of recovery only in and through Him in whom God has deposited a future life, viz., through Christ the Life-giver; and if any man climbeth up some other way, that is, by being possessed of an immortal nature, having endless life independent of Christ, such is a thief and a robber. Thieves because they take that which does not belong to them; and a robber, because they rob Christ of the glory and honor that belongs to him as the only name given under heaven whereby man can have life. "I am the way, the truth, and the life," John xiv., 6. Man is not possessed of immortality. "Shall mortal man be more just than God?"

Job xiv., 17. We are admonished by the apostle to seek for glory and honor and immortality, by patient continuance in well doing. Rom. ii., 7. Why seek for that we already have? It is a gift to be sought for by well doing, and to be obtained in no other way; and to be bestowed at a given time, viz., at the resurrection from the dead, "at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed; for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality; so when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, O death, where is thy sting, O Grave, where is thy victory." 1 Cor. xv., 52, 55.

The admonition the apostle has given to seek for immortality is proof enough that we do not possess it naturally; and if we do not possess it naturally, what will become of those who do not seek for it? live forever without it? that cannot be, for their living forever depends upon their being immortal. So we conclude that those who do not seek for it will perish like the beasts, as the Scriptures plainly teach. Psa. xlix., 20; and furthermore, if those who seek for it are not to put it on till the resurrection at the last day, it also proves that they are not in possession of it, and will not be until that time arrives, so religionists may sing as much as they please.

> A charge to keep I have,
> A God to glorify;
> A never dying soul to save,
> And fit it for the sky.

That does not prove it. "The soul that sinneth it shall die," saith the Scriptures. Ezek. xviii: 4. Hymn-book theology to the contrary notwithstanding. If we would have life let us believe on Christ, the only name given, by which we can have it; and when He comes the second time, without sin or a sin offering unto salvation, when the saints of all ages shall put on immortality, when sin and those who have rejected the offers of salvation shall be swept into oblivion, we can then sing unto the Lamb that was slain, "Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof, for thou wert slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth. And every creature which is in heaven and on the earth and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, shall be heard saying, blessing and honor, and glory and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever. Rev. v., 9, 13.

Shall be Turned into Hell.

"The wicked shall be turned into hell," etc.—Psa. ix., 17.

This text is one of a number of passages of Scripture that is relied upon by some and perhaps by many, of those who hold to the resurrection of both classes. The present rendering of the Hebrew shoov, as it is found in the text, is not accepted; but as that term is frequently rendered return, they would have the text read "The wicked shall return to hell;" or, "The wicked shall be turned back into hell." Thus, at the judgment, hell delivers them up, and after the judgment they are returned to hell.

Against this view the following paragraphs are urged. Some wicked persons will be alive when Christ comes, and it is certain that they cannot return to a place that they were never in. There is nothing in the text or context that indicates that the Psalmist has reference to any other than the wicked who may be alive at the judgment referred to.

Again: when John had seen death and hell deliver up the dead which were in them he witnessed the casting of death and hell into the lake of fire. After that, those whose names were not found in the book of life were cast into the lake of fire—mark, they were not returned to hell. Our opponents insist that when death and hell deliver up the dead; that all the wicked as well as the good are made alive. Then the judgment follows, after which death and hell were cast into the lake of fire; and whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.

How is it possible to return them to hell, which we are told is the grave, when hell or the grave is destroyed in the burning lake? Some of our opponents think to rid themselves of this transparent error by adopting the view that the wicked shall be returned to hell or the state of death. To what death will they be returned? Of course that from which they have just been delivered, that is, what is called the Adamic death. Certainly they were not in a lake of fire, hence they cannot be returned to that: and our opponents would hardly entertain the idea that sinners could die the Adamic death twice. Taking either view of the case, insurmountable difficulties appear.

The wicked who have died have returned to dust: that was the divine penalty for transgression. Those others who may be found alive at the coming of Christ will die, but once also. In both cases eternal death is their end. F. H. Burbank.

From the "Inquiring Friend."

Niles, Mich., Jan. 16, 1869.

Dear Editor: I have read and reread with much interest, your very kind reply to my inquiring letter of Dec. 29, 1868. Your response is clear and to the point.

I am earnestly in search of the truth, and having had some difficulty in reconciling that expression—"dying thou shalt die," I thought it proper to solicit an explanation in the Herald of Life, thinking that perhaps others would be glad to read the explanation also. It is entirely satisfactory to me, and I doubt not it is to any who have read it, who have experienced the same difficulty. With many wishes for the spread of this glorious gospel in its true light, as the result of your labors, I am very truly your friend and brother in Christ. Harlow A. Cross.

From Wm. R. Warner.

North Cambridge, Mass., Jan. 25, 1869.

Br. Storrs: Of course everybody must have some reason for not receiving the simple truth. The drowning man grasps at a straw: so will these believers in inherent immortality grasp at anything that looks as if it might buoy them up. Anything for a shield when you get them in a tight place. Here is the reason given me by three Bapist ministers in Cambridge who believe with the poet that our children go,

> Where day and night, without respite,
> They wail, and cry and howl
> For tort'ring pain which they sustain
> In body and in soul.
> The pious Father had now much rather
> His graceless son should lie
> In hell with devils, for all his evils
> Burning eternally.
> There must they lie and never die,
> Though dying every day;
> There must they dying ever lie,
> And not consume away.

What an idea, who would think that any thinking man or woman would ever have believed such a barefaced improbability, who?

But I come to the defence of this doctrine by the D. D.'s.

After confessing there was a great amount of evidence for annihilation, much more than they ever expected to find, they persisted that the terms used in relation to the end of the wicked can have a different definition and still be honest in the translation. That death does not mean death, as we understand it; that a thing can perish and still exist; that anything can be destroyed and still remain in existence.

I cannot conceive how any stronger terms can be found or used to show us that wickedness and sin come to an end. "The wages of sin is death." "O let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end." "The day that cometh shall burn them up." "Correct me—not in thine anger, lest thou bring me to nothing." "They that forsake the Lord shall be consumed."

They can understand when Jesus said of his people, "They shall never perish:" but cannot understand that the wicked perish; but they tell us how they go on, in progression in sin and crime, to all eternity. Those who were with Jesus and learned of him did not give his words this sort of a definition. No for Paul says, If the dead rise not, then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Peter says of the wicked, "These, as natural brute beasts, shall utterly perish in their own corruption." David says, "Man that is in honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish."

This is what prophets and apostles understood by the term perish. Wicked men will perish like the beasts, or as the beasts. Again, how can the words "burn up," which are so often applied to the end of the wicked, have any other meaning? Psa. xxi., 9, "The fire shall devour them." Mal. iv., 1, "The day that cometh shall burn them up," Psa. xcvii., 3, "A fire goeth before him, and burneth up his enemies." Matth. iii., 12, "He will burn up the chaff." Heb. xii., 29, "For our God is a consuming fire." The same can be said of all the other terms used to describe the end of the wicked.

How plain and easily understood are the truths that Jesus declares, that flesh is only flesh, and not spirit; that a spiritual is not man's original nature; but in order to possess this a man must be "born again" by the Spirit of God: and so agrees all Scripture, that "the first man is of the earth, earthy:" and "if ye live after the flesh ye shall die:" for, they are "sensual having not the Spirit." Let us believe and search "the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever;" whose terms are as unalterable as the laws that govern the universe.

May we never look to men for interpretations who make the word of God of none effect by their traditions.

From D. Hawks.

Andes, N. Y., Jan. 26, 1869.

Br. Storrs: I send $1 to help issue the tract on the devil. I think it highly important to know how near his satanic majesty keeps our company, and what relation the unregenerate bear to him, in order that we may be prepared the better to resist him; for I have learned by experience that, if our adversary is near, and we are not aware of the fact, we are more apt to be off our guard and more likely to be overcome by him.

But if we were assured that he was at our heels, we would be more likely to watch and pray lest we should enter into temptation.

The doctrine of No life out of Christ is so much like God, so sublime, and inspires me with such a feeling of gratitude, love, and joy, that I cannot help believing it true. I was taught in my youth that God had prepared a place for the wicked, of hell-fire and brimstone, where He would torment them to all eternity, which caused me to shudder and have hard feelings toward God. But since I have seen and heard your views, and searched the Scriptures to see if these things were so, I found that the doctrine of No life out of Christ was in harmony with the holy Scriptures, the spirit and inspiration of God; and so like God's attributes and character, as revealed by His Spirit, and gives me such joy, peace, and comfort, that I firmly believe it true. As Paul has it, The wages of sin is death: but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." You and I, and all others who hold views different from the orthodox churches, must expect persecutions, scoffs, and frowns, from professors as well as non-professors. But I can say, as Moses did, I had rather suffer affliction with the people of God, for truth's sake, than to enjoy the pleasure of sin and the honor and popularity of the world for a season. All I want to know is, Is it truth? Then go ahead, and count it all joy that I am counted worthy to suffer reproach for the truth's sake. I will close by wishing you a long and peaceful life, that you may be the means, through God, of opening the eyes of many to the truth, as it is in Jesus, and doing much good in the world. I feel grateful to God that he put it into your heart, and gave you the moral courage to come out from the sects, and proclaim what you believe to be truth. May you still be spared to be the means of opening the eyes of many, is the desire of your sincere and grateful friend.

From W. H. Whitman.

Galesburg, Ill., Jan., 1869.

Br. Storrs: In the new Christian Hymn Book, No. 291, we find a verse reading as follows:

> "I'll go to Jesus, though my sin
> Has like a mountain rose;
> His kingdom now I'll enter in > Whatever may oppose."

The above verse is not in accordance with the plain teaching of Peter. In 2 Peter i., he exhorts those "that have obtained like precious faith with us" apostles, to add to their faith, courage, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity, so they might have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

The testimony is plain that the kingdom is to be entered into some time in the future. And it is also plain that they were not now in the kingdom. Paul exhorts the disciples, "to continue in the faith, and that we must, through much tribulation, enter into the kingdom of God." Acts xiv., 22. That Paul expected to enter the kingdom at some future time is plain to be seen. "Flesh and blood (man in a mortal state) cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." 1 Cor. xv., 50. The saints in a mortal state cannot possess the kingdom: for it is incorruptible. It will never end. Luke i., 33.

It will not pass away nor be destroyed. Dan. vii., 17. The saints will come in possession of the kingdom when Jesus comes in the clouds of heaven. Dan. vii., 13, 14, 22. The saints then will have a life that will never end, and will be qualified to inherit a kingdom that will never end. Paul says, "Who delivered us from the dominion of darkness, and changed us for the kingdom of the Son of his love." Col. i., 13. (Diaglot.) Paul still speaks of the kingdom as future; contradicting the hymn book. "Hearken, my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" James ii., 5. The brethren to whom James wrote were heirs of the kingdom; and it was to them a thing of promise. To advocate that the kingdom was set up on the day of Pentecost is to do so without one single positive text to sustain it. The kingdom now is in a scattered condition. The King is in heaven. The associate rulers are yet in a mortal state in the earth, and scattered over it. The subjects of the kingdom are a hiss and a by-word, scattered among the nations of the earth. The territory of the kingdom is trodden down of the Gentiles, and will continue to be, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. When Jesus returns from heaven, all the above-named elements will become combined: and the kingdom organized that will never pass away, or be destroyed. The kingdoms of the world, then, will become our Lord's, and he will reign through the age of ages. His laws, when sent out, will produce the effect spoken of in Micah iv. What a difference there is between the Christian Hymn Book, and the Bible on this subject.

Some time ago, we heard a preacher speak on the second coming of Christ; he did very well for one of his party. But when he got through the chorister sang a hymn containing the following lines:

> "If heaven be thus glorious, Lord,
> Why should I stay from thence?
> What folly 'tis that I should dread
> To die and go from hence!
> Reach down, reach down thine arms of grace
> And cause us to ascend,
> Where congregations ne'er break up,
> And Sabbaths never end."

They sung it was folly to dread to die, and go from hence. Then they called on Jesus, in their song, to reach down his arms of grace (death) and cause them to ascend where congregations will never break up, and where their Sabbaths will never end.

Now, if the song is true, the preaching was false. For if the congregations never break up in heaven, and the Sabbaths never end there, then Christ and the saints will certainly continue there through all eternity. And the second coming of Christ is all a hoax. And the last verse of their song still makes the idea stronger:

> "Jesus, my love, to glory's gone,
> Him will I go and see. [That is when they die.]
> And all my brethren here below,
> Will soon come after me." [When they die.]

Now, if all the brethren, one by one, goes to Christ as fast as they die, in the name of reason what is Jesus coming back here for?

All he has to do is to reach down his arm of grace (death) and bring them home. Death, though, (their arm of grace) is to be destroyed. 1 Cor. xv., 26. How are such preachers and people to be enlightened? We hope and pray that something may turn up, that will cause them to see their errors, and turn away from them.

From Clamor Franke.

Cincinnati, O., Jan. 27, 1869.

Br. Storrs: I am just in receipt of the Tracts "God is Love," and hasten to send you the money for them. Enclosed please find $5. I shall lose no time to distribute them. They are worth their weight in gold. Gold, do I say? No. Sordid gold is far too mean an estimate and too low a comparison of the value of this sum of all truths, "God is Love," as brought to view in these pages. Who, with such a picture of love before his eyes, can withhold his heart from this God of love? O man, who art thou that thou despisest the riches of his goodness, and forbearance, and long suffering; not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance?

And who that has tasted of this heavenly gift of love, can feel otherwise than be persuaded that neither life, nor death, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord?

> O for this love let rocks and hills
> Their everlasting silence break,
> And all harmonious human tongues
> The Saviour's praises speak.

Yours in bonds of love.

J. H. White, Lewistown, Ill., writes: We wish our paper continued. We cannot well do without it. It is all the gospel preacher we have, and we prize it much. We were first made acquainted with the Life views through the preaching of our dear old western veteran, Br. Lewis; and having read the Bible for ourselves, we were not long in seeing that these views were more in accordance with its teachings than the opposing theory. We set ourselves to studying the Scriptures. The result of which was, we embraced the Bible truth of "Life only in Christ." Thus we renounced the traditions of men. We can now look upon God as the God of love; which we could never do while we believed the old endless torment theory. I praise the Lord, that we were ever brought into this true light of the gospel. We have much opposition, and every means are used by ministers of the old theory to keep us from spreading the glorious truth. They tell the people it is dangerous to read our tracts and paper: that the worst kind of infidelity is taught in them. Some of the people have minds of their own and are not afraid to read for themselves and are glad to get our tracts. I think numbers are already convinced of the truth of the Life views; but are not strong enough boldly to take their stand on its side. I think the tract cause is doing much good, and we shall try to help it on, this year, by some pecuniary aid.

B. A. Brennan, Washington, D. C., writes: I take pleasure in sending you the inclosed one dollar, as my subscription for the first quarter of the present volume. I will—God helping me—send you a like sum every three months. I hope to be able to show you how much I love the Herald, its Editor, and the truth he maintains a conflict for. I wish you could make the noble sheet more self-sustaining. Could you not change the size to a quarto, print in Brevier, etc., let the outside be for advertising; that would pay costs, and leave a margin that would enable you to extend the free distribution. The sum now so nobly subscribed to sustain the publication of the Herald, might then go to the Tract fund. When shall I review the amount of money acknowledged, and the number of tracts sent forth; then, the apologies from the many who are willing but unable to pay even the bare prime cost, I wonder how you can do it. But God is with you; and may He ever sustain you. May you be strengthened from on high, is the present prayer of your unworthy brother.

UNDER THE SNOW.

UNDER the snow my loved ones sleep,
Under the drifting snow;
Heeding not if I smile or weep:
Angels the while their vigils keep,
As they sleep
Under the snow.

Under the snow my treasures lie,
Under the sheltering snow;
Nor mark how the changing years go by,
Or the swifter moments as they fly,
While they lie
Under the snow.

Under the snow there is quiet rest,
Under the friendly snow;
To each weary heart and throbbing breast
Is the sweet repose supremely blest,
As they rest
Under the snow.

Not always enshrouded in gloom and night
Will my precious treasures lie;
There hastens a morning fair and bright,
When my loved ones will waken and greet my sight;
My loved ones
Under the snow.—AUNT LOUISA.

Children's Department.

MY LOVED ONE.

DEAR CHILDREN: I once had a little girl—my only daughter, and I loved her very dearly. She was not a perfect child, for she had faults like other children, but she loved her mother, and was uncommonly conscientious and obedient, and I do not know that she ever deceived me or told an untruth.

I think she gave her heart to the Lord when she was very young, and tried to serve him. I have now a little letter that she printed (for she was not old enough to write), and sent to me from school by one of her young companions who lived near us, and was coming home. In it she told me how dearly she loved me, and how happy she was, for she was trying to be good and love the Lord, so that she might be ready to meet him when he came, and live forever in his kingdom. Can you wonder that I was very happy with my dear child?

She was spared to me and grew up to be a young lady. If she was a comfort to me when a little child, she was certainly so when she became older. She relieved me of many of my cares and was always my nurse when sick, for my health has been poor for many years. She opened all her heart to me, keeping no secret from me, and seeking my advice on every subject, and I had always in her one to sympathize with me and cheer me under all my trials. Perhaps I leaned upon her too much, for my heavenly Father saw fit that she should be taken from me and laid in the cold grave.

For many long months she was sick; and although it is very hard for young people to be confined, and shut away from their companions, yet she was always patient and cheerful. She dearly loved her friends, as they did her, and it was hard to give up all her bright hopes of happiness, and her life too, and yield to the power of death. But the blessed Saviour, whom she loved, did not forsake her, and she calmly and peacefully fell asleep in Jesus.

The time has seemed very long since she left me; and sometimes it has seemed as if I could never learn to live without her. Often when I have thought of writing to you, I have felt so sad I could write nothing interesting. How glad I am that Jesus is coming in a little while to wake up all the dear ones who sleep in him, and give them a home where they will never suffer or be sad or die again. Then we shall find our dear friends and never be separated again.

Maria was very fond of children, and all the children who knew her loved her. After she died several little children came in to look upon her pale face. At first they were afraid to come near her, but when they saw me sit down by her and smooth her hair, and they saw how pleasant she looked, and I told them that she was asleep, and in a little while would wake up again, they lost all their fear, and came up and put their little hands upon her cold face, and her hands, which looked like marble, they were so white. They were surprised when I told them that she, or her soul, had not gone to heaven, for their parents had told them she was there. How much easier it is to believe the truth, that she will lie in the grave until the resurrection.

As I sit at my window I can look upon the spot where my dear child is resting in her lowly bed, and it makes me long for the day to come when the dead will live again.

On New Year's day, a time when so many were made very happy by visiting and receiving presents, I sat and looked at the falling snow and thought of Maria and my dear parents, and a loved sister, and other friends who have died. A few of my thoughts I wrote out and will send them to you with this. Before I close I wish to urge all the dear children who read this to give your hearts to the Saviour and obey him, and then if you should die before Jesus comes, your friends can have the blessed hope of meeting you when "the voice of the archangel and the trump of God" shall awaken all who sleep in Jesus.

AUNT LOUISA.

"PLAYING LIKE A CHRISTIAN."

I HEARD of two little children, a boy and a girl, who used to play a great deal together. They both became converted. One day the boy came to his mother and said, "Mother, I know that Emma is a Christian."

"What makes you think so, my child?"

"Because, mother, she plays like a Christian."

"Plays like a Christian?" said the mother. The expression sounded a little odd.

"Yes," replied the child, "if you take everything she's got, she don't get angry. Before, she was selfish; and if she didn't have everything her own way, she would say, 'I won't play with you; you are an ugly little boy.'"

"THESE KINGS."

AN EXPOSITION BY JAMES W. SMITH.

CHESTER, PA., Jan. 3, 1869.

IN Dan. ii., 44, we find that in the days of certain kings the God of heaven will set up a kingdom that shall not be destroyed. It is of the utmost importance to every believer in the second advent of Christ to know who "these kings" are. To all who love the Lord, and his second coming, I offer a few thoughts on this important subject.

"These kings" are admitted by all to be a part of Nebuchadnezzar's image; and therefore to find out who they are we must begin with the history of that image. And we find the image divided thus:

The "head of gold"—Nebuchadnezzar.

"The "arms and breast of silver"—Medo-Persian.

The "belly and thighs of brass"—Macedonian.

The "legs of iron"—Roman Empire.

The "feet and toes,"—"iron and clay"—Not developed yet.

It is clear that the image consists of five parts, and represents five different powers. But it has been the rule heretofore to divide the image into only four parts, thereby confounding the legs of iron with the feet and toes, which are of iron and clay. There is evidently as much difference between the "iron" power of Rome, and the feet and toes of iron and clay, as there is between the brass and silver, or the silver and the gold. There is no difference of opinion that the first four divisions of the image are all dead and gone. The Roman Empire ended the day when it was divided into "ten horns." To talk about eastern and western Roman Empires now is simply nonsense; there is no such thing now.

When the stone cut out of the mountain without hands strikes the image, it smites it on the feet and toes; but if the "ten toes" represent the first ten horns of the Roman Empire then our Lord ought to have come long ago. But our Lord has not come yet. But those ten horns of Dan. vii., 7; and Rev. xiii., 1, are all defunct. And the "stone" out of the mountain has not struck the "image" yet, because our Lord has not yet come. Therefore we must look for the "feet and toes" in the future.

This feet and toe power is being developed just now. And judging from what I read, there are few aware of the fact. It is not generally known that Italy, the home of the iron power of Rome that ruled over all the earth, was, after the fall of Napoleon Bonaparte, at Waterloo, divided into ten States. And these ten States of Italy are exactly the ten toes of the "great image" we are considering. Here are the States as given by Hugh Murry, a historian.

1. The States of the Church.
2. Tuscany.
3. Lombardy or Austrian States.
4. States of Sardinia.
5. Naples and Sicily.
6. San Marino.
7. Modena.
8. Lucca.
9. Parma.
10. Monaco.

All these States have obtained their liberty except the States of the Church, and these cannot be free without destroying the Pope.

Daniel says of this iron and clay power, that it will be partly strong and partly broken. Nevertheless, there will be in it of the strength of the iron. And the iron party shall prevail over the clay party. But there is a want of union between the iron and clay. Now, is this not a fact with Italy at this moment? Italy is divided, but hopeful of success in the end. Had it not been for Napoleon III. the Pope would have been driven out of Rome before now. And though quiet seems to reign at present, let no one suppose it will be always so. The Pope has got to go. He will be overthrown in spite of all the powers of the earth. Garibaldi has recently written a letter to the patriots of Bologna, in which he says; "I shall believe that our people wish to effect their freedom when I see the shop of Saint Peter converted into an asylum for the indigent, and the vial of Saint Januarius broken on the tonsure of the buffoon and sorcerer. Come what may. I shall indeed die wretched if on the day when you fight for the liberty of Italy—a day not far distant, I hope—I should be unable to follow you, at least in an ambulance." This is the spirit and feeling that will in a little while destroy the "Mother of Harlots." Now turn to Rev. xxii., 12, and here we find that there are "ten kings" that "have received no kingdom as yet, but receive power as kings one hour with the beast." The Italian patriots claim that Rome must be the capital of the new Italian kingdom; and their watchword is, "Rome or death." But whether they will succeed in this or not cannot at present be determined. But one thing is certain that when these ten states of Italy—the ten horns of Rev. xvii., 12—and the ten toes of the great image obtain their freedom, their reign will be short—a "short space"—"one hour." It may be observed that the power which these ten horns obtain is not their own. They do not get it by their own strength. They "receive power one hour as kings," consequently it is given to them. And Italy could not be to day what it is, had it not been for France and Prussia driving out Austria. This, and the doctrine of non-interference, or political neutrality now observed by the powers of Europe, has opened the door to Italian freedom, and gave also to the French Emperor leave to reign. It is an historical fact that at the close of the last century and the beginning of this one Great Britain interfered with all the nations of earth, and nothing could be done but what she allowed. She waged war for twenty years on republican France; and for no other purpose but to restore the Bourbon family to the throne, and banish Napoleon I. to St. Helena; and it cost her six hundred million pounds sterling of a national debt, and its interest for over seventy years; which would be about two thousand millions sterling money, or ten thousand millions of dollars. The four great powers of Europe, Russia, Austria, England, and Prussia, pledged themselves after Waterloo, that the name of Bonaparte should never occupy the throne of France. And they agreed, if it should be necessary to carry out the agreement, to bring all the force of the contracting parties into the field to prevent a Bonaparte from ever reigning in France. But a few years only pass away, and contrary to all expectation, "the beast that was, is not, and yet is," comes on the stage in its third and last form of existence. And strange to say, that England, who killed it, was the first to shake hands with it when it was resurrected from the dead.

Mr. Alison, in his history of Europe, speaking of the close of the French war, says, "War wore itself out; a contest of twenty years duration at once drained away the blood and exhausted the treasures of Europe. The excitement, the animation, the mingled horrors and glories of military strife, were followed by a long period of repose, during which the social passions were daily gaining strength from the very magnitude of the contest which had preceded it. . . . The nations were chained to peace by the immensity of the sacrifices in the preceding war: All governments had suffered so much during its continuance, that, like wounded veterans, they dreaded a renewal of the fight."

Here, then, is the reason for the present neutrality, or policy of non-interference. And for this very reason Napoleon III. gets leave to reign. And for the same reason Italy will be yet permitted to free herself. Because the nations are "like wounded veterans; they dread a renewal of the fight." I have mentioned this to introduce Rev. xviii. The whole of this chapter is taken up with the destruction of the "Mother of Harlots." The time was when she could command the nations of the earth to obey her mandates; but, alas, she has not a friend on earth to help her, if we make France an exception; and even France will abandon the "buffoon and sorcerer;" and that before long. Take the tenth verse and the seventeenth, and substitute the words neutrality, or non-interference in national contests, for the words "standing afar off," and it is impossible to mistake the signs of the times.

The conclusion therefore that I come to is, that the ten States of Italy are the ten toes of the "great image," and also the ten horns of Rev. xvii., 12. That the city of Rome will be destroyed; and that these ten horns will receive power one hour, a short time; that these two horns will make war with the Lamb and be overcome by him. What sort of kingdom these "ten horns" are going to make, I will not try to define, perhaps it will be an infidel kingdom. These "ten horns" are the last of all the prophecies of God. There is no more to arise after them; they are at the very close of time, as is also the "feet and toes" of the image; both will end at the same time. I have believed this for twelve or thirteen years, and I see no reason to change my opinion as yet. I may not live to see it, but I hope I will. May God give grace, wisdom and understanding to all who love the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen. And amen.

THOUGHTS ON NON-RESURRECTION.

"For this purpose the Son of God was made manifest, that he might destroy the works of the devil."—1 John iii., 8.

FROM this text it is assumed, that as death is the work of the devil, if God does not raise all the dead the works of this enemy will not be destroyed. While hearing, a short time past, on this strain, it came to my mind, Can the devil raise the dead? It is admitted on all hands, that he has not power to give life, even to an insect. When the magicians of Egypt could not bring even the lice, they said "This is the finger of God." Very well, then, if God brings into life the untold multitudes who have rejected his counsel against themselves, and have fallen under the power of death without having its sting removed, which is sin, it will not be through or by means of the great Ransomer. It is written, "Seeing there is wrath, beware lest he take thee away with a stroke, and a great ransom shall not deliver thee." Again, in Proverbs: "He that being often reproved, still hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy." All the cases referred to include not only those who have died, but also those who may yet die impenitent before the revelation of our Lord Jesus Christ from heaven.

Now let me refer to the saying of Jesus to the Jews: "If ye believe not that I am He, ye shall die in your sins; and whither I go ye cannot come." Would not some of our modern teachers remind the Master, that they surely must come where he is to hear sentence, and be condemned and sent away in Gehenna's fire, to die again?

Now we see what this class of teachers are driven to. It makes no difference what dispensation men have lived under; if they sinned without law, they have perished without law; and that righteously; for there is no unrighteousness with God, the Creator of all. This part, then, of the wicked are turned back to the dust.

Now, there will, according to the word of God, be a large crop of tares in the field, alive when the Saviour comes. If we can ascertain what disposition will be made of these, it will throw light on the subject of those already disposed of. "He shall send his angels and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them that do iniquity." Now, I think I begin to hear prayers: "O Lord we have been preaching that thou wouldst raise up all the tares of former generations: we cannot say they are now doing any harm, or that it is possible, in their present condition, that they ever can do any harm; but it would harmonize so nicely with our preaching to have them resurrected and put through Gehenna; O do, and defer not." Might not the answer be, "Those are already ashes under the saints' feet; and as it is not suffering, but the state or condition, viz., death that is the wages of sin, therefore when these living ones are as effectually returned to dust as those now in death are, there will be nothing in the way of my saints inheriting the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world. Do not flatter yourselves that I will make myself a tyrant, and put myself under the necessity of destroying my own works! Persist no longer in such petitions, lest I mete out to thee that which thou hast measured out to others."

Now, if no one can raise the dead but God, who brought from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, that great Shepherd of the sheep; and he does raise all the wicked to life, and there is no power, after the resurrection, of evil, or of the devil, will not our good God, who styles himself "Love," have to destroy his own work?

This old tooth is getting defective and very loose; it is only a compromise with the old eternal torment theory, and like its mother, is held up as a motive to repentance and a preparation for the kingdom of God. They seldom pretend to answer any objections. Let us all be true and faithful the little while.

F. WINANS.

CHICAGO, ILL., Jan. 18, 1869.

THE YEAR 1869.

ALTHOUGH fourteen years have passed, yet it seems but as yesterday to us, since we looked with earnest expectation to the time now present. Placing our confidence at that time in certain interpretations of Daniel's prophetic dates, we confidently expected to be clothed with immortality ere 1869 dawned upon the world. Still we are here, possessed of a flesh and blood body. What means this disappointment of interpreters and those who confide in them? It means that we are not to put our trust in man. Poor, weak, frail man, of what account is he? We often feel our own weakness and naturally enough lean upon the first staff that we can find, even though it be but feeble man. Yet, how often disappointment overtakes us, in such cases. We find that God alone is sure. In Him we can trust, and Him alone. Men may approach us with an air of self assurance, and thrust their claims upon us for our confidence, yet time, with its unrelenting hand, soon dispels their claims into thin air.

In the year 1843 a great excitement was created by William Miller, relative to the immediate ending of the prophetic periods. Thousands were converted to Adventism by this means, and thousands were disappointed in their hopes. Since then, there have been numerous interpreters who have undertaken to give the world correct expositions of these dates, some of them, too, with a good deal of egotism, as if it were impossible for their computations to fail. Alas, for those who rely upon them, however, for disappointment seems to be their only lot. One, on whom we had relied for years, has, like all who have preceded him, proved his utter incompetence to interpret the periods of Daniel and Revelations. Writing in 1851 he said, "when the next fifteen years are passed, the numbers of Daniel, and of John's apocalypse, will have all come to an end." Eighteen years have passed and still the end has not come, thus proving, conclusively, that he, with Miller and others, is unable to interpret the much talked of dates.

Relative to the prophecy of Daniel it was said by the angel, "Go thy way, Daniel, for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end." . . . none of the wicked shall understand, but the wise shall understand." Dan. xii: 9, 10. It was claimed by the writer last referred to that we were then living in the time of the end, and that he, and those who believed with him, were the wise who should understand. Now, one of two things is apparent, either we have not reached 'the time of the end' when the wise shall understand, or else the claims of this interpreter to being one of "the wise" are false, seeing that time has shown us he did not understand.

In view of these repeated failures, how careful ought we to be, not to place too much confidence in the interpretations of man. We ought, at least, to profit by past experience, and we doubt not when the time comes for the fulfilment of Daniel's prophetic dates, and those of the Apocalypse, we shall not be left to conjecture, but the evidence will be so plain that no mistake can possibly be made by those who believe the Word of God. The prophecies of the past have been fulfilled so minutely and literally that a child, even can read the prophecy and the history of its fulfilment, and not fail to connect the two. So we believe it will be in reference to all unfulfilled prophecy. We have no confidence in the attempts made by many to press certain historical events into their service for the purpose of showing a fulfilment of prophecy, when it is impossible to discover any similarity between the event predicted and the one pointed out as its fulfilment. God is not such a bungler as some would have us believe. That which he has declared shall come to pass, and not something else. Let us learn to wait with patience, then, the appointed time, even as the husbandman waiteth for the harvest.

Now, that we have entered upon a new year, our first thought is, what may we look for in the political world? Time alone can tell. God knows, but we do not. The year passed has witnessed great changes in Papal strongholds, and Eastern Europe has been agitated in one way or another. Turkey, with her code of reforms, is trying to maintain her rank among the nations, and, if possible, to take a step in advance of her former position. Her trials are great, however, owing to the conflicting religious elements which exist in her dominions, and her inability to control them. Russian agency is secretly sapping the foundations of Turkish supremacy in the provinces over which she now maintains but a slight hold. Russia, with a giant hand, is also reaching out into Asia, and seizing, one after another, the independent states of that country. What this year will witness, we cannot say, but it is probable, that with the prestige she has already obtained in that country, she will succeed in aggrandizing most of what remains. That those Asiatic tribes are destined to become the vassals of the great Northern Bear, we verily believe, and we think the work of subjugation will continue, and perhaps be rapidly prosecuted during the present year.

The spirit of reform has seized the masses of Europe, and we look for important changes in consequence. England is agitated to its centre; and Spain, proverbially slow, has just shaken off from the throne the last of the Bourbons; Austria has consented to grant to the people certain conciliatory measures, and the infection is spreading to other countries.

Not only is the political world in a state of agitation, but the earth itself seems to respond in earthquake throes to the terrible doom that awaits the rebellious nations. Never was there a time in the history of the world when earthquakes were so frequent or disastrous as now. Everything seems to point to God as the only source of safety. The earth may reel, and nations fall, yet if God is our friend we need not fear. He has promised to save us, and his word is sure.

In conclusion, brethren, allow us to remind you of the great end of life—to so live that we may be sure of obtaining the crown. The temptations of this life are many. There is a constant appeal made to the "lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life." We must meet these and overcome them. Let us not forget the simplicity and humility of our great pattern—Christ. When the year 1869 closes, and we take a retrospective view of our labors, may we be able to say with the Psalmist, "Judge me, O Lord, for I have walked in mine integrity; I have trusted also in the Lord, therefore I shall not slide. Examine me, O Lord, and prove me; try my reins and my heart, for thy loving kindness is before mine eyes, and I have walked in thy truth." Amen. W.—Herald of the Coming Kingdom.

GO AND DO LIKEWISE.

EMELINE T. HOBBS, Cambridgeport, Mass., writes: If you can furnish me with "Campaign Documents" gratuitously, I will circulate them faithfully.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We have complied with your suggestion and sent you $2 worth. We have sent off several hundred dollars worth "gratuitously;" and shall continue to do so as far as possible with the funds we have to work with; but we want to know that they are used with care, and not wasted on such as will not read them. Those who will distribute them in this way we will be glad to furnish with more or less of these "Campaign Documents" gratuitously; but we expect you to do all you can to help keep up our funds to print more.

We have just added a new tract to the list of the "Campaign Documents," viz., the Sermon "GOD IS LOVE," to which is added a short article on "LOVE," and a "REMINISCENCE" of the Author of the tract. Price $2 per 100; the postage to be added, which is about twenty-six cents.

ELD. JOHN CRAIG, Westford, Mass., writes: I am still doing all I can to spread the glorious news of no future life out of Christ. As a general thing, common sense men admit it is the most reasonable view of the character of the God of love. I greatly wish I was able to get a parcel of the "Campaign Documents." But sickness, death, and other privations keep me poor. Yet I love the cause of truth so much I cannot keep silent. I wish to do all I can to spread the light. Take courage, Br.; this glorious Life truth will yet "leaven the whole lump"—the church. O, may the light and truth shine forth in its fullest glory through the columns of the beloved HERALD OF LIFE. May the lovers of truth do all they can to spread this light far and wide; and may there be a rich harvest at the appearing of our LIFE-GIVER.

FOR every three hundred and fifty bushels of potatoes removed from our fields, the soil sustains a loss of ninety pounds of potash. Consequently, wood ashes is one of the most valuable manures in the culture of the potato.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the LIFE-GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. BY GEO. STORRS. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., St. Louis, Mo. Reviewed by GEO. STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. POST D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. POST took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the true teachings of the BIBLE is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY; by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: OR THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN; by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTERS TO A CLERGYMAN; or Life only through Christ not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburg, Pa. Price 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are 16 pages octavo. They will be sold at $3 per 100, or, fifty cents per dozen, free of postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price 7 cents.

The following are 12mo Tracts, of 24 pages each

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or the Animal Man and the Spiritual Man. A Sermon by GEO STORRS. Price 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

NON-IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

BY DR. JOHN K. FINLEY.

WE will next proceed to examine the case of the thief on the cross, which is regarded by many, who only look at one side of the question, as being so plainly in their favor that it is vain to attempt to get over it; and any effort to evade the force of it is looked upon as quite presumptuous. We admit that if the existence of a spiritual entity, such as the soul is claimed to be, had been proved, it would be reasonable to explain it as our opponents do. Let us see, however, if it is not, with greater reason, capable of a satisfactory explanation according to the life views and the analogy of the Scriptures.

1st. The request, " Lord, Remember," indicates a desire for something in the future, and that might be overlooked or forgotten.

2d. Remember me, not my soul, but me, myself. Does this not carry on the face of it, that whatever constituted the thief in his own proper personality, was the subject of the petition. It certainly contains no allusion to the soul, nothing that implies that he had or thought he had a soul that would consciously exist after he was dead.

3d. When thou comest, not when thou go est away, but evidently when he should return from where he was going, after his death and resurrection.

4th. Into thy kingdom. Archbishop Whateley says it would be more proper to render it "In thy kingdom." Either rendering, however, refers to the same event. No one will deny that Christ taught his followers, both didactically and by parables, that he was going away to receive the necessary power and authority, and would return to inaugurate, or set up a kingdom, and that the time when this would take place would be when " The Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him; then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." This shows clearly the period of time when the thief asked to be remembered. I believe it is generally conceded, I know it is by many of the orthodox teachers, that the thief had been converted some time before this meeting with Christ on the cross, and that he understood that Christ taught the fact of his intention, at a future period, to return for the purpose of reigning on the throne of David, and his request had reference specifically to that time.

Christ having plainly taught his followers this great fact, and the thief understanding and believing it, it follows naturally that the reply of our Saviour would be in accordance with these circumstances. "And Jesus said unto him, Amen;" translated, " Verily, I say unto thee to-day," or as the Syriac has it, " this day thou shalt be with me in paradise." That the word paradise, a Persian word, meaning a garden of delights, was in the future when our Saviour made this promise, and will be in his future kingdom, we learn from the following passages: "Rev. ii., 7; " To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." Now refer to Rev. xxii., 1, 2: "And he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bore twelve manner of fruits," etc. Here we see the tree of life was in paradise and in the New Jerusalem, consequently paradise is, or will be in the New Jerusalem, the seat of the throne of David, which will be the throne of Christ in his kingdom.

Revelation is a political book, giving an account of the efforts made in various ways to prevent the establishment of the kingdom of Christ by the Roman Empire in its civil and ecclesiastical forms, and the final triumph of Christ, and the setting up of his glorious kingdom after the destruction of his enemies. When the throne of this kingdom is erected, as symbolized by the descent of the New Jerusalem, we find the tree of life, and of course paradise in this kingdom. This, then, is the place where our Saviour promised the thief to be with him, and it is even yet in the future. But it will be asked, How is this to be reconciled with the statement that he was to be with Christ in paradise to-day, or this day on which the promise was made? I answer, by putting the comma after this day, instead of after thee, and the harmony of the whole translation, as well as of the whole Bible, requires that the comma should be so placed. Some of our readers may not be aware of the fact that the Greek was written without any stops or points at all, and the collocation and pointing had to be made according to the harmony of the Bible and grammatical construction of the Greek language. The punctuation of the Bible was made in the eleventh century, and was made by persons who believed in the existence and immortality of the soul, and that when man died the soul went immediately to heaven or hell. We should, of course, expect that the punctuation would be arranged so far as possible, to sustain, or at least agree, with their honest belief. We do not blame them for so doing, but we are not required to look upon them as exempt from liability to mistake. They were not infallible in their belief of what the Bible taught on all subjects, nor in the practical consequences resulting from their belief.

But we are told, and in a manner to make it appear ridiculous, that of course the thief knew it was "this day" when the Saviour made the promise. The objection shows great ignorance of one of the most common modes of expression in the Bible, and also of our own every day style of address. How common it is to hear a public speaker, or even in ordinary conversation to hear the expression in relation to some event which the speaker is sanguine will take place, "I tell you now, such or such a thing will occur." In one book alone of the Old Testament, Deuteronomy, this form of expression occurs nearly forty times. Deut. xxx., 11: "This commandment which I command thee this day, it is not hidden from thee." Verse 15, " See I have set before thee this day life and death," etc. It is not necessary to quote all or many of them, but I will refer to one which is strictly analogous to the passage we are considering. "I denounce unto you this day, that ye shall surely perish." Now place the comma after you, as is done in the case of the thief, and it will read: "I denounce unto you, this day ye shall surely perish," making the threatening to be inflicted on this day, instead of the denunciation, and thus changing the meaning of the whole passage. That the Saviour and the thief did not go to heaven on "this day," is evident from what he said to Mary after his resurrection, three days after his death: "Touch me not, for I have not yet ascended to my Father. But it is still more evident, if further evidence was needed, from what our Saviour said to the Jews. John viii., 21, and onward, referring to the time when he should go to heaven, he says: "Whither I go ye cannot come;" and to his disciples he said: "As I said unto the Jews whither I go ye cannot come, so now (or this day, or at this time), I say to you." The context in both places shows that he referred to what should take place at his ascension; for he immediately tells his disciples not to be troubled by this, for "I go to prepare a place for you; and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am ye may be also." This, too, is in full accordance with every promise he ever made to his followers. They were to be recompensed at the resurrection of the just, which was to take place at his return from heaven, when they should be brought from the dead, and "be forever with the Lord;" and the apostle tells all Christians to "comfort one another with these words," not with a promise, or any intimation that their souls were to go to him in heaven when they died. Now is it—I will not say likely—is it possible that this thief would be taken to heaven when neither his beloved and faithful apostles, and all others of his disciples would be debarred from entrance until after their resurrection?

THE COVENANTS:

C.—Good evening, Br. G. I am glad of another opportunity to converse with you on the subject of the Kingdom of Christ. I think you have placed yourself into a dilemma that you cannot easily get out of.

G.—Ah, what is that? pray tell me.

C.—You traced the title of Jesus to the inheritance from Abraham, through David, in that line down to Christ at the first advent, and then when Christ died, you say Abraham's seed terminated in the flesh so far as the royal heir was concerned.

G.—Yes, you have answered correctly, and I do not see the great difficulty of which you speak, but allow me to ask you a few questions in order to help me out of my difficulty, for if I place you in the mire alongside of myself I may possibly place my hand upon your shoulder and you may be the means of helping me out. Do you not preach and believe that Jesus Christ, as well as yourself, at death laid down his blood (animal) life never to take it up again? and do you not teach that when Paul said, "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," he merely taught the doctrine that the animal man, or life, cannot inherit the kingdom? Now, please inform me if the animal (natural) life is forfeited, what relationship there is between a resurrected Christ, in the spiritual life, and Abraham in the animal life.

C.—Well, I never thought of that before; you do put some strange questions. But do you not believe the animal life was forfeited, and that it must be rendered up at death never to be taken up again?

G.—That is not the question, what I believe; and I do not mean to allow you to answer my question by asking me another.

C.—Paul said, flesh and blood could not inherit the kingdom of God. He did not say, flesh and bones could not inherit the kingdom. It may be quickened by the Spirit of God.

G.—It seems to me that is begging the whole question; you might as well dispense with the flesh as the blood, and say blood and bones quickened by the Spirit can inherit the kingdom. I suppose the Apostle intended to say, that the animal man, in his present mortal state, cannot inherit the kingdom of God; and that agrees with your teaching that the blood or animal life is rendered up, and man must live by some other nature in the world, or age to come. Is it not so?

C.—Yes, we teach the blood life of the whole race is forfeited, even Jesus laid down his blood life, and now lives by another principle.

G.—Please inform me how David, of whom it is said that Jesus was his Son according to the flesh, becomes the shoot or outgrowth from Jesus; for it is said that Jesus is the Root, and offspring of David.

C.—I confess you have the advantage of me now. That has always bothered me to understand how it could be.

G.—Can you inform me, then, how an Ethiopian, being in Christ, can be of the seed of Abraham, and an heir according to the promise? Surely you will not claim relationship according to the flesh for the African. He is not even of Isralitish origin. How then is he coming in for his share of the inheritance?

C.—Well, you do ask some queer questions. I cannot see the drift of your questions. I cannot see the point you are driving at.

G.—Never mind the point. Answer my question.

C.—There is no relationship according to the flesh.

G.—Very well; then we are agreed so far. Now for the principle. The seed to whom God promised the land and the kingdom, was related to Abraham and David; and yet it was the Root out of which Abraham and David both sprang, and also the Ethiopian. Jesus is the Author of Eternal life, the Germ, from which all spring; the Father of the everlasting Age. Yes, even Abraham's and David's father; and when God promised Abraham that his seed should inherit the land for an everlasting posession, it was the faithful seed Christ, to whom the promise was made; and this seed was to come through the line of Abraham and David; they generated Jesus Christ according to the natural man. Jesus was the branch and offshoot of Abraham and David, and the animal Life of Abraham and David, and Jesus went down into the grave. But before He went down into the grave, He had earned by obedience the life-giving or quickening principle; hence he says, I lay down my life, and I take it up again. And he comes forth the great regenerator; the root out of which Abraham, David, and all the faithful, spring again into life. Does he then come up the son of Abraham? I answer, No, not according to the flesh; but in the language of the Apostle, "And that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves but unto him which died for them and rose again. Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the flesh: yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more. Herefore if any man be in Christ he is a new creation." 2 Cor. v., 15, 16.

It is this new creation of which Jesus is the head, the true Israel of God. And if any man be in this Christ, he is a new creation; begotten again by the same Spirit as Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and Jesus were. The crown royal then went down through the line of Abraham and David in the flesh, until it came to the true seed, Christ; and with him went down the last of the royal seed according to the flesh; and He came up, not the seed of Abraham according to the flesh, for that never could germinate, but he came up the seed of God, "according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection of the dead." Rom. i., 2.

C.—But is he not the seed of Abraham in any sense?

G.—As Abraham was the father of the faithful, or the father of all the faithful, Christ in that sense is the seed of Abraham; and yet, if it were not for this incorruptible seed in Jesus, even Abraham would never have been generated from the dead.

It was the purpose and plan of God to have an incorruptible seed, and an incorruptible kingdom; and this made Peter break out in the sublime language, when he said, "Blessed be that God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who according to his great mercy has begotten us again to a hope of life by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead; and to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and unfading, reserved in heaven for you, who are guarded through faith (by the power of God) for a salvation prepared to be revealed in the last times." Again he says, "Having been regenerated, not from corruptible seed (like Abraham's amimal seed) but from incorruptible seed through the living and enduring word of God; for all flesh is grass, (even Abraham's) and all its glory as the flower of the grass: the grass withereth and the flowers fall off, but the word of the Lord continues to the age. Now this is that word which has been announced as glad tidings to you." And also Paul, when he broke out in the following sublime language, "According to a Plan of the Ages which he formed for the Anointed Jesus our Lord." "To him be the glory in the congregation, by Christ Jesus, to all the generation of the Age of the Ages. Amen. Eph. i. Here we understand the Apostle to say of the congregation of ages past, made for Jesus the anointed, are all consummated in the coming age; which will be the age of all the past ages. For of that Age Jesus will be the head of all things to the Church. He will be the Alpha and the Omega. Yea, he will be all in all. We have protracted this conversation further than we intended, and think we had better leave it, and therefore we will take leave of this subject for the present. Yours, in hope of a part in the kingdom of Jesus Christ.

DYING TWICE.

" Behold, all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine; the soul that sinneth, it shall die."—Ezek. xviii., 4.

THERE is nothing in this text that teaches the resurrection of the wicked; but those who hold to the resurrection of the ungodly often quote it and other texts in the chapter to support their theory. The 26th verse is frequently quoted with the 4th: it reads, " When a righteous man turneth away from his righteousness and committeth iniquity, and dieth IN them; FOR his iniquity that he hath done shall he die." Great stress is laid upon the words IN and FOR: and we are told that dying IN our sins is the first death, and dying FOR our sins is the second death.

That the prophet did not teach that the wicked die twice is evident from his prophecy. In the commencement of this chapter he says, " What mean ye, that ye use this proverb concerning the land of Israel, saying, the fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge. As I live, saith the Lord God, ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb in Israel. Behold all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine: the soul that sinneth, IT shall die."

Can anything be plainer than the facts that Ezekiel was living under the law, and that he gave the Jews to understand that their sour-grape theory of children's being put to death for their parents, sins, and vice versa, was false. He declares unto them, " The soul that sinneth, it shall die. A case right to the point is found in 2 Kings, xiv., 5, 6: " And it came to pass, as soon as the kingdom was confirmed in his hand, that he slew his servants which had slain the king his father. But the children of the murderers he slew not: according unto that which is written in the book of the law of Moses, wherein the Lord commanded, saying, The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, nor the children be put to death for the fathers; but every man shall be put to death for his own sin."

The language of the prophecy of Ezekiel is in harmony with these verses. "The soul that sinneth it shall die:" it shall be put to death. Dying in iniquity and for iniquity as taught in this prophecy means one and the same thing. This statement will be found to be a correct one by any who will read the third, fourth, and fifth chapters of Ezekiel, noting the application of the terms FOR and IN. Beyond the possibility of successful contradiction the dying of rebellious Israel in and for their iniquity, is placed very far this side of the second coming of Christ.

FROM WM. W. DOUGHTY.

LYNN, Mass., Jan. 24, 1869.

BR. STORRS: Inclosed is $9; also the names of seven new subscribers to the HERALD OF LIFE. I feel much interested in the success of the dear HERALD, and have been ever since its birth under the old chestnut tree at Wilbraham; although I have not had the privilege of meeting with the dear children of God of like precious faith since that time; but have remembered them in my prayers that they may be possessed of the meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price: for unless we have the holy Spirit in our hearts we are in a lost condition: for by this we are sealed till the day of redemption: and this Spirit will make us gentle; for the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law; and they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts. If we live in the Spirit let us also walk in the Spirit. Gal. v., 22, 25; for as many as are led by the Spirit of God they are the sons of God. Rom. viii., 14. Truly this is an exalted position to hold such a relationship to the all-wise Creator, when we realize that we are but dust, and are not deserving of the least of His blessings, all of them being unmerited. Life, although mingled with sorrow, is a great boon; for all that a man hath will he give for it. But how many are there that appreciate this blessing? But few comparatively. The majority act as though their life was their own, not considering they live on unmerited favor. What right have we to live even a moment? Have we purchased it? Nay, verily. When the Apostle was addressing the Athenians in relation to the UNKNOWN GOD, whom they ignorantly worshipped, he declared unto them, God that made the world and all things therein, seeing he is Lord of heaven and earth . . . neither is worshipped with men's hands, as though he needed anything, seeing he giveth to all life and breath and all things. Acts xvii., 24, 25.

So it is not by purchase that we live, but God's love and mercy that He continues our existence. Although the Lord has given us life, it is forfeited by transgression, so that we have no right to live; but He continues it; not for the sake of gratifying our own desires, but that we should seek him if haply we might feel after him and find him, although He be not far from every one of us; for in Him we live, move and have our being. Acts, vii., 27, 28. The invitation is, Come unto me all ye ends of the earth and be ye saved. Why not accept of the invitation before it is too late? Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die. Look to Christ, for he is the one that can save to the uttermost. Soon it will be too late. When once the Master of the house rises up and shuts to the door, it will then be too late. Accept Christ now, and when he comes with all his holy angels to reward his saints we shall be waked up, if asleep; and if alive we shall be changed from mortal to immortality, and caught up to meet him in the air; and so be forever with him. 1 Thess. iv., 17. Amen; even so, come Lord Jesus.

A SHORT SERMON.

BY D. J. E. TO A FRIEND.

"I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life."—John xiv., 6.

IN this announcement of our Saviour to one of his disciples, and the manner in which it was received, we are led to wonder many times at the weakness of faith and the doubt manifested on various occasions by the disciples of our Lord; after the many demonstrations of power they had witnessed in proof of his divine mission.

And yet, when we look at our Saviour, as he presented himself to the world; His humble and obscure origin, the lowliness of His birth and parentage; so unlike in every feature from the hopes and expectations which had been entertained by the Jewish people in regard to the promised Messiah, we are enabled to understand why it was that doubts continually arose in the minds of His disciples in regard to Him.

He had not been received by the learned and great of the Jewish nation, those whom it would naturally be supposed to be familiar with the prophets.

These expounders of the law and the prophets had everlooked, or else had not accepted, the plain obvious meaning of much that had been written, concerning the Heir to David's throne, the long looked for King of Israel. They were suffering under the bondage to the Roman power, and they expected that He who should come would deliver them; cast down their enemies, and exalt them to a higher position in the world than they had ever known.

But such was not the plan of the Almighty in sending his only Son into the world. Although God had chosen the Jewish nation in the early history of the world, and lavished upon them innumerable privileges and blessings, yet had they departed from Him and his commandments, many, many times; bringing upon themselves the wrath and judgments of a righteous God.

Therefore it was that God sent his Son into the world, to save the world: and not the Jewish nation only, but all, of every nation, who should accept and believe on the name of His Son, Jesus Christ. He was obedient unto death, though not subject to it; yet He tasted death for every man, that He might redeem those who were under the power of death. "For it became Him for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings." "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself, likewise took part of the same: that through death He might destroy him that hath the power of death, that is, the devil," or, accuser. "Wherefore in all things it behoved Him to be made like unto his brethren, that He might be a merciful and faithful High Priest, in all things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people; for in that He himself hath suffered being tempted, He is able to succor them that are tempted." Heb. ii., 10, 14, 17, 18.

He was God manifest in the flesh: that is, the Spirit of God was in him. He was the personification of God, so that He could well say to the doubting Philip, "he that hath seen me, hath seen the Father also." "Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me:" "believe this of me, or else believe me for the very work's sake."

We find that one of the strong bands which Christ threw around his followers was his intense and unchanging love toward them. He ever regarded them with tender compassion and pity. He was always ready to provide for them, and protect them; to forgive them at all times when they had wronged him.

In the example of Peter, who had professed such a strong attachment for his Master, that he would follow him even unto death, and afterward, when the trying hour came, and Jesus had fallen into the hands of His enemies, Peter turned his back upon his master, and denied, with an oath, that he had ever known Him. That one look, at this time, of the Saviour upon Peter, was enough to melt his heart, and caused him to weep bitterly over his sin and folly.

It was a severe lesson to him, and it is not probable that he ever forgot it; for by faith in his Master, and the grace given him, he became one of Christ's bold and fearless defenders.

It is a lesson for us also, that in all our ways, we should seek to please Him, that we may be united to Him by a living faith, and be as a city set upon a hill that cannot be hid; that at last we may hear from Him the bidding of welcome, to be partakers with Him in His everlasting kingdom.

God grant that you and I may ever be found with the wedding garment on, and be ready to meet Him at His coming.

FROM ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Jan. 28, 1869.

BR. STORRS: I attended a Bible class at Ninth Street and Girard Avenue, on Sunday morning. The subject, "The last days," was fully discussed in the most kind and delightful Christian spirit. It was instructive and profitable. It might be well to follow this course in many places. With prayers and singing and a topic of discussion, allowing all to take a part, with some wholesome limitations upon all, the interest would be better in many cases, especially where congregations are small, and composed mostly of believers, than to have a sermon. Or there might be a chapter read, and explanations by references, comments and experiences. Where there is to be a sermon in the evening this is well adapted.

In some places the brethren read a chapter and hold a prayer and conference meeting, speaking upon the chapter, if they please. This is well, and better than a dry sermon.

I have become satisfied that, where there is a service held in the evening, a morning service in which all can take a part, is much to be preferred.

A knowledge of the Scriptures, which will result from the study of them, is much better than mere exercising and telling over how we feel. Yet to speak often on the blessed hope is good.

In the evening I preached on the text, Phil. iii., 12.

FROM M. E. ROLLINS.

NEW YORK, Jan. 26, 1869.

BR. STORRS: I wish to write a few of my thoughts, to let you know how filled my heart is with gratitude to God and how much of the love of Jesus I feel, and how precious it is to contemplate upon the way that God has planned out for man's redemption, "No life out of Christ." I have been made to sing praises to God in the highest for some two weeks or more, by embracing the life doctrine, or, No life only in Christ. How glorious and beautiful God looks to me. He is truly a God of love; bless his holy name. I feel like pressing with vigor on, and I feel such an earnest desire for the salvation of sinners. I think the Advent churches ought to be up and doing. I feel like working in the vineyard of the Lord. O that the power of God might be felt in Cooper Institute. O for the essential baptism! It is deck hands that are wanted on board of the old ship of Zion; not lady and gentlemen passengers. Jesus, for the joy set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is now at the right hand of the Father on high. I feel that this doctrine is the crowning one of all. I was told, it was the last days' invention of the devil; and that death inevitably followed; but as I had not become a graduate, I thought I would let the Lord lead; and so I let the blessed Spirit lead; and how sweetly I have been lead by the Spirit of God. Sometime since I was somewhat tired of serving the Master; but since I have embraced this blessed truth, I feel it is a pleasure to serve the Lord; and when I meditate upon the bright inheritance of the saints, not above in the stars or moon, but on the earth—" the meek shall inherit the earth"—it makes my poor heart glad, and to praise Him who has purchased me with his own blood, and will shortly redeem the purchase. We are not our own, we are bought with a price.

Death truly is an awful sound to those that have not God. Never to be ransomed from that state. O I feel more and more like serving the Lord. Some might say, "O, that is no penalty." But to those that rightly appreciate life, it is a terrible penalty. The non-resurrection of the wicked dead, and the unconsciousness state of men in death, are precious truths to me, and I owe it to Br. Bishop as an instrument in the hands of God, with much prayer and study on my part, of enlightening me.

As I have said, if I do not become a graduate, and let God lead me, He will lead me into all truth; for the path of the just is as a shining light, shining brighter and brighter until the perfect day.

Now if these are "the last days' invention of the devil," the non-living again of the wicked dead has been a wonderful cure-all for me. Why, I feel like serving God. It has put new energy in me. If I was out of Christ, I would seek for pardon immediately. But, by the way, How many devils are there? Some people have a number down in hell, putting departed souls through a course of lectures! How thankful I feel that my eyes have been anointed with eye-salve, so as to see God in his infinite goodness and mercy. O that we may lay hold on eternal life. If you sow to the flesh, you shall of the flesh reap corruption; and I cannot see how the wicked dead are going to be raised incorruptible; for Paul says, "the dead are raised incorruptible."

I am fully persuaded that they who are accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, shall not die any more; for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. Praise the Lord. Here is something peculiar to the righteous only. It seems to be a spirit of revenge to bring the wicked up to be punished. Why not let them be? If we have the spirit of Jesus, we will not want them brought up. He prayed, Father forgive them, for they know not what they do. And so will all the martyrs when the archangel sounds the last trumpet, and they come forth. They will not wish those who put them to death to suffer. O no: it is too revengeful for me. O that I may be accounted worthy to obtain that world. Pray for me, that I may be faithful, always abounding in the work of the Lord. Yours in the bonds of divine love, and in hope of eternal life at the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ.

THE TOBACCO ANTIDOTE.

Without Money and Without Price. In our Anti-Tobacco labors, we see thousands whose WILLS are paralyzed by tobacco, who struggle to be free, but give up in despair. They need an Antidote for an insatiable appetite. Resolution must be armed and Hope inspired. We have such, and gladly publish it to every sufferer and to the world.

To such as are utterly stupefied by the drug, and such as revel in saliva and smoke—glorying in their shame—we make no appeal; but to such as "groan, being in bondage," longing to be free, we say, "Here is our Antidote, friend; try it. We ask nothing for it."

1. Make the most of your Will. Drop tobacco, and resolve never to use it again in any form.

2. Go to an apothecary, and buy ten cents' worth of GENTIAN root, coarsely ground.

3. Take as much of it after each meal, or oftener, as amounts to a common quid of "fine cut" or "cavendish."

4. Chew it well, and swallow all the saliva.

5. Continue this a few weeks, and you will come off conqueror; then thank God, and thank us.

REASONS.

1. Gentian is a tonic, bitter in taste, and will do much to neutralize and allay your taste for tobacco.

2. Gentian is a nervine. It will brace up your relaxed and flabby nerves, and save you from the "awful goneness" under which victims agonize.

3. Gentian, for a short time, is an innocent substitute for the quid or pipe. It employs the mouth, beguiles attention, and gives a helping hand to a drowning man.

Despise not our antidote. Money-making men give us to understand, that, should we fill millions of little boxes with Gentian, mark them "TRASK'S INFALLIBLE TOBACCO CURE," price one dollar, we should soon fill our empty coffers, and become a millionnaire.

We shall do no such thing. We shall continue to spread tracts over the nation, showing that tobacco tends to ruin the body and the soul, and ruin nations; and beg enslaved men to try our Antidote—Resolution, Gentian, and the Grace of God. Thousands will try it and be free.—From Rev. George Trask.

CHARLES H. SUTTON, Manayunk, Pa., writes: The HERALD is very good. I agree with yourself that self-constituted organizations are not conducive to a free investigation of Bible truth, nor vital Godliness. "Sanctify them through Thy truth; Thy word is truth," said He who spake like no other man. "The truth shall make you free," is the experience of the true believer in Christ. May we ever seek to know the truth and abide in it, is the prayer of yours, in Christ.

HIRAM DROWN, Coventry, Vt., sends $3 for tracts, etc., and writes: I rejoice in looking over the HERALD OF LIFE to see what is going on by the books and tracts that are published in the HERALD office. My prayer is that this work may increase, and I trust that God will send laborers into His vineyard. I will do all I can to spread the work. May God bless all the brethren engaged in it.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 10, 1869.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not. he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

TWO AND TWO MAKE FIVE.

Is the above statement correct? Is it not a palpable error? Would any sound mind receive it for truth? Is the following statement any more correct in theology, than the above is in mathematics?

Jesus Christ has come and revealed truths never otherwise to be known, and yet his professed preachers and papers still deny these most central truths. Of all the truths which He came to teach, these are the chief: Man is a sinner and doomed to endless misery. I am his God and his Saviour. I suffered and died for his Salvation. I offer him, with regenerating grace, a new birth, new creation, everlasting life, solely on the ground of accepting Me as the Redeemer. If you reject Me you must forever die.

This extract we have clipped from Zion's Herald of Jan. 21.

"Man is doomed to endless misery."

"If you reject Me you must forever die."

Are we to believe Jesus Christ taught two such contradictory theories? Did He who was "the wisdom of God" utter such palpable contradictions? One or the other of these statements must strike a reflecting mind as untrue; as palpably so, as that "two and two make five." Either man is not doomed to endless misery, or he will not forever die.

"Man is doomed to endless misery:"

Therefore, he cannot "forever die."

Or thus:

Man will "forever die:"

Therefore, he is not "dooomed to endless misery."

Are we to receive such statements as the above extract contains as "most central truths" in our Lord's teaching? We need say nothing of other points in the extract, except to ask, where did Jesus Christ ever say, "I am his [the sinner's] God?" Where did Christ or his apostles ever say or teach that "God suffered and died?" Mind, we do not ask these question for disputation, because Jesus has said, "No man knoweth who the Son is but the Father." But our Br. of Zion's Herald may have some information from the "Father" on the subject not known to us mortal creatures. He speaks as if he had; but we dare not trust his assertion till he gives us the evidence. Such "most central truths" should be as undeniable as that the sun is the "central" power of our solar system. All we desire is the plain statement of the word of God that Christ taught himself to be the God of the sinner; and as such, suffered and died. Observe, we do not dispute your assertion. We only want the texts that say it as plainly as you do.

A NOBLE CONFESSION.

The Methodist Quarterly Review, for January 1869, has some remarks on the annihilation of the wicked which contain, in fact, one of the most noble confessions from our opponents that we have ever seen. They are an honor put upon our views we did not soon expect to see from so high a source. After giving a quotation from a writer in the Christian Advocate of this city, a man of high standing in the M. E. Church, which concludes with these words,

"Who would not prefer the dungeon to the cord, the rack to the guillotine? Death is the greatest punishment man or God can inflict. Eternal life in death is preferable to eternal annihilation." The Methodist Quarterly responds:

"Now did we believe this, that annihilation is more terrible than eternal misery, we should consider the greatest difficulty in Christian theodicy to have attained a solution. The most terrible of all punishments for sin is attained without the slightest pretext for a charge of injustice upon the divine Inflicter. No one can claim a moment of future existence as a right, or its withdrawal as a wrong. God can justly, at his pleasure, drop any being into instant nothingness. And now, if this be the most terrible of dooms, then God can inflict it, or permit it, for sin great or small, and the most captious caviller can utter no complaint. Universalism could not charge this theory with injustice, nor orthodoxy charge it with immoral tendency in lightening the penalty of sin. But for our individual part we would infinitely prefer the brief 'guillotine' to the eternal 'rack.'"

We call this "a noble confession," not because the author of it indorses our views, for he does not; but it is an admission, in the first place, that the doctrine of eternal misery is the greatest difficulty in Christian theodicy; and in the second place, if annihilation is as terrible as the writer in the Advocate says, it is a punishment that can be inflicted without the slightest pretext for a charge of injustice upon the divine Inflicter, by any party concerned.

Here then is a noble confession. Coming as it does from a mind of long experience and a Christian minister of high standing in the M. E. Church, it is a cheering indication of abatement of the misrepresentations of our views which we have so long endured from some men in high places in that church and in other "orthodox" churches.

It is, at least, an admission that our view of the punishment for sin removes from all classes, whether saints or sinners, all pretext for a charge of injustice in the punishment, on the score of severity. Our respected Br. Editor thinks, for himself, he would prefer annihilation to eternal misery; and this latter punishment he admits is the greatest difficulty in Christian theodicy; yes, even more, that this difficulty has never had "a solution:" and he does see how sweetly and uninterruptedly the stream of justice would flow over every mind, if the doctrine of the literal extinction of the life of the sinner were true.

It is our happy lot to live in this pure stream which at once magnifies the justice and love of God, and opens up to our view the accomplishment of the prophecy of Rev. v., 13. "And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I, saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth on the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever." Here is no theological hell song. That place, if it ever existed, is annihilated, with all its imaginary torturing engines. "The wages of sin is death." Rom. vi., 23. That death is eternal; all survivors join in the above song: and sin and sorrow are ended forever. Amen: Alleluia.

A QUESTION.

What is the meaning of John iii., 5, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." I do not believe water baptism is essential; but what did Jesus mean by being born of water. That is a mystery to me.

H. D.

IT is a "mystery to" us that any thinking person should overlook our Lord's own explanation of these words in the verse following. Why must a man be born again? Because, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh;" (and all births of the flesh are of water, as any midwife or mother knows; therefore is perishable and cannot inherit the kingdom of God, which is an eternal inheritance: therefore "ye must be born again;" for only) "that which is born of the Spirit is spirit," or spiritual. There is a begetting first in both cases. A child is never born of water, i. e., of the flesh, till it is first begotten. So no man is ever born again who is not first begotten by the Spirit, with the incorruptible seed, the truth of God. By the Spirit and the truth the incorruptible nature is formed, and is in an embryotic state till the resurrection, at the last day, when it is developed into a new life, or is born of the Spirit into an incorruptible and immortal state, and lives in the kingdom of God; and is a child of God, being a child of the resurrection. Luke xx., 36.

AN EARNEST LADY.

A TRACT has been sent us from St. Paul, Minn., purporting to be "Published by a Lady," entitled "Semi-Sadduceeism Exposed," etc. Whether she is related to the OLD LADY of Babylon or not, we cannot say; but her language sounds very much like it. Her object is to "prevent" the spread of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ;" or of, No future life without a resurrection from the dead. This doctrine she calls "Semi-Sadduceeism," and affirms the believers in it "cannot produce one text in the New Testament which teaches it." Suppose this assertion were true, is she willing to stake her doctrine of an "immortal soul" on the finding of "one text in the New Testament which teaches it?" We will go a step further—If she can find one text in the Bible, anywhere, that saith, "the soul is immortal," or that man's "spirit is deathless," we pledge ourself to travel all the way to Minnesota, and on our knees confess to this "Lady" our great error in ever having promulgated the doctrine of "No future life out of Christ;" and that such life is only conferred on the saints by a resurrection at the last day, or a change to immortality, if alive when that last day comes. If she cannot find one text in the Bible affirming "the soul is immortal," is she willing to confess her error? We will help her to one that comes nearest to her view to be found in the Bible; it is this, "Thou shalt not surely die." Gen. iii., 4. The author of those words she may determine for herself.

She quotes the texts, "No man hath ascended into heaven, but he who came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven;" and "If Christ be not risen, then they also who have fallen asleep in Christ are perished;" both of which she summarily disposes of, and then adds, "These two (texts) are all the New Testament text which it is pretended teach the doctrine."

We do not like to attribute to a "Lady" either ignorance or deliberate falsehood; but if the author of such a statement had been a man we could not avoid the conclusion that he was a great ignoramus, or else uttered a known falsehood. But a "Lady" cannot be supposed to merit language so severe applied to her, so we are compelled to conclude, that "as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety, so" this good "Lady" has been "deceived" by too much confidence in some pretended theologian who had not the manliness openly to show himself, but follows the illustrious example of the supposed author of the text "thou shalt not surely die."

But as the publisher of the tract before us is a "Lady," and for aught we know its author, we will let her off by simply suggesting to her that it would be much more to her credit not to meddle with things "too high" for her; and a few years more of careful study of the views and arguments of those she professes to oppose, and calls "Semi-Sadducees," may at least develop in her a more "meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." 1 Pet. iii., 4.

We close these remarks by giving our readers one example of the wisdom and understanding of the author of the tract. To prove us wrong, among other matters, the following utterance is made:

Peter taught that Christ was once "put to death in the flesh," but was alive or "quickened in Spirit, by which he went and preached to the Spirits in prison, which sometime were disobedient." He tells us why he did it. "That they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in Spirit."

This quotation may give our readers an idea of the knowledge and accuracy of the author of the tract. It is open to the severest criticism, clearly teaching the doctrine of preaching the gospel in the theological hell, and the possibility of deliverance from eternal torments. But we forbear, to spare the "Lady."

A GENEROUS OFFER.

WE propose to give the remaining numbers of this volume, which now is thirty, to any new subscriber who will send us one dollar immediately, and will add as many back numbers as we can supply. Those who send the dollar will be entitled only to so many numbers as will be issued after the money is received. This is essential to be understood, because we never print many copies more than we have subscribers. Hence those who send immediately will be likely to get from thirty to thirty-five numbers; while those two or three weeks later will diminish from thirty in the ratio of the number of weeks. Let the friends of the paper see what can be done in this matter. Just give one day to a trial and expect a good result. Will it not be well for all, who can, to send the paper to some friend on the above offer? We are sending out several hundred more papers now than in any previous year. Let us have a few hundred more new subscribers on this liberal proposal. We trust we shall.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

WE are still sending out thousands of these truth tellers, and shall send out thousands more, rapidly as possible, and as funds will permit. We have denied no one who has called for them, whether they have sent funds or not. But we must judge for ourselves whether we can send as many as the applicant asks for, if he sends no funds. We have sent out hundreds the past ten days, in sets, to more than a hundred different individuals and paid the postage on them, as the law requires. Shall we continue this work? If so, we must have funds.

Our friends will see that we have five works in our list of Campaign Documents; and we think to add "Man's Nature and Destiny;" the "Atonement;" and the "Doom of the Ungodly" to the list, making eight in all, putting these three at the same price as the others of 24 pages: i. e., two cents each. Then the eight together can be had for 20 cents. Add to this, four cents for postage, and how can any lover of these truths do better than to furnish a set to a friend or acquaintance? While we give more or less to those who ask, it is manifest we must have additional funds. Donations are acceptable; but sales of the works also help to replace our stock of them. Let all do something, who can.

A STATEMENT AND QUERIES.

[The following was sent us from Chicago, Ill. The writer is unknown to us, but indorsed as "a most excellent man" by Br. A. B. Van Doren of that city.—ED.]

IN the WATCH TOWER occurs this expression: "To have an idea of personal existence we must have both material and form; it may be of a texture as pure and impalpable as light; but, a material there must be, however subtile."

If the resurrection be a rising to life out of the grave or sheol, the dead who rise again must be in existence there. But what intelligent idea can we form of the Christian in death? there appears to be three main theories of this, viz.,

1. The orthodox: that the real man (the soul) leaves the body at death, and, returning for, unites to it.

2. That the real man is synonymous with the organization of bones, blood, and flesh, that are now possessed: so, to bring up the same man, you must bring up the identical atoms that made him.

3. That the natural man is truly and only flesh and blood; but that the new man, or spiritual man, is not flesh and blood, and he only has a restoration to life.

The first of these, at this time, needs no comment. But of the second, or mortal resurrection class, Eld. Grant says (in substance), There is nothing entering into any man's composition but flesh and blood: for, he said, the Holy Spirit is "no substance" but "something." He evidently looks upon it as a real nothing; and consequently there is nothing of substance in a Christian, in life or death, more than a wicked man. The resurrection with him is a rising from the dead of all who have borne the human form: although some of lower order of living souls may be better, or more intelligent.

The "Christadelphian" expects up only those who have put on Christ by commersion—the just, and the unjust Christian. Both see nothing in a man in Christ, other than sensible, gross, tangible matter.

Eld. Grant logically argues that the very same atoms must come up to make the man of his theory: while Dr. Thomas, followers as rightly say, the Christian's identity lays in his character: but that this is a real nothing, and that the Christian in death is "nowhere." A form does come forth from the dust, but it is "other dust;" and this new dust there and then receives the imprint of the character, which at death was completed and caught up to heaven, and has existed in the mind of God as a record merely. These resurrected ones are new men with a superadded unsubstantial character.

Of these views, it seems evident, that the dead are truly nowhere; if they are not in sheol, they were certainly put in their graves, and they are to come out. So they must be there, if anywhere.

But to the question of identity in death. Neither of the above views seems to be logical or scriptural, for reasons. But the view above from the "WATCH TOWER" seems to open a way out of the dilemma scripturally and rationally. Understanding it thus: that the Christian commenced to be at the impartation of a germ, or begotten seed; and embryotic spiritual substance; a babe or new man in Christ Jesus; growing up as character, develops into a perfect man; in sheol existing in true identity, but inactive, asleep, dead, until awoke by the sound of the trumpet and the impartation of life at the second coming of the Saviour; arising as it (neuter) went down, a spiritual being, an etherial, sublimated or refined organization, hid then from sensual sense, but manifest now in another and more glorious, and incorruptible body, and power to make itself seen and felt.

Is not this the true view of the just ones in death? The queries involved are:

1. Is the Holy Spirit, imparted to natural men, anything or nothing?

2. Does it constitute the basis of the Christian character or substance?

3. Does it dwell with true Christians, but leave false ones in life?

4. Does it remain intact, barring animation in death?

5. Is the resurrection predicated of anything save this very spiritual man?

RESPONSE BY THE EDITOR.

"1." It is a vitalizing reality where received.

"2." It does, and is the only substantial element in such.

"3." It most certainly does.

"4." Yes.

"5." It is not. "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. viii., 11. Nothing else will ever give life from the dead to any man.

INTOLERANCE.

I DO dislike the spirit of intolerance, so often manifested among the professed followers of Christ, and exhibited toward each other on account of the different views entertained by them concerning the doctrines of the Bible. It does not seem so strange to see this spirit manifested among mere worldling professors, whose religion is nothing more than a mere cold-hearted mixture of sacred things with the elements of this world; for they have only the form of godliness, the outside show, without the great vital principle, the spirit of Christianity, to accompany it. They do not know, by experience, much about the Christianity of the Bible, and therefore are left, in a great measure, to the guidance of their own poor human reason. Such people, being destitute of the principle which cements the hearts of true Christians together—namely, the principle of Christian love and forbearance—are ever ready to condemn all who take the liberty to think for themselves, rather than subscribe to articles of faith contrary to their honest convictions of truth. These would-be lords over God's heritage are very apt to over-estimate the responsibility which rests upon them, and seem to think the prosperity of the church depends in a great measure upon their vigilance and zeal in ferreting out heretics and pulling up tares; or, in other words, in proscribing and condemning those who differ from the established creed in matters of faith.

It does not seem strange, I say, to see such people manifest a spirit of intolerance toward those who dissent from them in matters of faith; but to see brethren of a common faith, who have come out from all such human policy, and professedly baptised by one Spirit into one body; to see such people as these building again the things which they once destroyed, and adopting the intolerant policy of a God-forsaken, proud, nominal church, looks sad indeed. Such a policy is fast being adopted by various portions of the Advent body. How sad, and yet how just, have been the complaints uttered by these same people against the intolerant and unchristian spirit they had to encounter from their former brethren in the various churches, when the glorious doctrines relating to the second personal advent of Christ first began to be believed and advocated by them!

How these same people have rejoiced, in advocating what they considered to be truth, while enjoying that freedom of thought and utterance for the sake of which they severed themselves from their former brethren! How galling is the system which seeks to deprive the Christian of the right of free speech! and the yoke of bondage fits none the easier to his neck from being imposed by his professed brethren. On the other hand, how benign the system which guarantees to the Christian the right to think and speak according to the dictates of his own conscience, so far as human authority is concerned! These two systems are in open antagonism to each other. The first-named system is fitly represented by the anti-Christian power whose seat is at Rome; the second-named system is the one taught by Christ and his apostles.

When the Advent people first started out as a distinct people, they started upon the broad platform of free toleration. Upon that platform they have prospered, and have been blessed amazingly; and would without doubt have continued to prosper, had they still adhered to that divine principle. But alas! a feeling of distrust has for some time been manifested by certain portions of the Advent body, which is shown so plainly that it cannot be mistaken. It is manifested in their preaching, through their papers, and in various other ways.

One most prominent doctrine against which this uncharitable and intolerant spirit is manifested, is the doctrine of "No future Life out of Christ." No stone is left unturned by the opposition to overthrow, if possible, this great cardinal truth of revelation. But although it is opposed, it continues to spread, and will continue to do so, notwithstanding the efforts made to arrest it.

I have noticed recently that several Advent Christian conferences, in different parts of the country, have passed resolutions against this truth, as if it was the cause of discord in the church. But the cause of discord comes from another source. When brethren get humble enough to be willing that others should enjoy their opinions as well as themselves, there will be no discord. When will professed Christians learn to observe this blessed precept, as laid down by our great Law-giver. "As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them?" Until they do learn to observe this precept, there will be discord and strife.

May the Lord help all his children to have fervent charity one toward the other, and so to grow in grace that they may at least be found fit subjects to enter his glorious kingdom.

SADNESS OF HEART.

ALTHOUGH it is enjoined upon believers to "rejoice evermore, it is impossible, in this imperfect state, that our days pass without sadness and sorrow of heart; but it nevertheless does not necessarily exclude joy and rejoicing in tribulation. The Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering. He was a man of sorrow, and acquainted with grief; and it is enough that the disciple should be as his Master, not a stranger to sorrows, which arise from a variety of causes, and in some cases may be easily borne; while in others it bears hard and produces that sorrow which oft causes the flowing tear.

While reading in the last Crisis the doings of the Bristol (R. I.) Conference, I could but feel sad and sorrowful that our own familiar friends, in whom we trusted as truly Christian, which did eat of our bread, should lift up their heel against us, saying that the believers in the non-resurrection of the wicked dead, "Did, at the Springfield camp-meeting, publicly, constantly, and openly controvert and assail the gospel hope of the resurrection, to the detriment of babes in Christ."

Had it been an enemy that hated us, we could have borne these things without that sorrow; but it was from men our equals, our acquaintance, with whom we had taken sweet counsel and walked to the house of God in company, who said these things, (ignorantly, we trust) in their zeal for the Lord. These are hard sayings and accusations. Jesus said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me;" and so I feel in this case (although I am not a public speaker) that these things are said of me; for my faith and sympathies are with those who believe and preach the gospel hope of the resurrection, through Jesus, of believers to life and immortality, while the wicked "remain in the congregation of the dead."

The question came up, What is the gospel hope, which we have to unjustly assailed? The gospel is always supposed to be good news, glad tidings of the grace of God, which have brought life and immortality to light. "The Scriptures, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen" (the Gentiles) "through faith" (unto the justification of life) "preached the gospel unto Abraham:" which good news, glad tidings, embraced an everlasting inheritance and blessings involving a resurrection through his seed, which is Christ. Paul tells us, if we be Christ's (justified through faith,) we are Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise. Now, without controversy or argument, it is evident that the gospel preached to Abraham embraced promises of good. Nothing else can inspire obedience and righteousness, or become the subject of hope; i. e., a good hope, or the hope of the gospel, which presents to the believer only, Life and immortality, with an exceeding and eternal weight of glory through a resurrection from the dead, by Jesus Christ, who is the resurrection (or Resurrector) and the Life. Says Jesus, I am the way; I am the truth, (or true one); I am the resurrection and the life." He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son hath not life. Without the spirit of Christ we are none of his.

Now, whatever, does not present to the believer something supposed to be good and desirable cannot possibly be a subject of hope: and inasmuch as the bringing into conscious existence an innumerable host, whose condition cannot possibly be bettered by that existence, but to suffer untold agonies and torture which cannot be of use to them, nor desired by one possessing the spirit of Christ, which is not revenge, but love and goodwill to all: therefore I say, it is impossible that such a thing can be glad tidings, good news, and constitute any part of the gospel hope.

Now, it is an undeniable fact, that for twenty years, the main body of Adventists have believed and preached that believers would be "raised in incorruption," the resurrection being the only door or birth to life and immortality, they being previously begotten by the Spirit of Christ, saying, "If the dead rise not . . . then they also that have fallen asleep in Christ are perished." But alas, how sad the thought, that because some see and teach the way so straight and the gate unto life so narrow that none but believers, begotten ones, have promise of, or ever will enter through that door, they now deny their former Scriptural position, and say that the good and the bad, the precious and the vile will all come forth, through that door, unto life in all their native corruption and deformity, not having a glorious body like unto the Resurrector, or him that hath begotten us, Jesus, the first fruits, and father of the everlasting, or resurrection age. How dishonoring to Jesus, our Life-giver!

Is it not such that we may understand the Bristol conference to say is "The hope of the gospel?" If such be the gospel hope, I am a stranger to it and ever wish to be, believing it impossible to come within the scope of an understanding Christian's hope; while it may be possible for a Christian to believe it against hope. If contending against such be the charge brought against us by the said conference, I think we may willingly and cheerfully plead guilty to it, having the spirit of our Master and his teaching on our side.

But the charge appears to embrace the "resurrection of the just," as being openly and publicly controverted and assailed by us (or the believers of the non-resurrection of the wicked dead), while it reads "both the just and the unjust. Charity prompts to believe that such was an oversight, but how it could be, and pass unobserved by those wishing to be governed by the spirit of Christ, is more than I can know, except the god of prepossessed opinion had so blinded their minds that they knew not what they did.

Again they say, "Their notions are detrimental to babes in Christ." Now, if the teaching that "God is Love," that his ways are just and equal, that He has no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, that He does not afflict willingly, that all His doings are in love and kindness, that His promises are great and exceeding precious to all that love, believe and obey Him; while the enemies of Jesus, who would not that He should reign over them, have no promise of a future life, and are left in death, as the love of God cannot bring them forth for any good, but only to suffer death again. While those babes are taught by us to cleave unto God, and walk in his requirements, that they may gain eternal life: I say, if these things are "detrimental" I greatly misjudge and plead guilty. Your Br. in love to all.

A Bible Experience.

MARY H. MOSMAN.

From early life I have been a member of the Congregational Church, but for years, felt that I was not all the Lord called me to be. After devising and following every means possible to be brought into the right way, and finding my attempts ineffectual, I at last conceived the idea of breaking away from all opinions and prejudices, and with the Bible as my guide book and the blessed Spirit as my teacher, go forward. This being as I believed the course of the early Christians, would give me a like rich experience.

This called me first to give myself all away to God(I knew nothing of the doctrine of sanctification) and binding to my heart the promise, "My grace is sufficient for thee," commenced the life of faith—going out into God, not knowing whither.

I studiously sought to know all God's commands, and feeling that now all my powers were his, in every act sought his glory—living by the moment.

At times almost overwhelmed by the trials and temptations that pressed upon me, I should have sunk in despair had I not grasped some precious promise and carried it to God, and in all the faith I could summon hold it until lifted unto him; then the power for evil was baffled. At this time, I also took the vow, God helping me, I would never go around the first cross, or yield to the first temptation. God has been true to his covenant, and to His glory, I record that in ten and a half years, I have never consciously broken mine—

"Oh, to grace how great a debtor, Daily I'm constrained to be."

I was now following the Spirit and Word, being led on to ground that made me marked in my singularity. Ideas I had never before conceived came to my mind. Comparing them with Scripture, I could see they were of God; therefore cherished. I was led to feel I must not commit sin, and that I should not, if I would abide in Jesus.

I saw that in the past I had suffered from the feeling that I was sinning when I had only been enduring temptation, not yielding to it, and should have counted it "all joy" to have been thus tested, that the Christian graces by exercise might gain strength.

I must now do with my might what my hand found to do. Whatever I felt Jesus would do, if in my place, asking not was it popular or otherwise. In doing everything for Jesus "as to the Lord and not unto men," I must cast off the superfluities of life. Forms and needless ceremonies, and mere conventionalities of life, passed by, as unworthy the attention of one who was given to the interests of the Kingdom. The language of my heart has been that of Nehemiah to Samballat, "I am doing a great work so that I cannot come down.

In caring for the body, I must partake only of those articles of food which we were taught were wholesome and nutritious, and would build it up for the Lord. I could no longer take an article merely because I loved it, for in thus doing I was serving self, and the motive for action sinful, because antagonistic to the Divine teaching, whether ye eat, or drink, etc., do all with the single eye to His glory.

I now took delight in denying self for Jesus, in whatever way thus exercised, and was thereby taken into closer companionship with Him.

I also became very strict in regard to my dress. The dollars were the Lord's and to be used sacredly for Him. Purchase only what He would if in my place and as became one saved by the purchase of His blood. Not a farthing for superfluous trimmings, so long as a soul remained unsaved. I should be as free from the world's fashions and views as the angels, only so far as necessity required me was I to partake of them—my comfort, or the positive good of my neighbor were only to be consulted. The old story of influence, for a time impeded my progress, but I was at last enabled to leave this all with God, and in all things give myself to be a Bible Christian. Included in the idle deeds, for which we were to give account, I felt superfluous stitches were reckoned, and therefore, reduced my wardrobe to as simple a style as possible. I instinctively shrank from singularity, yet if in following the Word I became so, I would through the assistance of Divine grace, meet it with a cheerful submission. Following this course has had the effect not only to crucify me unto the world, but also the world unto myself. The barrier thus placed between me and the world has given me more freedom in God, and I have thereby gained more power.

The friends of holiness have almost universally approved my course, so far as I could know, and have given me many a "God speed." The worldlings feel it is in keeping with my profession, and in accordance with the command of the Almighty, "wherefore, come ye out from among them and be ye separate." But the lukewarm professor is angered, and those whose views have been mortified by companionship with such, dislike it.

My plain style has often called forth words that were plainly not given in the spirit of Jesus, and that seemingly could not have been suggested had the individuals been earnestly seeking primitive piety and simplicity, for then charity would rule and they would allow me the freedom which the child of God has a right to enjoy. Here is where I feel the Christian lives below his privileges. "Why, as living in the world, are we still subject to ordinances?"

Thus I go on, my hours days and years pass on. I live in delightful communion with my God, and I feel that, although borne down at times by trials, yet I in soul ever rejoice in Him, and know the joys of the redeemed.

What I now desire is a richer baptism of the Holy Ghost, and that I may possess all the gifts of the Spirit, which it is my privilege to enjoy. I am led to believe we may possess all the early Christians did, provided we live as much above the world, and have our faith in as lively exercise.

My experience teaches me, that he who is "the same yesterday, to-day, and forever," is now ready to heal diseases. At times to enable us to do better work for Him, He gives us discerning of spirits; and to encourage us in the rugged way, He often lifts the curtain between us and the future and allows us to see our pathway, and yet in all this, I am only convinced of the existence of that power. For the greater advancement of the Redeemer's cause, I desire to be filled with it, that I may abound to every work.

The church is filled with skepticism on these points, and those who forsake all for Him, stand weak and intimidated before their spiritual foes, because we are not like the early disciples, armed with this power, to make our Jesus known and feared as still the living One and an Almighty power.

Will those who read these lines pray that I may know and possess all the gifts the Lord has for me; and that believers may again, if His will, be thus endowed; and as you raise the prayer, may your own souls be baptized, and you be enabled to go forth into the vineyard, with new courage, feeling that in Christ Jesus, the all-sufficient friend, you lack nothing, and God will bless your labors, and hasten the Kingdom.

O, God, glorify thyself and magnify the riches of thy grace, we ask for, in the name of Jesus—Amen!

The More Sure Word of Prophecy.

We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts.—2 Pet. i., 19.

This text may be classed among those that are difficult or hard to be understood. The difficulty lies in this, that it seems to exalt the word of prophecy by the disparagement of the transfiguration previously spoken of; whereas the apostle previously referred to that as confirming what he and his fellow-laborers had declared concerning the power and coming of the Lord Jesus. To those among whom they had gone preaching the Gospel, they had related the miracles wrought by Christ as proof of His divine power, and the predictions uttered by Him and the ancient prophets, in regard to His future coming in a glorious kingdom. And lest any should say or think that they had followed cunningly devised fables in so doing, he declares what he and James and John had seen and heard in the mount of transfiguration. "We were eye-witnesses of His majesty. For He received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to Him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard when we were with Him in the holy mount."

The declaration immediately following this, that we have something more reliable, "a more sure word of prophecy," seems to create a discrepancy, for it gives rise to the question, than what is the word of prophecy more sure? And the answer must be, It is more sure than the narration previously given, of what occurred on the holy mount. In order to remove this inference, let us look at the passages in the original: kai echomen bebaioteron ton propheetikon logon. Here the Greek scholar will at once perceive a slight disagreement between the translation and the original. The definite article ton is changed into the indefinite, so that we have a more sure word of prophecy, instead of the more sure word. If now by a legitimate transposition of words, we place ton propheetikon logon before bebaioteron, the sentence will read: We have also the prophetic word rendered more sure. Besides, if the conjunction kai be translated by the word there or therefore, as it sometimes is, we shall have the connection of the text with the preceding context more clearly shown. It will then read: "We have therefore the word of prophecy confirmed, rendered more sure." The idea of the writer being that, however trustworthy the prophetical statements of a Messiah to come in glory and upon the clouds of heaven, may have been before, they are now corroborated; are rendered more reliable by that type, specimen or exemplification of their fulfilment in due time, which was given on the "holy mount." The proposed emendation of this passage removes the difficulty previously spoken of, and is, I doubt not, the true translation.

In counselling Christians to give heed to this sure word of prophecy, the Apostle employs a very beautiful and appropriate figure. He compares them to travellers along a dark and dangerous way, with a solitary lamp or torch to guide them. Travellers thus circumstanced, it must be presumed, will walk very circumspectly, giving earnest heed to the guiding light, and taking no step in advance, except as that indicates to them the path of safety. Our word is benighted. Darkness covers the earth, and gross darkness the people. To enable us to avoid the dangers which throng about our pathway, and to conduct us to a bright and happy home, we have one solitary lamp—the Bible. But, thanks be to God that one lamp is sufficient, if we give heed constantly to it. The biographical and historical records, the truths and precepts of the word of God, all shed light upon our pathway. These, doubtless, were not lightly esteemed by the Apostle. But the nature of his subject led him to speak particularly of prophecy as a guiding light. And, as taking heed to the "sure word of prophecy" implies a dilligent study of it, the Apostle's language is a rebuke to those who undervalue and neglect this part of divine revelation.

The Christians living in Judea did well in taking heed to the prophetic words of Jesus Christ, relating to the destruction of Jerusalem, for by so doing they escaped in time from the devoted city, so that none of them, as historians have testified, perished in the siege.

The disciples of Jesus, and those who have believed on Him through their word, have done well in giving heed to the words of the Saviour, forewarning them of persecutions which they should suffer for His name. Had they forgotten or neglected those predictions, the fiery trials unlooked for, by which they have been assailed, would have been grievous, and perhaps fatal stumbling-blocks to them. To prevent this, the warning words were uttered, "These things have I spoken unto you that ye should not be offended."

Christians also do well that they take heed to the words of prophecy uttered by Jesus Christ concerning deceivers, for He has told us that there shall arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders, insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect.

If then the announcement should be made, that He is in the desert, or in the secret chamber, the remembrance of these words of the Saviour, "for as the lightening cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be," will be a sufficient safeguard against the imposture.

To give heed to this light which shineth in a dark place will greatly mitigate our sorrows, while we travel as pilgrims through this vale of tears. By the aid of this light we learn that the present unhappy condition of things will ere long terminate; that the present night of affliction and of sorrow will be succeeded by a joyous morning. This word of prophecy assures us that the now absent Saviour will come again "without sin unto salvation;" that he will bring order out of confusion, renovate the earth, and judge the world in righteousness; that His omnipotent voice will awaken the pious dead, and change the living. It becomes Christians, then, at the present as well as in the times of the Apostles, to be "looking for the blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ." To those who are thus looking, and giving earnest heed to the sure word of prophecy, the glorious day will speedily dawn, and "the bright and morning star" will appear, filling their hearts with joy unspeakable.

Affliction.

A LETTER FROM A. BOYNTON.

To Chloe Lankton, and others of like circumstances: Dear children of our Lord and Saviour—With a deep desire to afford you some consolation, we have chosen the above as our subject. Consider first, then, that others have been and are afflicted. Eminent ministers, too. Paul was afflicted. He had a thorn in the flesh. This is a figurative expression. Suppose it was literal it would be very bad. Just think of a thorn constantly working its way into the flesh, deeper and deeper, the irritation, pain and inflammation extending wider and farther. Well might he pray for its removal, for with its continuance death seemed inevitable. How anxious he felt and how fervently he prayed. Did God hear? Yes; but not to remove the thorn! No, but by giving grace to bear it; to bear a pain, a sorrow, of which the thorn was a figure. How great then must have been the sorrow itself. But you see this great trouble in the flesh gave him great grace, or strong consolation in the spirit. So he was the gainer thereby, after all. And perhaps it was in reference to this very thing that made him say, "as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing." Jesus was "a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief." These were his companions all through life; yet he was not destitute of joy: the joy of his Father's favor he always had. It seems necessary in God's economy in building up the "new man" to shake, and often tear down by piecemeal the old or Adamic man. The strength and beauty of the new is seen the more as the old crumbles away. When earthly foundations fall out, faith becomes reality; and God's strength, our sufficiency. If by losing the use of one member of our body the others should be rendered doubly efficient, would we consider it really a loss? So if by suffering we are led nearer to, and made a richer partaker of the fountain of life eternal, shall we murmur? Pruning lops off the old branches, which only bore bitter fruit; but it gives room for the growth of the new scion, which yields "fruit unto holiness, and the end thereof everlasting life." Who then would complain of the gardener?

But, says the dear one, tossed from side to side, seeking rest and finding none, "My faith is weak and faint, aud I sometimes doubt God's hand in the matter at all." Now, without going into the doctrine of cause and effect, or the violation of law and its consequences, or in advocating the doctrine that man has no business to be sick, we desire that you would consider and also believe with the heart, God's assurance and consolation as written by Paul, "all things shall work together for good, to them that love God." Rom. viii., 28; see also 2 Cor. iv., 17, 18. This blessed assurance, skeptics, cold formalists and doubting Christians would deprive us of; but let not go this promise of God, which is worth more than all the gold of California to the church of God.

It is the pure, simple utterances of God's word; not the sayings or doctrines of men, which stay up and fortify the Christian's mind. God's light is "pure, enlightening the eyes." The above promise, or general declaration of God's constant supervision over his people for their good, believed, leads one to seek to know, as far as may be, how these varied trials and afflictions work our good.

We have referred to this already, but would add, we judge the same law obtains here as in natural things. We see difficulties call forth effort, and develop quality or character proportionate. Our greatest men have attained their present position by fighting and overcoming obstacles. God wants us to be great; not here, but in the kingdom, to shine as the stars forever and ever. He knows what latent powers we have, and what position we can be qualified to fill in that world of light. And His work with us and upon us is as various as is our present condition or future destiny.

God is love, and he will open so much of his plans to his confiding children that they will see cause to love him more and serve him better in all their experience of his works and ways. Being the children of God by faith, through Jesus Christ our dear Saviour, it is impossible that anything should really harm us. Our life (future) is hid with Christ in God. This future life will be promoted, developed and perfected; for this is God's purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus before the world was.

Do then, fainting one, sink into the everlasting arms; they will never fail thee until thy warfare shall be o'er, and thy reward given. As thy day is, so shall thy strength be; the greater thy pain the more abounding His grace; so shall his strength be the more realized in thy utter weakness. I am constrained to believe that we shall all have been so educated and brought forward to the immortal state that we shall all sing one harmonious song of grace: "By grace ye are saved."

"'Twas grace contrived the plan,
And grace hath marked the way;
So when we reach fair Canaan's land,
Grace, grace shall crown the day."

Persecution—What is it.

Br. Storrs: Our attention was called to the above query by reading a letter from Mary Geargld, in the Herald of Jan. 6. She says, "We have been ridiculed and scoffed at, but not persecuted." Persecute, Webster says, is "to pursue in a manner to injure, vex, or afflict; to harass with solicitations." Now we are under the impression that God's people have not only suffered ridiculed and been scoffed at; but that they have in all ages been persecuted. The nearer we walk in the path laid down by Jesus and his apostles, the more we will be persecuted; and that, too, by those who claim to be "the church;" for persecutions hardly ever come from worldlings, unless they are instigated by professors. Who was it that persecuted Jesus and the apostles? Was it not those who claimed to be "the church!" And did not such extort Christ's condemnation before Pilate! But hear what Jesus says, when talking to his disciples: "Remember the word that I said unto you, the servant is not greater than his Lord. If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you." John xv., 20. Again, "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Matth. v., 10. It seem the kingdom is promised to the persecuted for righteousness sake. Brethren, do any of you expect to enter the kingdom without going "through much tribulation!" Acts xiv., 22. Paul says, "Persecutions, afflictions which came unto me at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra; what persecutions I endured: but out of them all the Lord delivered me. Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." 2 Tim. iii., 11, 12.

But the Lord will deliver his "little flock" out of all persecutions. Now if such a thing should happen that the "church of God" will yet have to suffer persecution unto death, we must look to God for deliverance. But it seems to us that in the great trial in the last days the "little flock" the "one body" will be delivered out of it. Let us watch and pray for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ—live in obedience to his holy law—then our vile bodies will be changed, and fashioned like unto his glorious body. Amen.

From George L. Hart.

New Britain, Conn., Jan. 4, 1869.

Br. Storrs: It is quite a long time since I have communicated with the readers of the Herald through its columns; and I feel so much lack as a teacher that I almost neglect to fulfil my engagement; but I would do all I can to sustain our much loved organ of truth. I love the spirit of prophecy; especially that inspiring portion which treats of promised good. The question of Jerusalem's restoration is one of the blessed subjects of which God's sainted prophets have often spoken; and as the time draws nigh for God to favor her, those who are written in her become anxious, as did Daniel.

The years of desolation are soon to end. Hear David in Psa. cii. "Thou shalt arise and have mercy upon Zion:" [I do not spiritualize this; and from the following we are warranted in taking it literally. The ancient site of the city of David has been under judgment—executive—long. The sword is about to turn upon its desolators]: "So the heathen shall fear the name of the Lord, and all the kings of the earth thy glory. When the Lord shall build up Zion He shall appear in his glory. He hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary, from heaven did the Lord behold the earth, to hear the groaning of the prisoners, to loose those that are appointed to death. To declare the name of the Lord in Zion and his praise in Jerusalem; when the people are gathered together and the kingdoms to serve the Lord." To this agrees all of Paul's prospective. Heb. xii., 22, speaks of the grand association to which by faith we are coming, even that which will be a glorious reality soon. But with the battle of shaking will the Lord fight those nations that have trodden down his people and land. Then shall a king reign in righteousness and princes of royal line shall judge, as Isaiah xxxii. declares.

The many days of trouble, the lamentation for the pleasant fields and the fruitful vines, are well nigh fulfilled in the long dark antichristian reign. But the "forever" of Isa. xxxii., 14 has an end: it reaches until the Spirit from on high is poured out upon the desolate. Then a long eternal day of righteousness and peace commences: "Zion, city of our solemnities; Jerusalem, a quiet habitation, never to be removed." There the river of God shall burst from regenerated earth to gladden the inhabitants, who no sickness shall know. The wilderness, the dark solitary jungle, the desert, shall receive the glory, and "they shall see the glory of the Lord." Isa. xxxv. And the ransomed scattered ones shall return. From the north, south, east and west shall they come, and sit down in the kingdom with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

Then it is that the age of glory commences. What God will find for priests and kings to do on the new earth, I am not fully satisfied. If Christ shall order it, it will be a blessed service; and if there are to escape some portion of the nations, to receive life in that coming age, it is well. My reason does not receive a shock at so wonderful a manifestation of love. God's ways can be equal, as He has ever shown. He knows to whom mercy will appear a God-send. Thanks to our God, this age is soon to be succeeded by another more glorious, when truth will not be covered with the rubbish which now encumbers. Oppression too shall cease, and the needy will be welcome to the earth's most glorious increase.

But this suffering age is not ended. The forlorn hope, as it were, is making its last attack upon the enemy's stronghold, and it will be successful: the saints shall take the kingdom. Watch; wait patiently till the trumpet of release shall sound its welcome note; then we shall all rejoice together. Yes, together a mighty throng of salvation's recipients. 'Tis no phantom of the imagination. Earth, beautiful, new-made earth, with its robe of transparent green, yet never fading, the gift of God. A home for His children is certainly to be realized.

My dear brethren, remember the words of Jesus: "He that is of the truth heareth my voice." He said, "I am with you even to end." Perhaps you think of the power of this association without remembering that, though clothed with power, 'tis a suffering Christ also: not in his glorified person, but in his ministrations through his delegates. Truth stands just as it did eighteen centuries ago. There are many judgment-halls, like Pilate's, in which conviction finds expression, and in perplexity like his, inquire, What is truth? Like him also, when answered correctly, will nevertheless deliver the Christ in you, and yourself, to the rabble who cry, crucify him; give us Barabbas. Yes, a murderer was then chosen, as death is now idolized, but the coming of the resurrection and the life is upon the execution block, with a multitude, headed by professors of religion, expecting to hear the axe fall, and that which has tormented them forever depart. But truth cannot die: it is eternal. If it fall seemingly, it is only to obtain a mightier power in its experience of resurrection. The King is coming, ye weary ones, to your joy and their shame. His voice, "I will come again," do you hear? Reader, 'tis in the catalogue of unfoldings that shall sound in its time louder than the ocean's roar when earthquake billows toss. I wait till "in his time," when "he will show who only hath immortality."

Eld. A. Guthrie, of Trumansburg, N. Y., is going to Fredericksburg, Va., for the benefit of his health. He says, "Any one wishing to inquire about soil, climate, etc., will direct their letters to me (enclosing a stamp) to the above place."

God Loved Me.—Some years ago two gentlemen were riding together, and as they were about to separate, one addressed the other thus:

"Do you ever read your Bible?"

"Yes, but I get no benefit from it, because, to tell the truth, I feel I do not love God."

"Neither did I," replied the other, "but God loved me."

This answer produced such an effect upon his friend, that, to us his own words, it was as if one had lifted him off the saddle into the skies. It opened up to his soul at once the great truth that it is not how much I love God, but how much God loves me.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

BY ELD. J. PARRY.

MANY a man has eyes and ears,
And yet he knows not where he steers.
Lost in a fog of misty doubts,
He cannot find his whereabouts.
The chart of this world's history,
To all a tangled mystery,
And few indeed can comprehend,
When, where, and what will be the end.
Some fancy the millenium near,
And long to see its dawn appear;
Yet still, the wicked bear the sway,
And put far off the judgment day,
Drive, Jehu-like, the downward road,
And only yield to fashion's code.
Signs of the times how few do know,
And thus avert the coming woe;
But like the world before the flood,
They cover up their tracks in blood,
Follow the peace and safety cry,
And little dream destruction's nigh;
The warning cry they still despise
Of Christ's appearance in the skies
To execute the vengeance due,
And then create the earth anew.
His enemies he will destroy,
And all his saints will shout for joy.
When all the dead in Christ shall rise
To meet their Saviour in the skies
And realize the second birth,
To reign with him upon the earth.
His kingdom spread from shore to shore,
Till sin and death be known no more.
To know, to feel this day is near,
Our weary waiting souls will cheer.
We watch, we wait, we hope, we pray
To see the signs of that bright day;
And every day, and every year
These signs become more bright and clear
To those who use their eyes to see,
What God has said shall surely be.
Forerunner of that blissful day,
When earth and heaven shall flee away,
And a new heaven and earth shall rise
To cheer our hearts and bless our eyes,
In travail pains, the groaning earth
Approaches near the hour of birth.
The mountains shake, the tempest roar,
Old ocean's waves invade the shore;
Men's hearts are failing them for fear,
And dread the day of judgment near;
Yet still the peace and safety cry,
Strives hard to thrust the warning by—
All things continue as they were;
Why should we borrow needless care?
The would-be-wise have fixed the day,
So confident of no delay;
And have so often been deceived,
All former fears are now relieved.
Who now regards the midnight cry,
Or thinks the day of doom is nigh?
The pride of intellect and birth
Has raised the feeble sons of earth;
Like those of old, to gain a name,
By building Bable towers to fame:
All monuments of pride and show,
Whose only terminus is woe.
The perils of the latter day,
Are speeding swiftly on their way,
While self love, boasting, lust, and pride,
O'er our abandoned cities stride.
Hotbeds of crimes of deepest dye,
That call for vengeance from on high.
Lovers of pleasure more than God;
Regardless of his chastening rod.
Religion dwindled to a form,
And by the world exposed to scorn.
Shorn of the power she once possessed,
To wrapt the soul in perfect rest.
To pomp and pagantry the slave;
And earthly honors only crave.
Man's day has nearly run its course;
Its progress still from bad to worse.
When shall that better day begin,
To rid the world of death and sin?
When peace and righteousness shall reign;
The end of sorrow, guilt, and pain;
The day of Christ, our coming King;
Of which the sacred poet sings,
In strains of rapture, joy and praise,
That blessed hope, that day of days.

A CHARMING SKETCH.

GOD'S NO.—"Mother, did God ever say no to you?"

Arthur had been sitting quietly by the window with his book in his hand—not reading, but thinking very earnestly—for some minutes, when suddenly he startled his mother with that question.

Mrs. Morrow looked a little astonished at first, then a grave, sad smile came over her face, and she answered, "Yes, dear, a great many times."

Arthur seemed only half satisfied. "Why, mother, I don't see; how do you mean?"

"What made you ask the question, Arthur?"

"Why, you see, I was walking home from school, to-day, and I came round by Dr. Edward's place to see the flowers; everybody said they looked so beautiful after the rain. And when I came up I found little Alice Reed standing close against the fence, with her with her curly head between the railings, looking at the flowers as if she were almost hungry for some of them! You know her, don't you, mother? Poor Mrs. Reed's little girl, who lives in the old tumble-down house around the corner."

"Yes."

"Her father gets drunk so often, and don't do any work; they are very poor. Well, when I stopped and stood by her, she looked up at me and said, 'Oh, isn't it beautiful?' and her eyes shone so. Then, just for fun, I said, 'Alice, why don't you live in such a fine, big house, and have such fine flowers?' She shook her head and answered, 'Because God says no.' It sounded strange; I couldn't understand her at first; and she looked as if she felt perfectly willing to let other people have pretty things and do without herself. I have been thinking about it ever since; wasn't it queer for a little thing like her to say?"

"It is just what we all ought to learn to say, Arthur, and say it with just that little girl's faith and quiet content. We should be much happier if we did. It is very hard sometimes because we are apt to think we know what will make us happy, and to forget that God loves us so well, and always does what is best for us."

Arthur went and sat down by the side of his mother and said, "Mother, please tell me how God said 'no' to you."

"He said it many times, my boy, before I learned that it was his tender, wise voice speaking for my good. I worried and was impatient at crosses and disappointments; but oh, how much brighter sorrow seemed when I once learned that God wrapped it as a covering around his love, that I might open, with the hands of faith, my treasure!"

"Once, Arthur, I had a little daughter, of whom I was very proud. I said to myself, I will teach her everything good and noble; I will take such care of her; and by-and-by she will grow to be a comfort and a pleasing companion to me,' but God said 'no.' He took away my darling, and disappointed my desires.

"The next time that God's 'no' broke in upon my joy, was when your dear father died. I felt the sorrow coming, and I prayed that my boy might have a father spared to train and guide him as he grew to manhood. But God said 'no' again; and oh, it was hard, at first, to feel that it was the voice of Love speaking! It was so dark, I could not see the wisdom and the mercy of such a trial, for God knows best."

Arthur's head sank lower, and his tears fell fast as he listened.

"Again I said to myself, 'We will not leave the old house, though there are only us two; we will keep the pleasant rooms and the beautiful grounds just the same: and as Arthur grows up he shall learn to love the trees which he planted and the vines which he trained.' But God said 'no' to me. The handsome house had to be sold into other hands; and we came away from the place we loved so, to a more humble home. But God has been very gracious to us; we have been very happy here—you and I, Arthur. Poor Mrs. Reed and little Alice have wants and sorrows that we know nothing of."

"But mother, it seems to me that there are some people whom God never says 'no' to; at least they seem to have everything they want."

"Ah, we cannot tell, my boy; only God himself can see into every heart and understand the secrets of every life. Sometimes His 'no' is spoken very low, and only one in all the world can hear it—and that may be one whom we count perfectly happy and wanting nothing."

"Does God ever say 'no' to me, mother?"

"Yes, but sometimes you do not recognize it as His voice. God has been very good to you; but he has began to speak his 'no' to you in slight things so as to prepare your faith and patience for the greater trials which must come in after life. Last week when you had planned a pleasant excursion with the boys—and were anticipating so much joy—it stormed for several days, and you were disappointed. You only kept saying, 'It's too bad! I don't see what it rained for just at this time!' and you were so unhappy that it grieved me to see you. Now, you should remember, that it was the voice of a kind God, refusing you a pleasure because He knew it best that you should not have it; and you should have said calmly and contentedly, as little Alice did, 'God says no.'"

"But mother, it is so hard—don't you think it is—to be always contented with everything that comes?"

"Yes, Arthur, we are like little children, who reach out and cry for pretty things which they cannot have because mamma says 'no.' We reach out our hands for some pleasure and we say, 'Oh if I can only have that I shall be so happy!' but God knows better. He puts out his hand and takes away the object we long for and His loving voice says 'no.' And oh, Arthur, if we could only learn to lay our heads upon his bosom—as a little child rests on his mother—and to feel peace and trustful, sure that all things will work together for our good—how much happier we should be!"

Arthur looked up into his mother's calm face, and felt that she, at least, had learned to cast all her care upon Him who careth for us! And he resolved to try and learn the lesson too. Will you my young friends? Youth is the time to begin; before the evil days come, anchor yourself fast to God by faith. Learn to feel that whatever God sends is the best for you and whatever God takes away is best for you not to have. Remember that "God in cursing giveth better gifts than man in benediction"—that is, God's no is more full of love and tender mercy than the sweetest blessings of the most generous earthly voice? Selected.

FROM R. CADWELL.

CORTLAND, N. Y., Dec. 21, 1869.

BR. STORRS: I see in the last HERALD, Br. Z. Campbell has noticed my interest in the article the "Living Soul," by expressing my fears of error being taught in it.

And also, the point of mistake as to the meaning of Pope's "couplet" in the sense in which he used it, and would be understood to teach in it. Our fears and doubts, in this respect, have all been removed by Br. C.'s excellent response.

And among the many good things in it, I cordially and gladly accept this one, "The Creator and his works are separate and distinct from each other."

And it may be right, here, to correct error and misapprehension in myself and Br. C., and consider one point a little further.

And also, the desire (somehow) to call the attention of Br. C. to the article. In doing this (having only looked on the face of my text) I expressed myself more hastily and positive to Br. Storrs (not knowing he would publish my remarks: it is however all right) than I should perhaps, otherwise; in which, we wish to stand corrected, as may be seen in Br. C.'s reply. We considered—at first sight—Pope taught in the sentence quoted, the duality of parts in the Divine Being. As "whose" body, is the body and soul of nature; and in this sense, God was all; and all was God. But on the point of "body" I was mistaken, I think, and on the other "God the soul," I supposed some might take it to teach the soul entity of man to be the child of God as a part of his spiritual nature. But on the first point, Pope says, "all parts" of nature embodied, are nature's body as "one thing, and God another." But adds, "God the soul of this body."

Now I have a right to the literal meaning of his words (if proper,) and without explanation; and I do not recollect as any modification of sense was given in the article. Now on this point, it would be only to acknowledge the truth, that the realm, or body of nature contains a vast multitude of creatures having life, or soul, besides angels and men. Well, God is this soul, and this soul is God, either way. This may be thus, in a modified sense, many ways. This gives nature's parts a life or soul—at least as a whole, but no individual soul, from the great soul. This would be confounding God with his works; would it not? Br. C. may say, yes, if my construction of it is right. Well, certainly, I do not see how to avoid it. But I shall try to do so, for the sake of the Tract, and with Br. C.'s explanation I am very anxious to see it. And I hope it will be found to consider the personal life of Jesus and the saints eternal life principle, and if best, of angels also. A Lover of the Truth.

STEPHEN BENTON, MIDDLEBURY, Vt., writes: I prize the HERALD OF LIFE next to my Bible. It has thrown great light on the sacred pages. I am straitened for funds, but send $1 now and hope to send more ere long. Pray for me, that I may be kept by the power of God unto the day of redemption. It seems hard to live all alone amid a multitude of churches and professors of religion, but shunned by them. But so it is; yet I would not give up my views of the blessed word for the highest seat in the synagogue. There has been a "Praying Band" here from Troy, composed of fifteen, who have added numbers to the church. I think they were paid $150. This week there is a "Spiritist" convention, working wonders with the dead. My prayer is, that having found the better way, we may be found walking therein, and be accepted through him who gave himself for us. How glad I would be to hear the word of life from some good brother on the Lord's day.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Try and hold fast whereunto thou hast attained, and fear none of those things "of human invention with which you are surrounded. The excitement of animal feelings, whether by saints or sinners, will soon die away, and their last end, most likely, be worse than the first. Sanctify them through Thy truth: Thy word is truth." So said Jesus, as He prayed. If men will use their own devices, and "sow to the flesh, of the flesh" they will "reap corruption."

J. C. WHEELER, North Turner Bridge, Me., writes: I wish to make a confession to the brethren and sisters scattered abroad. It is this: From an unceasing study of the Scriptures I have been led to the conclusion that there is "No life out of Christ;" and eternal life only has He to impart. He gave up the blood or animal life to the claim of the law. For this faith I have received much opposition; but the greater part of it comes from a class who do not think for themselves, but let others think for them. But I feel it my duty to be ready to give a reason of the hope that is in me to every man that asketh it of me. Feeling thus called on, I have for the last few months endeavored to present the light; and it has been with good success. I have been much blessed by seeing many embracing the light on this subject, saving them from the "strong delusion" of these last days; otherwise they would be "left to believe a lie, that they might be condemned because they believed not the truth." Men and women are striving for light and truth. The call on every side is, "Come. give us a reason of your hope." When such request is complied with, O what thankfulness is expressed for the light received. Shall I forbear to proclaim this truth? No, never. Your prayers and sympathies I desire, that I may be useful in the good work of winning sinners to Christ. Your Br. in hope of a resurrection from the dead, or a change if alive when Jesus comes.

JOHN SMOCK, Tom's River, N. J., writes: I send $5 for the precious HERALD OF LIFE. I love it much; there is such a oneness between it and the blessed Bible. We go to church and hear the preaching of the day in the nominal churches, and where is the comfort? There is none to me. In the closing remarks by a minister in this place he said, "We should all have a great desire for the coming of Jesus; and not only desire it, but look for it and pray for it; like as if a dear friend, being far away, should write us a letter telling us he was coming to see us. How glad we should be: so of the coming of Jesus. But how? At the communion table—in the class room, and in the social gatherings." This seemed to me like descending from the sublime to the ridiculous. Such teaching is insulting to our Father. First speak of a literal fact, the coming of Christ; and then bury our only hope so deep that it cannot be found. Such is the preaching of the present day.

SAINTS JUDGE THE WORLD.

1 COR. vi., 2, 3, "Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world" . . . . "know ye not that we shall judge angels."—HALSTED renders the above as follows, "Not know ye that the angelous, announcers (teachers) we condemn? Not know ye that the holies the world condemn?" Archbishop Whately speaking of the first six verses of this chapter says, that "though the words of our translation would not lead the reader to suppose so, the apostle is not speaking of something that is to take place hereafter, but something already begun and actually going on; for the sense," says he "is, according to the reading of the best copies of the original, not 'the saints shall judge the world,' not the 'world shall be judged by you,' but 'the saints judge the world:' the world is judged—is being judged by you." He then says, "A more reasonable interpretation of these verses seems to be that adopted by some of the most ancient divines, who understood the apostle to mean by the word which we translate judge, the same as condemn. Any one who takes the right course, by so doing condemns, in the New Testament language, judges those who with equal opportunities choose the wrong. This was the case with the Corinthian Christians, or saints, who by embracing the gospel, judged, in this sense, their unbelieving neighbors who had rejected it. It is in this latter sense, evidently, that our Lord speaks of the men of Nineveh rising in judgment against that generation and condemning it, because they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and the Queen of the South because she came from afar to hear the wisdom of Solomon; their conduct would be a condemnation of the unbelieving generation who rejected one greater than Jonas and than Solomon."

"DEVILS BELIEVE."

JAMES ii., 19. "Thou trustest that God one is—exists. Well doest thou: but the divinities, gods, goddesses, genii, they trust—they trust, give credit to, believe, rely upon, impersonal for, men trust, people trust. The stress is on 'God One:' thou trustest, etc., that 'God one exists:' and to give the other branch of the verse, 'but they trust,' etc., (i. e., people trust) the divinities; [i. e., many gods of superstition.) This gives the natural and appropriate sense."—Halsted.

It was not the poor devils that believed; but the deluded, bewitched people that believed in devils or idols, and were more zealous and consistent in their worship of many gods than some Christians are in the worship of the one true God. James made the comparison for the purpose of stirring us up to greater diligence and to strengthen our faith in ONE God.

A WOLF IN SHEEP'S CLOTHING.

A GOOD MAN, THINK YOU?

AND why do you think so? Because God blesses his labors? because he gets up a revival or an excitement, and souls are converted? Is this a safe criterion by which to judge? God blesses his own truth, though delivered by the wicked.

Was not Judas the apostate, and betrayer of our Lord, numbered with the apostles, endued with miraculous gifts? Doubtless he preached the gospel with power, and may be souls were converted to God under his ministry; and yet, this same Judas was a wicked man, a "devil from the beginning!" Are there not many at the present day in sacerdotal garb, preaching with flaming zeal and apparent success, like Balaam or Judas, who are manifestly false teachers, hypocrites, wolves in sheeps' clothing? "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal? And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing." From the above passage of scripture, and from many others, it is evident, that splendid abilities, extensive learning, admired eloquence, and even exact knowledge in the mysteries of God may be possessed by proud, selfish, covetous, ambitious men. Moreover the powers or eloquence of angels, and all the imaginable gifts of miracles or prophecy, cannot demonstrate a man to be at all better than Balaam or Judas. 'If any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his.'

A good man, because he can preach, expound God's word with facility, because souls are awakened and converted! Indeed! suppose he can preach, pray, talk with angel tongue! have faith so as to remove mountains. Is not all a tinkling cymbal? God may, God does, often for wise reasons, best known to himself, bless the labors of wicked men, false teachers and hypocrites. He causes the wrath of man to praise him and restrains the remainder of that wrath.

God blesses his own truth in answer to prayer, the prayer of his "little ones," the humble and contrite—though this same truth may fall from corrupt, polluted, infidel lips. Who more zealous and successful than Jehu in overturning idolatry, iniquity in high places, superstition and will worship? in fulfilling God's special purposes, [2 Kings x.,] was he a good man? Nay, but an idolater—he departed not from the sins of Jereboam the son of Nebat, that caused Israel to sin—he was a slave to lust, proud, dogmatic, vain glorious—"come," says he, "come with me, and see my zeal for the Lord." Have we not similar men at the present day, vain, dogmatical, hypocritical, even wolves in sheeps' clothing? Beware!

Again; who ever uttered prophecies more important, more glorious than the false prophet, Balaam, whom God rebuked by the dumb ass speaking with man's voice? see 2d Peter, ii., 16. "Such are false prophets, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ." "And no marvel, for satan himself is transformed into an angel of light—therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness whose end shall be according to their works." So it was, so it is. "Beware of false prophets!"—Golden Rule.

PRAYER ALWAYS ANSWERED.—Sometimes the answer is not in the shape we expected. The Intelligencer remarks:

When Augustine, a great champion of the faith once delivered to the saints, was a young man, his habits were very dissolute. When he avowed his purpose to go to Rome, his mother, Monica, prayed earnestly that he might be prevented, apprehending that in so corrupt a city he might be led on by surrounding temptations to utter ruin. Notwithstanding all her entreaties, her son went to Rome; and thence, on the recommendation of a friend, he passed on to Milan, and was there converted to the truth under the ministry of Ambrose. "Thou, O my God!" he says, "didst give her not what she asked then; but by refusing that, didst give what she was always asking."

High and low must meet on this ground if they would realize either the comfort or power of prayer. We must leave it to Him who "sees the end from the beginning," to decide how and WHEN our prayers are to be answered.

PROSPECTUS OF AN INTERLINEAR TRANSLATION OF THE SACRED SCRIPTURES.

THE undersigned has in preparation a translation of the Old and New Testament Scriptures, for the use of students of the Bible, and especially those who wish to make themselves thoroughly acquainted with the original languages in which the Holy Word was written—upon the following plan:

(I.) Above each word of the Hebrew, Chaldee and Greek texts will be placed an English equivalent, which shall render its fundamental meaning and grammatical function in such a manner as to enable any one familiar with English grammar to analyze every sentence of the foreign language.

(II.) In addition to the original meaning of the words, their derivative significations will be given, whenever it may seem necessary, together with grammatical and other notes illustrative of the more difficult expressions and passages.

(III.) In order to enable the reader to pronounce correctly, in the first Greek Part, as well as in the first Hebrew, and in the Chaldaic, beneath each word will be noted its accent and pronunciation—the rules laid down by Webster being adopted as far as possible. In the subsequent parts, the pronunciation of words which did not before occur, will be given separately, in the margin.

The Hebrew and Greek alphabet, together with Webster's pronounciation key, will also accompany the first numbers.

(IV.) In order that the student may seasonably acquire a knowledge of the prototypes of the later (as well as the older), Hebrew and of the Chaldaic, the Books of Ezra and Daniel will appear immediately after the Third Part of the Old Testament. Thus the student may early become acquainted with the new element which was introduced into the later Hebrew.

(V.) A succinct Chaldaic and Hebrew Grammar will also be given, together with a synopsis of the Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac, Arabic and Ethiopic Verbs and Nouns. This (of which in our Essay on Semitic Comparative Philology, published in the Bibliotheca Sacra, July 1862, we have already presented some outlines) will be published as an Appendix, and separasely paged, so that it may afterward be bound up with the "Notes," in a volume by itself.

(VI.) Specimen pages are herewith presented of the method by which we hope greatly to facilitate the study of these languages, and to render self-instruction not only possible, but comparatively easy. By such literal reproductions of these foreign idioms in his mother tongue, the student, guided and assisted by occasional hints supplied in the Notes, will gradually and almost unconsciously acquire a knowledge of the grammar of the ancient languages.

(VII.) The Text and Translation of the New Testament will be issued in seven or eight parts, that of the Old Testament in twenty or twenty-one parts. Each part will contain 160 large octavo pages, and 15 or 20 pages of the "Notes."

(VIII.) The whole will be published, by subscription, by A. J. TAFEL, No. 48 North Ninth St., Philadelphia, Pa., to whom all communications should be addressed.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE.

INTERLINEAR TRANSLATION OF THE SACRED SCRIPTURES.

As soon as a sufficient number of subscribers are obtained the work will be commenced, and it is expected that every two months a Part will be issued.

The Parts will be published alternately, beginning with the Greek.

No labor or expense will be spared to bring out the work in elegant and substantial style.

Price for the Single Parts of the Old Testament, Two Dollars; for the Single Parts of the New Testament, One Dollar and Fifty Cents.

As an inducement we offer to everyone sending the names of six subscribers, a seventh copy free.

Due notice will be given on the completion of each one of the successive Parts to every subscriber, when, on remitting the stipulated price, the respective Parts will be served by return mail.

48 North Ninth Street, Philadelphia.
P. O. Box 2,332.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR OF HERALD OF LIFE.

It gives us pleasure to publish the foregoing "Prospectus" and "Publisher's Notice." Such a work is much needed, and if faithfully and accurately executed will do more in diffusing Biblical knowledge than any previous work; but let it be done without respect to sects or parties. We have received two specimen pages: one of the Hebrew and the other of the Greek, and are pleased with the plan. "The Prospectus and Specimen Pages will be mailed to any address upon application to the Publisher." By all means send for it.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the LIFE-GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. BY GEO. STORRS. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEO. STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. POST D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. POST took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in thei order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the true teachings of the BIBLE is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY; by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: OR THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN; by a Presbyterian Clergy man. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTERS TO A CLERGYMAN; or Life only through Christ not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburg, Pa. Price 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are 16 pages octavo. They will be sold at $3 per 100, or, fifty cents per dozen, free of postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price 7 cents.

The following are 12mo Tracts, of 24 pages each

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or the Animal Man and the Spiritual Man. A Sermon by GEO STORRS. Price 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

Unless attention is paid to all these matters confusion and delay are inevitable.

LITERAL FULFILMENT OF PROPHECY.

How Judah and Israel are to be delivered, is the next point to be taken up. The exact order in which the events are to take place, perhaps it is not possible to determine; but a general view of the subject we may arrive at.

Look once more at Ezek. xi., 14–20. Here the promise is clear and plain: it is the men who are Ezekiel's "brethren, even" his "kindred;" a similar expression to that of Paul, Rom. ix., 2, where he calls the "Israelites according to the flesh, my brethren, my kinsmen." The Lord is equally definite in addressing Ezekiel in the text before us; and the gathering, repentance, and subsequent obedience is clearly stated. Let us now turn to Ezek. xx., 33–38, "As I live, saith the Lord God, surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched-out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you: and I will bring you out from the people, and will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered, with a mighty hand with a stretched-out arm, and with fury poured out. And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, and there will I plead with you face to face. Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you, saith the Lord God. And I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the covenant: and I will purge out from among you the rebels, and them that transgress against me: I will bring them forth out of the country where they sojourn, and they [the "rebels"] shall not enter into the land of Israel: and ye shall know that I am the Lord."

It seems there will be a great cutting off, in that day, of the posterity of Jacob, as there was after they were brought out of Egypt; nearly every soul was then cut off, over twenty years of age, that came out of Egypt; those rebels did not enter into the possession of the promised land, but died in the wilderness. Here, in Ezekiel, the prophecy declares that God, after he has brought them out of the countries where [they have been scattered, will bring them into the wilderness, and plead with them there, and make them pass under the rod, etc.; a terrible time to those who remain incorrigible, like their fathers. Zechariah appears to speak of the same thing, chap. xiii., 8, 9. "And it shall come to pass that in all the land, saith the Lord, two parts therein shall be cut off and die; but the third shall be left therein. And I will bring the third part through the fire, and will refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried: they shall call on my name, and I will hear them: I will say, It is my people; and they shall say, The Lord is my God." This seems to show that the number of "rebels" will be a large portion of them, who are to be cut off preparatory to the remnant of Judah and Israel having actual possession of "the land wherein" their "fathers have dwelt." But when the rebels are purged out the Lord says, Ezek. xx., 40–44, "For in mine holy mountain, in the mountain of the height of Israel, saith the Lord God, there shall all the house of Israel, all of them in the land, serve me: there will I accept them, and there will I require your offerings, and the first-fruits of your oblations, with all your holy things. I will accept you with your sweet savor, when I bring you out from the people, and gather you out of the countries wherein ye have been scattered; and I will be sanctified in you before the heathen. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall bring you into the land of Israel, into the country for the which I lifted up mine hand to give it to your fathers. And there shall ye remember your ways, and all your doings, wherein ye have been defiled; and ye shall loathe yourselves in your own sight for all your evils that ye have committed. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have wrought with you for my name's sake, not according to your wicked ways, nor according to your corrupt doings, O ye house of Israel, saith the Lord God."

This language shows, to our mind, that it is the literal posterity of Jacob, and while they are in a probationary state. They are brought into "the mountain of the height of Israel"—"into the country" which God promised "to give to" their "fathers;" "there shall ye remember—and loathe yourselves," etc. Thus their full repentance is marked as an event after they are brought into the land. This is still further presented in Ezek. xxxvi., 16–38. "Moreover, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, when the house of Israel dwelt in their own land, they defiled it by their own way and by their doings: their way was before me as the uncleanness of a removed woman. Wherefore I poured my fury upon them for the blood that they had shed upon the land, and for their idols wherewith they had polluted it: and I scattered them among the heathen, and they were dispersed through the countries: according to their way, and according to their doings, I judged them. And when they entered unto the heathen, whither they went, they profaned my holy name, when they said to them, These are the people of the Lord, and are gone forth out of his land."

Thus far there can be no mistake that this is the literal posterity of Jacob; for they "are the people of the Lord" that had "gone forth out of his land;" which expression cannot be made to apply to Christians: this will appear further evident as we proceed. "But I had pity for mine holy name which the house of Israel had profaned among the heathen whither they went. Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God, I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine holy name's sake, which ye have profaned among the heathen whither ye went. And I will sanctify my great name which was profaned among the heathen, which ye have profaned in the midst of them; and the heathen shall know that I am the Lord, saith the Lord God, when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes. For I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and bring you into your own land: then [when? Clearly, after they are gathered—then] will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness and from all your idols will I cleanse you. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you a heart of flesh. And I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them. And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers: and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God. I will also save you from all your uncleanness: and I will call for the corn, and will increase it, and lay no famine upon you. And I will multiply the fruit of the tree, and the increase of the field, that ye shall receive no more reproach of famine among the heathen. Then [after they are gathered] shall ye remember your own evil ways and your doings that were not good, and shall loathe yourselves in your own sight for your iniquities and for your abominations. Not for your sakes do I this, saith the Lord God, be it known unto you: be ashamed and confounded for your own ways, O house of Israel. Thus saith the Lord God: In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities I will also cause you to dwell in the cities, and the wastes shall be builded. And the desolate land shall be tilled, whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by."

Can any doubt that the "land" here spoken of is Palestine? "The new earth," surely, never "lay desolate;" nor has any such "sight" ever been seen by any "that passed by." Here is no room for a substituted people or land. Hear the next verse. "And they shall say, This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden: and the waste and desolate and ruined cities are become fenced, and are inhabited." The land was desolate—the cities were ruined; but, this same land, not another, is become like the garden of Eden—the desolate and ruined cities [were there ever such on the new earth?] are become fenced and inhabited. All is plain if applied to the literal seed of Jacob, and "the land wherein" their fathers have dwelt." The Lord goes on to say, "then [when? Clearly after the land has become as the garden of Eden—and after the ruined cities are fenced and inhabited—then] the heathen that are left round about you [not all cut off, but a remnant "of the nations" are "left," and they] shall know that I the Lord build the ruined places and plant that that was desolate: I the Lord have spoken, and I will do it." Then it is added: "Thus saith the Lord God; I will yet for this be inqired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them: I will increase them with men like a flock. As the holy flock, as the flock of Jerusalem in her solemn feasts, so shall the waste cities be filled with flocks of men: and they shall know that I am the Lord."

In Hosea, also, after having spoken of the taking away of the house of Israel, and declaring of the house of Judah—"Ye are not my people, and I will not be your God," and having spoken of "judgments" upon them, the Lord adds, chap. ii., 14, 15. "Therefore, behold I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness, and speak comfortably unto her. And I will give her her vineyards from thence, and the valley of Achor for a door of hope: and she shall sing there as in the days of her youth, and as in the day when she came up out of the land of Egypt." This prophecy marks what people are the subjects of it—clearly, the same nation that "came up out of the land of Egypt." "And it shall be at that day, saith the Lord, thou shalt call me Ishi, [my husband] and shalt call me no more Baali, [my lord]." Then at the 23d verse it is added—"And I will sow her unto me in the earth: and I will have mercy upon her that had not obtained mercy; and I will say to them which were not my people, Thou art my people, and they shall say, Thou art my God." And that there may be no mistake, it is immediately added, chap. iii., 4, 5. "For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without teraphim: afterward shall the children of Israel return and seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days."

THE OBJECT OF CHRIST'S MISSION.

BY DR. JOHN K. FINLEY.

IN order to understand the Gospel or glad tidings proclaimed by the angels at the birth of Christ, it will be necessary to state in few words the status of man after the fall. According to the orthodox belief, man when first created was endowed with immortality; by the fall of Adam, his representative, he lost, not his immortality, but his spiritual life, and became liable to eternal misery, as it is expressed in the answer to the 19th question of the shorter catechism of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church. "All mankind by their fall lost communion with God, are under his wrath and curse, and so made liable to all the miseries of this life, to death itself, and to the pains of hell forever;" and that Christ's mission was to prevent his being consigned to the everlasting torments of hell, and to fit him for the joys, the society and employment of heaven. The destructionists believe that by the fall man was doomed to die, by which we understand literal death, loss of existence. "All the miseries of this life" were consequences, not penalties, and are often overruled for the best good of individuals suffering them. Christ's mission was to rescue us from the power of death, by a resurrection to eternal life or living existence. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son, that whosoever believeth on him, should not perish, but have everlasting life." We do not believe that the miseries of hell constituted a part of the penalty of sin, and for the very good reason that it was not mentioned when the law was given as the penalty or any part of it; this is a pure assumption of orthodox teachers, who might with just as much reason or authority assume that the penalty was transportation to the moon, or any other absurd and unscriptural fancy.

The penalty was not suffering pain in any form, but the loss by death of the chartered privilege and right of unending life, clearly implied as the reward of obedience. The process by which the penalty is inflicted may be painful, and it may not be, and often is not painful. The most violent pains and intense sufferings are often experienced without terminating in death; and the penalty of sin in such cases is not inflicted. The penalty does not consist in suffering or dying but in death. "Dying thou shalt die." "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." "The wages (or just desert) of sin in death."

There are certan great principles underlying all just governments, whether divine or human; involving the rights of subjects, and also the proper exercise of authority by the governing power. One of these rights, pertaining to every subject of a just government is, that the penalty for violating any given law must be clearly expressed, so that there can be no ground upon which a plea of exemption from its infliction may be urged; and on the part of the law-enforcing power that there may be no infliction greater than the law specifies. Another inherent right of the subject is, that so long as he obeys the law established by the rightful authority of the government, there must be no infringement of his lawful rights as a subject, but on the contrary there is an implied agreement that he shall be protected in the enjoyment of all his rights and privileges, or in other words, what is justly due to him as a good and obedient subject. Another well established principle of justice is, that when he has suffered the declared penalty, he is to be restored to all his rights and privileges, just the same as if he had never broken the laws. In human governments a man who has once broken the law, subjects himself to the suspicion that he will be more likely to break it again, than if he had always been obedient. This, however, is a consequence resulting from the fact that his fellow-men cannot know his true mind or heart, and cannot tell whether the suffering of the penalty has effected a reformation of his character, and whether he has sincerely determined hereafter to do right. This suspicion, however, does not justify any additional infliction. He has propitiated the law by satisfying its demands in suffering the declared penalty, and henceforth the law is again his friend and protector, for example: If I break a law, the penalty for which violation is imprisonment for a year in the State prison; and I suffer the specified penalty; when I come out of the prison, I am as justly free from any further punishment and as fully entitled to all the rights under the government and as justly entitled to its protection, as though I had always kept the law.

These principles are not arbitrary, but are inherent and essential to all good governments, human and divine. Let us now apply them to the government of God as related to mankind. He gave to Adam, as a representative of the human family, a law, and in the most distinct terms specified death as the penalty for violation. Adam wilfully and knowingly disobeyed the requirement of the law, and the penalty was inflicted. Adam then satisfied the claims of the violated law by suffering death, and having thus paid the penalty, the law had no further demand against him. He is as free from any further puuishment as if he had not sinned at all. But as has been most clearly and abundantly proved from the account given in the Bible, of his constitution, that he is possessed of nothing but a flesh and blood nature, when dead there is a final end of him, just the same as is the case of any other creature of flesh, and he perishes as to that nature forever; remains under the dominion of death; he "returns to the earth as he was before his creation, and the breath, or spirit of life, returns unto God who gave it to him at first. Had he been left in this condition without any further interposition on the part of God, he would now have been as effectually wiped out of existence, as if he had never been created.

It is necessary here to bear in mind one fact, that has a very essential bearing on the remaining development of the case, which is, that the penalty was simply death; not everlasting death, if it had been it would have been an effectual bar against any further proceedings in the case. The threatened punishment was positive, without any provision against its infliction, by substitution or prevention in any other way. But it being death, without specifying its duration, there was room left for interference in our behalf, and God in his Infinite wisdom and love, embraced the only means that could be devised for our relief. This brings us to the mission of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Now, what was the object of that mission? How was it accomplished? And here, let me ask, Did Christ come as our substitute? Most undoubtedly he did not, else we had not died at all. "A substitute is one person put in place of another to answer the same purpose." As for example: If I am drafted to serve in the army, and procure a substitute, who is accepted by the proper authorities, I am relieved from the necessity of going myself, by the substitute going in my place. So if Christ died as my substitute, in my place, there could be no demand for my death. It would be an act of injustice, according to the clearest dictates of reason, to put both me and my substitute to death. The admitted fact that the whole race have died, thus paying the penalty themselves, shows that Christ did not suffer his death as our substitute. This doctrine of substitution has been invented to supplement another human invention, viz.: The doctrine of eternal suffering as being the penalty of sin; and neither of them is supported by the teachings of the Bible.

The mission of Christ, then, was for a totally different purpose, and the facts of the case, as well as the plainly recorded statements of the Bible show, that His great purpose was to redeem or restore from the power or dominion of death after its infliction, not to prevent it. This is taught in the most express terms in various passages of the Scriptures. We will refer only to the 49th Psalm, 14th verse; speaking of the wicked the Psalmist says: "Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them, and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning, and their beauty shall consume in the grave, from their dwelling." The two latter clauses of the verse do not make very good sense, which is due to the orthodoxy of the translators, who evidently wished to avoid the true meaning, as it would conflict with their orthodox views. The margin gives the true rendering: "Their strength shall consume, the grave being a habitation to every one of them."

The next verse gives the contrast between the portion of the wicked and the righteous: "But God will redeem my soul or me from the power of the grave, for He shall receive me." Here the difference between the portion of the righteous and the wicked is clearly taught; the grave being the habitation of the wicked, while the righteous shall be redeemed from it, as the New Testament teaches us, by a resurrection. This Psalm explains the denunciation in the 17th verse of the 9th Psalm: "The wicked shall be turned into sheol or the grave, and all the nations that forget God." The righteous and the wicked are both turned into sheol, but the righteous shall be redeemed from its power, while the wicked remain under its dominion. Sheol translated hell in this verse, never means a place of suffering or misery, but is described "a land of forgetfulness." It strictly indicates not a place but the condition of all the dead previous to the resurrection of the righteous.

The law had no claims against our Saviour, for He never broke it. He kept it perfectly. "He was holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners." But being a partaker of the fleshly nature, by his descent from the Virgin Mary, that nature was forfeited, inasmuch as he was a descendant of Adam, in whom all who possess his nature die. God had declared that Adam, our representative, should die—as the Apostle affirms, "Death hath passed upon all men, for all have sinned." Those who had not sinned by their own personal act, still by their connection with Adam forfeited this fleshly life, and died with him. "As in Adam all die," etc. Christ, however, was possessed of a spiritual nature by His descent from the Holy Spirit; and by virtue of this spiritual nature He triumphed over death, and arose from the grave; henceforth He lives by the power of this spiritual life, instead of the fleshly or animal life. As the Apostle Peter tells us, "being put to death in the flesh, but quickened (or made alive) by the Spirit." Christ, before entering upon His mission, obtained the right by a new covenant, termed the covenant of grace, entered into with God the Father, to impart this spiritual nature to all who should fulfil the conditions upon which it was to be bestowed. This spiritual life he implants within His followers in their present state of existence. They are said to be begotten by the Spirit. He now becomes the representative of His spiritual descendants, and they are made one with Him, and partakers of His destiny. He therefore assured His followers that "Because I live ye shall live also." And He illustrates the identity of their nature with His own by the beautiful figure of the vine and the branches: "I am the vine, ye are the branches;" showing that as the branches derive their life from the vine and are dependent upon their connection with the vine for their life, so were His followers dependent upon their connection with Him for their life. The Apostle Peter, referring to these promises and assurances of the Saviour, says: "Whereby ye are made partakers of the divine nature." Hence, when regenerated persons are called the sons of God, it should not be regarded as a mere figure of speech, but as expressive of an unspeakably great and glorious reality. "Now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear (or is not yet made manifest) what we shall be, but we know "when He shall appear we shall be like Him." It is also by virtue of this divine spiritual nature in His children that they are assured of their victory over death by a resurrection from the grave in His likeness. He is the first fruits, they the harvest, and of course similar to the first fruits the difference being only in the time of gathering. Paul tells us, in full confirmation of these truths, Rom. viii., 11, "If the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead, dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken (or make alive) your mortal bodies, by His Spirit that dwelleth in you."

This, then, was the great object of Christ's mission, to bestow in a new way, by a new kind of life, what the whole race had lost by Adam's disobedience—eternal life or immortality. He said to His disciples: "I am come that ye might have life, and that ye might have it more abundantly;" or, as the Syriac Testament reads, "That which is excellent." Undoubtedly one essential object of Christ's mission was to manifest the righteousness or justice of God, by yielding His innocent life to the claims of the law. God had sentenced all of Adam's posterity to death, and as he was one of them he acknowledged the righteousness of God in passing that sentence, by submitting His own life to the sentence. As the Apostle Paul tells us in Rom. iii., 25, "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood, to declare His righteousness in the passing over sins that are past, through the forbearance of God. To declare (or make known) at this time His righteousness; that he might be just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus." (I have followed the marginal reading, which is the correct one.) God having been just to the claims of His broken law, in that the sentence was inflicted in full, there was no bar in the way of justifying to eternal life, all who accepted it on the terms of the Gospel. Christ having propitiated the law, by giving up His own Adamic life to its claims, the law now was no longer in the way, and the propitiation is sufficient for the whole world, if they would accept the merits of Christ's righteousness to be imputed to them and received by faith alone. Those who go down to death rejecting the provisions of this divine plan, must remain under the bonds of death everlasting—"Shall not see life;" but the wrath or anger of God, which first consigned them to death, "abideth on them."

All those passages in various parts of the Old Testament which are urged in support of the doctrine of substitution, such as "He hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows;" "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: The chastisement of our peace was upon Him, and with his stripes we are healed;" are easily and naturally understood upon the view here given from the Bible, of the object of His propitiatory sacrifice. To propitiate is "to appease one offended, and render him favorable." The law is now no longer our enemy but is appeased and is rendered favorable to us, because Christ has propitiated it in our behalf. It is no longer an enemy but a friend, through Christ's merits imputed to us by means of our faith in Him. Those passages quoted above, and similar ones, are made of plain import by the passage in Matthew viii., 16 and 17: "And he cast out the spirits with His word, and healed all that were sick; that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Isaiah the prophet, saying, Himself took our infirmities and bare our sicknesses." The idea is clearly not he was made sick or infirm himself, but that He bare them, or removed them from us.

I think these views of the atonement are the true views according to the Scripture, and sustained by all the facts of the case. If the penalty of sin pronounced by God to be inflicted on Adam was eternal suffering or misery, it is plain there could be no redemption from it, for Christ could not have propitiated the law except by suffering the penalty; and even orthodoxy does not claim that he suffered that penalty. It is not strange that in the vain attempt to explain the atonement on orthodox grounds, there should be so much wrangling and so many conflicting doctrines as we all know there are. It has not been done, and never can be. Every attempt that has been made involves absurdities and impossibilities too great to satisfy any unprejudiced person.

ANOTHER SHORT SERMON:

BY D. J. E. TO A FRIEND.

"I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day, upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God."—Job xix., 25, 26.

THESE were the words of the godly Job, as he looked forward to that far future day, when in the regeneration, by a glorious resurrection from the dead, he should be made a king and priest unto God, and reign with Christ on the earth.

We propose to examine the word of God, to see what proof can be brought forward to sustain our declaration; also, to see if it is in harmony with our text.

It will be objected that this has already taken place in the past; that Christ has indeed stood upon the earth in the latter days, and that Job, as is commonly believed, being in heaven, has witnessed his Redeemer thus.

We are of that number who believe that our Lord and Saviour will return to this planet again, and that His feet will indeed tread the Mount from whence He went away so many centuries ago.

That He will descend from heaven with a shout, and with the voice of the archangel, to call forth from the grave His sleeping saints, and Job will arise from his dusty bed, clothed with immortality and eternal life.

The question may well again be asked, in the days when so much of vain philosophy and traditions of men are taught, "How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" It will be observed that Job declares that "Though worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." What does Job say? How does it agree with the popular theology of the day? Let us keep close to the word of God. Let the Bible be its own interpreter.

Hear what Paul says, "It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. It is sown in weakness, it is raised in power." As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."

What is the image of the heavenly?

This is a very important question, but we have the key to unlock the matter in the risen and glorified body of our Saviour; for, says the record, "He was the first-fruits from the dead—the first-born among many brethren." He is the sample of the harvest that is to be gathered at the end of this age and dispensation.

Although Christ went down into the grave, like others before Him, He did not remain for corruption, but on the third day He came forth from the tomb, fulfilling the declaration of the Psalmist, that God would "not leave His soul in hell, (or the grave), neither would He suffer his Holy One to see corruption." He was now possessed of a spiritual body, not a spirit, but one not unlike in form and feature to that which hung upon the cross.

When He appeared unto his eleven disciples, where they were gathered together, and they were affrighted, supposing they had seen a spirit, He said unto them, "Why are ye troubled? and why do thoughts arise in your hearts? Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself; handle me, and see: for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have." He, also, did eat with them; demonstrating without a shadow of doubt, that He was a tangible, corporial body.

With this body He went away; and, "This same Jesus, which is taken up into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." "Wherefore, comfort one and another, with these words."

The declaration, "That flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," plainly refers to this our mortal state. "But we must be born again," not of or by the flesh, but by the spirit. "For if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by His Spirit that dwelleth in you. "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of His death, we shall be also, in the likeness of His resurrection." "For God hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by His own power."

Thus we can see the importance of a vital union with Christ here in this present state. "For, if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His." Therefore it was that Job could hope in being made like unto his Master, and that he should behold Him for himself.

"He shall stand in the latter day upon the earth."

We might reasonably expect that such an important event to take place, would be clearly foretold by the holy prophets. Can we find such a prophecy? We can. Turn with us to Zechariah xiv., 4, and it declares, "And His feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the Mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof, toward the east and toward the west; and there shall be a very great valley," etc.

By a continuation of the chapter, we find it is to have its fulfilment in that great day of the Lord when He will arise to shake terribly the earth, and they that dwell therein.

FROM Z. CAMPBELL.

SAYBROOK, OHIO, Feb., 1869.

BR. STORRS: Do not be discouraged. I owe for my paper and a dollar I pledged for the publication of the "Living Soul." It has been impossible for me to pay when due, owing to the scarcity of money. We have been passing through a hard time out here. It is hard to collect debts; and as I do not approve of sueing, as long as there is a prospect of getting it at any time without, so I have been able to collect but little. But I am earning something this winter, and I am sure of my money in March next, and I will pay up all. We are having a hard time here for winter wheat, and the present prospect is that next summer's crop will be light. Our little church here, once united and prosperous, is reduced almost to a cipher: the mortal resurrection having got into it and scattered it to the four winds. O, when will men cease the cry—"Up, and let us make gods to go before us." But thank God, the time will come (soon I hope) when divine truth will triumph over error. Strange what an influence some men hold over others. I have predicted but one thing more for Dr. T.; that "The prophet that Moses said God would raise up from among his brethren, is not Christ, but Dr. T." This, many of his friends are all ready to swallow.

These are indeed perilous times; but God will save his own people, and He only knows who they are. I have sent the "Living Soul" tract among my Campbellite friends; it is doing a good work. Many of them hereabouts have long since doubted the immortality of man, and some have boldly renounced it; some others are undecided. Many thanks to you for having sent the paper so long after the payment was due. May the Lord reward you in his coming kingdom.

NOTE BY EDITOR.—The "Dr. T.," above referred to, is the father of the mortal resurrection theory: a theory which corrupts the truth of God to aggrandize its promulgators; but will ultimately bury its advocates, even if its author should announce himself that Prophet of which Moses wrote. There are several such claimants in the field, and they are all among the "many antichrists" of which John speaks, 1 John ii., 18, and they are among the signs of the "last times," and will lead captive such as are not rooted and grounded in Christ.

FROM I. S. MOSER.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., February 8, 1869.

BR. STORRS: How is it that those brethren, who say they have been driven out of the sectarian churches for believing in the Lord's coming and the destruction of the wicked, are striving to do the same thing to those who believe in the non-living of the wicked dead? Is there not as much Scripture to prove that they will live again from the dead? Why are they not willing to say with Paul, "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind," and "Let us not therefore judge one another any more; but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling block in his brother's way." Rom. xiv., 13.

The doctrine looks plain to me; for the wages of sin is death, and death has passed upon all men to condemnation. It is the Spirit that quickeneth. The Spirit giveth life, and the wicked have not the Spirit of God; therefore they cannot have life from the dead. The Christian's hope is in the resurrection of the dead. But the wicked have no hope; and the Psalmist says, "Man being in honor, abideth not; he is like the beasts that perish; like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them. But the upright shall have dominion in the morning. Their [the wicked's] beauty shall consume in the grave from their dwelling. But God shall redeem my soul from the power of the grave; for He shall receive me." Psa. xlix. Praise the Lord, O my soul. Amen.

SATAN AT WORK.

IT is curious how this old enemy works everywhere. Sometimes he gets into our types, or else in the type-setters or proof-readers, or the editor himself. We have been plagued with him a great many times and in many ways. Last week he made one of our correspondents to say *com*mersion instead of *im*mersion, and we expected some of our readers would resort to dictionaries and lexicons to find this new word. While the adversary was thus perplexing us, we happened to receive one of our favorite exchanges, The Advance, and, casting our eye over its editoral columns, we paused on the article headed "A Practical Truth," which was on "the personal existence of the devil." We, of course, were interested to see the skill of our much esteemed editoral brother to show the actual existence of a veritable spirit-devil or satan. We had not progressed far before we found satan bodily. Among the proofs of his existence The Advance says, "we read . . . of his 'provoking David to murder Israel,'" etc. There, if any one says that was not the work of "satan" he must be callous to conviction! This announcement satisfied us satan was at the office of The Advance as well as at ours: so he can be in two places at once, though a thousand miles apart. But how do you know he was in the office of The Advance? Because he made that paper to say, "murder," where it should have said number. That surely was a lie, and a great one, too; and who does not know that "satan is a liar?" That he should get into our good exchange's office, as well as into ours, was some comfort to us, on the principle that "misery loves company."

Having thus introduced our subject, we will make a few remarks on the text about satan's provoking David [not to "murder," but] to number Israel, and see how much evidence there is in the account to prove the existence of a personal spirit-devil. The record of the transaction referred to is found 2 Saml. xxiv., 1; and 1 Chron. xxi., 1. In the first text the account reads:

"The anger of the LORD was kindled against Israel, and he moved David against them to say, Go, number Israel and Judah."

The other reads,

"And Satan stood up against Israel, and provoked David to number Israel."

That our translators believed in a personal spirit-satan need not be doubted; but that they gave a correct translation of the words stn and tsr (satan and tsorai) in all cases, no man is obliged to believe. These two Hebrew words signify the same thing, viz., "an adversary, an enemy."

In one of the above texts, it is clearly stated that the LORD moved David to number Israel; though the translators, seeing a difficulty before them in relation to the second text, place in the margin (for the pronoun "He" in the text) satan. Thus, in fact, making (unwittingly) the LORD the satan. Which might be true for all the text itself would show to the contrary; for the term satan is a harmless word when truly understood; for "the angel of the LORD" was a satan (modestly rendered "an adversary" by our translators) to the wicked Balaam. See Num. xxii., 22.

Again: In the above texts, one reads, "moved David," and the other "provoked David." In both cases the Hebrew is sooth, which Prof. Pick translates, "persuaded, induced, excited."

The question now arises, Who or what induced David to number Israel? The Advance and all of that class of theologians say it was "Satan;" meaning, of course, a personal spirit-devil, or fallen angel. The texts say no more than that it was an adversary. We are at liberty to determine who or what that was. That it was not the Lord we will admit, for the sake of shortening the investigation; and beside, "the Lord is not tempted with evil, neither tempteth He any man." We look therefore for this adversary, this satan, somewhere else, and without any regard to the notions of our translators or their imitators.

We will remark, however, before proceeding, that the Hebrew word sooth, translated in one of these texts "moved," and, in the other "provoked" is the same word found in Job ii., 3 "Thou (satan) movedst me (the LORD) against him (Job) to destroy him without cause." So the theological "satan" had as much to do with the Lord as with David, if he is a spirit-devil, as they will have it. But we pass that now, to be considered at another time, and proceed to our main question, What was that "adversary" which moved or provoked David to number Israel?

That David was tempted to do the deed, none will deny. The apostle James tells us, "Every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust." Here is the basis of all temptation. But some men express great horror at the idea of lust being the inlet and cause of temptation. This horror arises from a misconception of the use of the term. Lust is only another expression for desire. True, it is sometimes used for carnality; yet this applies only when desire seeks gratification in an unlawful or forbidden way; that is, when it "draws away" from a legitimate gratification. There is not a natural desire of our animal nature but what our CREATOR designed should be gratified in a lawful manner and in a temperate degree. The sin is in giving way to a lawless or intemperate gratification of our natural desires. When we allow these desires to draw us away from God's established order of gratification, and "conceive" the design to gratify them in that way, "sin is brought forth;" then when the act "is finished it bringeth forth death." See James i., 13–15.

Let it be distinctly understood, then, that lust, or desire, is not sin in itself; it is the wrong use made of it that constitutes the sin. It is allowing ourselves to be "drawn away" by it to do a prohibited act that makes it sin. These desires are "adversaries" in the sense that they need constant watching lest they lead us astray: we must watch and pray lest we enter into temptation to an indulgence that is not in harmony with the Divine will. Thus our Lord Jesus himself, who "was tempted in all points like as we are," was "without sin," because however strong the desire to promote His mission, He would perform no miracle for mere self-gratification; nor shrink from any suffering or reproach, however much He might desire it, if His Father's will demanded the sacrifice. All His desires, however strong, were regulated by the will of Him who sent His Son into the world.

Desire, then, is an adversary, or satan; and is to be overcome by a strict regard to the will of God. Israel was to trust in the LORD for defence against all their enemies, whatever the number of their men of war were, whether few or many. David gave place to the desire to know how many men of war he had. That desire was the "satan" that "provoked," or induced him to number Israel, thereby showing that he did not, as he ought, trust wholly on God's word of promise to save whether by few or many. This was his sin, for which his heart smote him, after the desire had drawn him away from implicit trust in God for defence. It developed pride in the number of men he had.

That this view is the correct one in this case, is evident from the conversation between David and Joab, David's chief captain. The record saith, "David said to Joab and to the rulers of the people, Go number Israel . . . And Joab answered, The LORD make his people a hundred times so many more as they be; but my lord the king, are they not all my lord's servants? why then doth my lord require this thing? why will he be a cause of trespass to Israel? Nevertheless the king's word prevailed against Joab . . . the king's word was abominable to Joab." See 1 Chron. xxi., 1–6.

Joab was wiser and more faithful to God in this matter than David; but David's desire or lust refused control, and became his satan, moving him in a direction that caused a great sin and did "murder Israel" by thousands.

Thus the theological devil or satan disappears from this transaction; the true satan or adversary is brought to light, and the two accounts are made to harmonize without doing violence to either, or giving infidels a chance to mock at the records of this transaction, as they justly may by the common notion of its being a personal spirit-devil that induced David to number Israel. His desire, or lust, to know how numerous were his arms of flesh, was the adversary that induced him to sin. And thus many sin in these days in numbering spiritual Israel, and are cursed with moral death for their pride of heart. They glory in their numbers, instead of trusting in the Lord. Their churches, their conferences, their synods, etc., become the rule by which they measure their power and their holiness. Their desires or lusts for numbers and power, by means of their own inventions, has led them to overlook the fact that is it "not by might, or by power, but by my Spirit, saith the LORD," that the real work of God is to be accomplished. Thus, while they can talk of the numbers they have enrolled in their ranks, moral or spiritual death is seen in all their hosts; and they themselves often lament the lack of that fervent, holy zeal which they once saw when they were few in numbers, so small that is was not desirable to count them, and they trusted in God and his truth to do the work. But they do not, like David, see their sin, and are not likely to repent of it, till it is too late, and God shall have destroyed them with a worse plague than that visited on Israel for David's sin in numbering the people. They lay all the blame of the evil among them on their theological satan, and see not that their own lusts are the cause.

WARSAW, N. Y.

BR. F. H. BURBANK is expected to commence a course of sermons on the Life and Advent views next Friday evening, the 19th inst., at the above-named place, and continue over two Sabbaths and the week intervening. We regret exceedingly his absence from our office for so long a time, but the hope that the cause of truth may be promoted in that flourishing village has led us to consent to the repeated calls of Br. McCagg, of that place, for help, he being alone in the Life views there. We have pledged ourselves to see Br. Burbank's expenses met in this visit to Western N. Y. If any wish to help us in doing it, we shall be glad to hear from them. At present there is no one at Warsaw from whom help can be expected. Br. B.'s absence subjects us to considerable extra labor, and our friends must be patient if their business is not all attended to immediately.

We desire and pray that this effort for Warsaw may result in much good to the cause of truth. Let all Life-lovers pray for its success, and that men may be brought to the knowledge and acknowledgment of the truth thereby.

RIGHTLY NAMED.

A NUT-SHELL ARGUMENT FOR ANNIHILATIONISTS. If all men sleep at death, then the man Christ Jesus was unconscious between His death and resurrection. If unconscious then, how could He take his life again as He declares He has power to do, and did do?

The above we clipped from Zion's Herald, of Feb. 11. We say it is "rightly named." It is "a nut-shell argument:"—"Something of little value." See Worcester's Dictionary. The text referred to is this, "Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father." John x., 17, 18.

The original word—exousia—here translated power, signifies also, "liberty, right, license, authority:" power "to do or not to do." Authority—commission: so the Syriac reads, "I have authority to lay it down, and authority to resume it again." Dr. Bloomfield, in his Critical Notes on the text, says,

"No one taketh it from me [by force]. We may paraphrase the passage thus; No one [not even the Father] compelleth me to die for my flock. I have of my own will undertaken to lay down my life for it. By the same will I shall return again to life."

What is there in all this that proves "the man Christ Jesus was" conscious "between his death and resurrection?" He had the right to dispose of his own life: if he dies, it is a voluntary act of his own. He received this right, authority, or liberty, from his Father. He voluntarily lays down his life; but before He does it, He chooses to take his life again, and his Father pledges to raise him from the dead. Jesus expresses his confidence in his Father's pledge by saying, "THOU wilt not leave my soul in sheol; neither wilt Thou suffer thy Holy One to see corruption." See Psa. xvi., 10: and Acts ii., 27, 28. Here the Christ recognises his Father's promise to raise Him up from the dead again; and He voluntarily lays down his life so trustingly in that promise as to enable Him to say, "I have authority to take it again." What was that "authority, liberty, or right" founded upon? Was it not on the promise of the Father that He would not leave "the man Christ Jesus" in "sheol; nor suffer Him to see corruption?" We need not repeat the many positive texts, we gave two weeks ago, showing that "GOD raised up Christ from the dead;" while not one text can be produced which says "the man Christ Jesus" raised himself from the dead; and we would caution all men, saints or sinners, to beware lest they come short of salvation by rejecting the fact, so clearly set forth in the Bible, that Jesus did not raise himself from the dead, but that GOD did it: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shall believe in thy heart that GOD hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." Rom. x., 9. Our salvation, then, may depend on our faith as to who raised up Christ from the dead. Let us beware of attributing this event to the wrong person.

"Christ took his life again" from His Father, into whose hands He committed it when He expired on the cross. See Luke xxiii., 46. The word here translated "spirit," is pneuma; signifying "life, breath." Jesus when he expired committed his life to his Father who had promised to restore it after three days, or before corruption should take place. Thus the "Nut-shell Argument" has turned out like the Catholic Priest's illustration of his church. Holding a "nut" in his hand, he said, "The Catholic Church is as sound as this nut;" and breaking it in the sight of the people, behold it was rotten at the core! Our readers can apply the subject.

ORGANIZED CHURCHES.

To show our readers that our remarks on self-constituted bodies, a few weeks since, whether conferences or churches, were not the result of a momentary feeling at the present aspect of affairs among Advent and Life believers we republish the following, which appeared in the HERALD OF LIFE, 1866. Our mind is the same now as then; only, if possible, we are doubly confirmed in the correctness of those views, by the recent action of some of these self-styled churches and conferences.

CHURCH ORGANIZATIONS.

MR. STORRS: Dear Sir:—I am in a strait betwixt two influences. I want to join a church; and as there is none here but Baptist and Methodist, I concluded to write to you to find out whether there could be a preacher sent here (i. e., located here) and establish a society. There are several men in Union and Delaware Counties, that hold the same faith as you; and I think a society could be organized immediately. However, if you think a minister can be obtained, I will visit my friends and know what can be done and report to you.

Also, I want to know all about your church organization. Have you a "Discipline," so-called? Have you a church hymn book? If so, the price. Is it better for a man that believes the doctrine set forth in your books and pamphlets, to remain outside of a church, than to join the Methodist or N. S. Baptist?

Yours, in hope of Eternal Life, W.

NEW DOVER, OHIO, Jan. 22, 1866.

RESPONSE BY THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD OF LIFE.

We presume "W" feels as many others do who have been educated to think a man cannot live a Christian without joining some church. We, perhaps, differ from a large portion of those who have embraced our views of life only in Christ. We have never "organized" a church since we left the Methodist E. Church in 1840; believing that all who receive Christ, and are accepted of him, are by the "Spirit baptized into one body," and that is "the body [or Church] of Christ." Those thus baptized by the Spirit into the body of Christ, are "joined" to the Church, and constitute the true one. They may, or may not have what is called a "visible organization," but that makes them none the less or more a church. It is not an external organization that makes them such; but the internal grace which makes them of the body of Christ. The external organizations have deceived many souls to their ruin, we fear, by the persons supposing that, because they have accepted a place in them, by the rites and ceremonies of such organisms, they belong to the body of Christ; whereas, they remain ignorant of a true and living union with Christ, and rest in outward observances, which can never give them life eternal; they think more of what has been done to their flesh than of the inworking of the Spirit which raised up Christ from the dead, and by which only can any man be quickened into eternal life.

In relation to those who embrace the Life views, as held by us, we would say to them, as Paul said to the Corinthians, in another matter, 1 Corth. vii., 27, "Art thou bound unto a" church—Baptist, Methodist, or any other, with a name of human invention? "seek not to be loosed." "Art thou loosed from a" church,—Baptist, Methodist, or any other with such names? "seek not a" connection with any of them.

We have never advised a person, embracing the views we hold, to leave a church where he or she held a relation to it, merely because of having embraced these views, if said church would allow them to remain in peace. "Seek not to be loosed" from it. But do not put your light "under a bushel" for the sake of remaining in their body; for by so doing you sin against the light God has given you, and your light will be sure to go out; or, which is the same thing, your light will not shine, and others will not be benefited by it; and thus you will meet with loss, and dishonor the LIFE-GIVER. But if the church is willing you should remain in it as a free person, then remain, using kindness and love among them; speaking of your views frankly, but not forcing them upon others at improper times, or in an uncourteous manner. If this privilege is denied you, then leave them, or let them exclude you; in such cases a brother or sister is not bound to such church. Being free from such church, "in our judgment," he or she is better off not to attempt a union with another human organization; you will not find it any more tolerant than those you have left. In these organizations there soon arises some spirit that seeks to control and restrict the actions of its members, and they find they have left one organization to be enslaved by another. Make sure that you have received the Spirit of God, and are thus baptized into Christ; then stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made you free, and be not entangled again in a yoke of bondage.

By these remarks we do not wish to be understood as opposing church organizations for such as cannot live without them. It is better to use crutches than not to walk at all; but such will be likely always to walk limping. A living, healthy man, with sound limbs, will be likely to lay aside crutches, or esteem them as a burden, rather than a help.

Live for Christ; seek the fulness of his Spirit, that you may be "filled with all the fulness of God;" and do not be troubled by your want of what is called a "church relation;" you are probably better off without it than with it. Remember, nothing can give you life save union with the LIFE-GIVER—the Spirit that raised up Jesus from the dead working in you. Therefore, grieve not the Holy Spirit of God by trusting in any device of man's invention; whether it be organizations or "carnal ordinances," however specious they may seem. Beware of losing the Spirit by the use of any human device. Trust in the living God: watch and pray, and wait for the Son of God from heaven; then will He organize his Church never to be dissolved or deranged.

P. S. Our "Discipline" is the Bible alone; and that is all the Creed we have, and we have no special "Hymn Book." Use for hymns the best you can find, and alter them to suit yourselves.

THE SPIRIT OF PAPACY REVIVED.

THE character of Romanism is far from being a pleasant picture to look upon. As an anti-christian power it strewed the earth with innocent blood, using the civil arm to enforce her ecclesiastical authority. But there was an underlying spirit which was the primal cause, and the possession of power to carry out those principles made Romanism the fearful character that history presents. Undoubtedly no stronger evidence exists of her apostate character than her claims of authority to regulate the faith of the Christian church. Sectarianism was the spirit controlling the civil arm; and history records the startling fact that over fifty millions of God's freemen have fallen victims to sectarianism. This is the spirit of anti-christ. How saddening to think that this anti-christian spirit—sectarianism—should still exist in the church of Christ, and should be the ruling spirit of the age! This spirit of anti-christ is not now manifested in carrying men to the inquistion; it has not this power; but it shows itself in trying to control, as formerly, men's belief; to sit in judgment, and dictate to Christian men and women what they shall believe and promulgate. It is saddening we say, that such a condition of things should exist; but let us take warning that we do not imbibe this spirit of apostacy. It is the great whirlpool which will ruin the church.

We were overwhelmed with suprise at the spirit which has characterized the late Advent Conferences, and sadness fills our heart as we behold the same spirit manifested which they have so long, from the pulpit and the press, denounced severely inother denominations—the same spirit which marks an apostate Christendom. Proceeding upon the assumption that they have the whole truth in their possession, they proceed to sit in judgment upon doctrine, and shackle men in the promulgation of a Bible truth, which they are unable to meet in honest invetigation. We say this in all Christian kindness and love.

We need not repeat the resolutions which the Advent Conferences have passed against those who hold the doctrine of the non-revival of the wicked dead; and that life beyond the grave is only obtained by faith in Jesus Christ. Proceeding on the assumption that it is an error, is passing condemnatory resolutions a Bible way to meet it? Let them honestly meet the doctrine and prove it to be "unbiblical and untrue," before, as a representative body of the church, they condemn it as such. Before arming themselves with the grand assumption that they have the whole truth, would it not be wise for them to consider that it is possible they may be in error? Once they just as zealously advocated what they now condemn as a monstrous error. Did they not once believe the immortality of the soul was as clearly taught as the resurrection of the wicked? We believe the two doctrines are on equal grounds, as neither of them are plainly taught in the Scriptures. As they have renounced the one as an error, may it not be possible that in regard to the other they may also be wrong? Do not, then, brethren be too positive! Be honest with the people, and give them a fair chance to see both sides of the question; and not let prejudice blind your eyes from the truth and work your ruin. We invite you to meet the doctrine fairly on Bible grounds. Truth is the desirable boon for which we seek.

As an item of interest, I will make an extract from a private letter, by a good brother, which is doubtless a fair expression of the opposite views, and may also afford us a glimpse of the reasons which would be advanced in justification of their official action. The letter proceeds thus: "It is a dangerous doctrine; a fatal error." Again, the well-known words are appropriated to describe his views of the doctrine: "It is

'A monster of such frightful mien:
That to be hated, needs but to be seen.'

"I must also say that some good men embrace this strange and horrid doctrine. Strange, because contrary to express declarations of Scripture. Horrid, because its effect wherever preached, is death to all Christian advancement. Its fruits are evil, and by the fruits we may judge."

This is a pretty strong assumption, and with some minds might have much weight; but to one who follows the divine injunction to "prove all things," it appears like the chaff of the summer threshing floor. Let us examine the points presented, though, as they are mere assertions, it would be more appropriate to ask for proof.

1. It is claimed that it is a dangerous doctrine. We might inquire upon what grounds is this assertion based? If it be truth, then it cannot be dangerous to the church, without it is assumed that some of God's truths are dangerous. Hence the argument would rest upon the question, "Is the doctrine of the non-restoration of Adamic life to the wicked dead, true?" If it be proved to be false, it yet remains to be proved that it is more dangerous than other false doctrines which abound. Is it more dangerous than the time arguments, which have time after time failed? Their errors have been most positively demonstrated by the passing of dates. Churches have been broken up, bright intellects ruined, and the way for the onward march of truth hedged up. Where has the advocacy of the non-revival of the wicked produced such disastrous results? How frail such assertions are, in light of truth!

2. It is charged with being "a fatal error," and "contrary to express declarations of Scripture." As this is the very point at issue, it is not unjust, nor unreasonable to require evidence in support of such an assumption. We take the negative position, and kindly ask our opponents to give us the "express declaration of Scripture" which says that the wicked shall live again. They may give us inferential texts, but we want a "thus saith the Lord." All religionists quote inferential texts in support of their faith—from the Mahometan to the Mormon. If it is the divine purpose of God that the wicked shall live again, there should be some positive statements to that effect. But as no "express declarations of Scripture" can be produced in the affirmative, permit us negatively, to produce positive "declarations" that they will not live again. We shall produce but a few positive passages from the many which represent the wicked as perishing like the beasts, and intimating as much future life for the one as for the other. Here is a positive declaration, "Man being in honor abideth not; he is like the beasts that perish. . . . Like sheep are they laid in the grave; death shall feed on them, and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning." Psa. xlix., 12–14. They are "like" the beasts in the sense that they "perish" like them; and to this condition the Psalmist makes a striking contrast when he declares: "But God will deliver my soul from the power of the grave." This clearly shows that the wicked will not be "delivered" from the power of the grave." "He shall go to the generation of his fathers; he shall never see light." (ver. 19.) They shall not see the "light" of life. No honest construction can be put upon the passage but what makes it preclude the wicked dead from a future life. This most positive declaration of Scripture is supported by Isaiah, who says: "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, THEY SHALL NOT RISE; therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made their memory to perish." Isa. xxvi., 14. In chapter xliii., the prophet repeats the same positive statement that "they shall lie down together, THEY SHALL NOT RISE; they are extinct, they are quenched as tow."

Will our brother withdraw his declaration that this doctrine is a "fatal error," and admit that the prophets spoke the divine truth? We believe the word of the prophets, which is in harmony with the whole tenor of the Scriptures. The revealed purpose of God for the redemption of man from the grave does not embrace those who reject the atonement offering; who reject Christ as the LIFE-GIVER. Those who will not believe on him "shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on them." John iii., 36. How can these words of truth be twisted into a declaration that they shall live. It says they "shall not see life;" therefore, the "express declarations of the Scriptures" inform us that the wicked dead shall not live again; hence all inferential passages must be harmonized with these "express declarations," which are embraced in the glorious plan of redemption. Christ came to give eternal life to those who believe, and nowhere is it affirmed that He is the giver of Adamic life at the resurrection. Paul says, "The DEAD shall be raised INCORRUPTIBLE." The phrase "the dead" embrace all who shall be raised; and, therefore, if the wicked are raised universal salvation is the result; for Christ tells us that the "children of the resurrection" cannot die any more, being "the children of God."

3. It is claimed that this is a "horrid" doctrine, and "wherever preached is death to all religious advancement."

(1.) We wish our opponents would press the assumption that the non-resurrection of the wicked is a "horrid" doctrine, by a just comparison with their theory. They claim that all the wicked that have ever lived will come forth from the land of unconsciousness, clothed in the robes of mortality, amidst weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth; and what for? Why, that God, presented as a cruel executioner, may inflict untold suffering by burning them up, and thus put them back again in the same state from whence they were brought. Some say, they are brought forth for the purpose of inflicting degrees of punishment. But this would make suffering the penalty for sin. The Scriptures say the "wages of sin is death." Hence the bringing forth of the wicked for a temporary life beyond the grave cannot affect their relation to the penalty. Suffering and torment is no part of the penalty. Would not eternal death have been the fate of the whole human family had Christ not died? But he came to give eternal life to the righteous; and I can see no way in which this gift can affect the condition of the unbelievers. They reject the offer of life; therefore he says: "He that believeth on the Son hath life;" (hath the life principle—seal of the Holy Ghost;) "and he that believeth not SHALL NOT SEE LIFE; but the wrath of God abideth on him." John iii., 36.

(2.) The assumption that this doctrine is "death to all religious advancement" is, we think, wholly without foundation. It may, possibly, be "death" to sectarian advancement. It is generally the case when Christians lay aside the armor of love and commence fighting the truth that they backslide; but, surely, we should not be charged with producing this result when it is the just fruit of their own action. Men never backslide doing the Lord's work. Let all beware, therefore, how they act. It would be contrary to the duty which we owe to God to compromise the truth of revelation with men's theories, because in opposing it they are liable to backslide. "Religious advancement" is based upon truth; to "grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth." That the Bible doctrine of life from the dead to the righteous alone is detrimental to this religious progress we deny, and facts can be produced to sustain this position.

We wish all may understand our position; and while cherishing nothing but the feelings of love toward all, we earnestly enter our protest against the summary manner in which the Advent Conferences attempt to dispose of our faith. Who hath made them judges over us? If this is the spirit which professed Bible Christians are to manifest toward members of the same body, we desire a position in the front ranks in the conflict with sectarianism. Give us truth, and let reproach, persecution, or what may, follow. Praise the Lord for the Spirit of Christ and the freedom of the Gospel.

AN EXPOSITION.

BY JACOB GRIM.

"Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever."—1 Peter i., 23.

THIS incorruptible seed Peter contrasts with the flesh. The one like the grass perishes and passeth away, while the other continues forever. This text contains two great truths which embrace the whole plan of God in relation to the children of men.

Adam being at the head of one great line, embracing the whole human family which is denominated under the head of flesh, and is just as enduring and immortal as the grass of the field; "For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of the grass. The grass withereth and the flower thereof falleth away," and it is gone. The lesson which Peter intends to inculcate upon the minds of his readers is, that man is of the same corruptible nature, and just as perishable as the grass.

But what is the lesson taught by the words in opposition to these? "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." What does Peter mean "by the word of God?" Not the Gospel; for he says, "this is the word which by the Gospel is preached unto you." Now, I understand the Apostle to teach that the word and seed are one and the same thing. I suppose that Peter means the same as John did when he said, "In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God, the same was in the beginning with God." "And the word (logos) became flesh, and dwelt among us—and we beheld his glory a glory as of the only begotten of the Father full of grace and truth."

The question is asked, What does John mean, and how are we to understand the Apostle? I answer, let John and the Scriptures explain themselves. In John's first epistle, chap. i., 1, we have these words, "That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled of the word of life (logos). (For the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that eternal life, which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us.")

Now then, says John, "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ. This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." Luke, in the introduction of his Gospel, says, he "set forth those things which were surely believed among them, Even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eye-witnesses, and ministers of the word," (logos). John says, "In it was life; and the life was the light of men; and the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not. It was in the world and the world was made by it (anton) and the world knew it not."

The word it and he are translated from the same word. It was it when it was the word in the beginning with the Father; it became he when it was made flesh and dwelt among us. It was the word of promise to Eve, in the beginning. It was the word that was laid hold on by Abel, through which he brought an acceptable sacrifice unto the Lord. It was the word which the Lord told Cain, "If thou doest well, shalt thou not be raised up? (Rabba Leiser) and if thou doest not well, sin lieth in the opening. Step out of the way of sin, and control its desire, and thou shalt rule over it. But submit to it and it shall corrupt thee."

It was this word or incorruptible seed that was in Noah, through which he had confidence in God and built an ark for the saving of himself and family. This same word was with Job, Enoch, and Elijah. And it became localized in Abraham when God made to him the promise that in his seed should all the nations of the earth be blessed. Here was the first tangible promise that this word (which was with the children of God through all ages past), should become flesh, and dwell among us. "To thy seed will I give the land for an everlasting possession." This same word was in, and supported Moses through all his trials in Egypt; and was with the children of Israel in all their wanderings. It was with David, Solomon, and all the old prophets down until the time for the fulfilment of the word of promise, when the word of promise became flesh and dwelt among us; and John said, "The word was made flesh (that is, it was localized) and dwelt among us. John says, He came unto his own, and his own received him not; but as many as did receive him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God; to them that believe on his name: which were born, not of blood (the corruptible seed, compared to grass) nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, (for all that man has the power of begetting are mortal) but of God." Here, then, is Peter's incorruptible seed.

Paul tells the story, when he says, "I, Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God, (which was previously announced through his prophets in the holy scriptures). Concerning that Son of His which was borne of the seed of David according to the flesh (mortal, perishable like his brethren), but having implanted in him the incorruptible seed, the word of God; by which He was declared the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." Rom i., 1–4.

"What think ye of Christ; whose Son is he? The Pharisees say unto him, the son of David." And so did Paul, an apostle, and servant of Jesus Christ. Jesus said unto these Pharisees, "If he is David's son, how then doth David in spirit call him Lord? If David then call him Lord, how is he his son?" David saw the truth, looking foreward with the eye of the spirit of prophecy. He beholds the word of promise that God gave him, that he should have a seed, in whom would dwell the leaven that should leaven the whole lump; and with the same spirit, He saw Jesus raised from the dead, and become the Alpha and Omega of the age to come, and head of all things to the church; and as David is a member of that body, and is generated anew from the dead by Jesus, who alone has the regenerating power, he beholds in spirit what Paul lived to see, viz., Jesus raised from the dead and declared to be the Son of God; therefore, David cries out, "The Lord, says unto my Lord" (of the age to come, when raised from the dead) "Set thou on my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool."

The disciples had a foretaste of this blessed truth, when Jesus asked them the question, "Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am?" Matt. xvi., 13. Jesus had been performing many wonders through the country, and knew that it was natural that men should express their opinions in relation to himself; hence the question, Whom do men say that I am? "Some say John the Baptist; some Elias: and others Jeremias, or one of the prophets." Coming nearer home, "Jesus saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am?" And here Peter by the Spirit of God has a foretaste of the glory of Jesus Christ, by the power of revelation. "And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou Simon, Barjona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father who is in heaven." Peter had a foretaste of Jesus in his full development as the Son of God in his resurrected character, though like many before him he understood it not. But says the Apostle Paul, the Mystery in Christ which was hidden in eyes past is now made known unto us by the Spirit—Jesus Christ, manifested as the fulness of the incorruptible seed, the Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

REPORT OF EMELINE WOOD, ALBANY, N. Y.

BR. STORRS: I desire you to know how I am progressing in my work, and how happy I am in it. I go out Sunday afternoons, and the blessed Lord helps me. I go from house to house and look to God for direction. At one house I saw a lady standing on the door steps in conversation with another at the next house. I asked her if she would accept a tract. She replied, Yes, thank you. The lady next door came and took one also; and others in the house, seeing me, came for some. The Sabbath seems a good day for this work, as the tracts are likely to be read at once. Last Sabbath a boy met me and asked if I was distributing tracts: and remarked, They are nice large ones. I said, Yes, and there is blessed news in them. He accepted one and put it in his Bible, being on his way to Sabbath School. As I passed on, the people came out for tracts and met me with a smile. I am much encouraged. One evening as I was going into a Baptist church, a friend invited me to call in the study and introduced me to the Pastor. He asked me where I went to church. I replied I belong to the Advent band. He said, I am an advent believer too, and acquainted with Bro. Grant and Himes; but am sorry they have the no-soul doctrine mixed up with it. I replied, Does not the Bible say, God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul, not, a soul put in him? He admitted it. I said, if he was not too busy, I would like him to visit me. He replied, I will come to-morrow; and he did come and another minister with him. I showed them your large works, as well as the tracts. They seemed much pleased, and promised to let me know what they thought after reading them.

Sister Hoyt sends pay for her paper, and says, "Tell Br. Storrs I am in my eighty-first year, but cannot do without the blessed HERALD OF LIFE. I would rather live on one meal a day than do without my paper, because I cannot go to meeting much, and it is such a comfort to me in my loneliness; and I wish to help along this blessed cause."

THE LAKE OF FIRE.

"THE lake of fire (which) is the second death." Rev. xx., 14.

That this "lake of fire" is a symbolic a lake of "fire and brimstone" and not the earth in a molten state, is evident from the following facts:

There were six kinds of subjects cast into it, viz.: the dragon, the beast, the false prophet, death, hell, and all whose names were not written in "the book of life."

The beast and false prophet were cast into it a thousand years before the other parties were. The dragon was bound in a "bottomless pit" during the same thousand years but who ever heard of its being called a literal pit without a bottom to it, or that there was a dragon cast into it that had such a quantity of heads and horns, even seven of the one and ten of the other.

After the thousand years are expired, the dragon is let out of the pit and he goes into the four quarters of the earth to gather Gog and Magog together for war, etc. If the earth in a molten state is the lake of fire, how could any one live on it during the thousand years? Bear in mind that the beast and false prophet were cast into the lake of fire at the same time that the dragon was put into the bottomless pit, so that the lake of fire exists throughout that period. After the dragon has gathered his army and compassed the camp of the saints, fire from heaven consumes the army, but the dragon is thrust into the lake of fire where the other two beast were cast, to "be tormented day and night forever and ever."

Whether the thousand years are in the past or in the future, the difficulty is as great as ever concerning the theory of the lake of fire being the molten earth.

Next "Death," who road on "a pale horse," and "Hell" who followed with him, delivered up the dead which were in them. Then, "death and hell were cast into the lake of fire." After that, all whose names were not written in the book of life were cast there.

John tells us, in Rev. ix., of horses who had fire and brimstone coming out of their mouths. The bottomless pit is also mentioned in this chapter: Abaddon was its king; the dragon went to him. The lake mentioned will doubtless be composed of such fire and brimstone as came out of the mouths of these horses. The pit, the lake, etc., are all symbols. Yours in Christ,

PUTTING ON IMMORTALITY.

CONCERNING the resurrection of the saints one brother writes, that

The reorganization and waking up being the first stage, and the change being the second stage: for this mortal must put on immortality; and non-entity could not put it on. (See Eld. Sheldon in Voice of the West, Jan. 19. 1869.)

Every man has the right of private judgment upon the Scriptures, as far as other men are concerned. If we differ in conclusions, and feel it necessary to criticise each other's views, it can all be done in the spirit of love. One editor said of the late Prof. HUDSON that he was "a man of soft words and hard arguments." Hard words never can convince an opponent that he is wrong. It is my aim to avoid everything that would wound the feelings of a child of God, and in writing upon this point I hope to preserve a kind spirit toward my brother, for whom I entertain much respect and esteem.

Our brother's argument seems to be one of necessity—"non-entity (cannot) put on" immortality; therefore, there must be a re-organization and waking up, and then mortality may put on immortality. This appears to be the position that he occupies.

Webster defines non-entity as "a thing that does not exist." Thus man, when he returns to dust, does not exist as a man any longer. To my mind there is no more difficulty in conceiving how such a non-entity can put on IMMORTALITY, than there is in conceiving how non-entity can become mortal: one is as marvellous as the other.

If it is true that man is to be re-organized, will that re-organization be effected in the grave or on the surface of the earth? If in the grave, will these lifeless persons be made alive after they come to the surface of the earth, or before? If before, then non-entity could be made immortal down there as easily as it could be made a living mortal. If after these mortal bodies are re-organized they are brought to the surface of the earth and THEN made alive, then we should have the spectacle of an immense number of re-organized corpses.

Our brother further states that "'impartial minds' can see more propriety in having a man made immortal after coming to life than when he is a dead corpse: for he must put on immortality either before or after being made alive." In reply to this, it may be stated, that, provided a re-organization of the mortal man takes place, whether in the earth or on its surface, we have a spectacle of corpses thereby: then it is no more difficult to make them immortal at once, than to make them alive and yet mortal, or still subject to death.

The meaning of the term immortal seems to be overlooked or forgotten by our brother. Immortality is life itself, a condition of entire freedom from death. Life unending is immortality. Man by nature is mortal—"subject to death on account of Adam's transgression," some tell us. Such a man at the last day has a re-organization of his "Adamic mortality." Why? Must he be brought again into that condition after once having suffered the full effects of it? Does God or nature demand that he shall occupy that "Adamic condition" TWICE?

To escape this dilemma, some, who side with our brother partially, take the ground that everybody will be raised incorruptible; after which the judgment, etc . . . But Paul states that we are raised spiritual also; hence that sets aside the necessity of a judgment that would have reference to bestowing immortality.

For my part, then, it seems as easy a matter for a disorganized man, or a non-entity, to be re-organized into an immortal man, as it is for him to be re-organized again into a mortal one, and made immortal afterward. To my mind it seems more reasonable. Paul says, "We shall not all sleep but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and WE shall be changed." This was the way that Paul taught the church in regard to mortality having immortality put upon it. Yours in Christ,

F. H. BURBANK.

FROM J. S. POTTER.

ST. JOHN. N. B., Feb. 7, 1869.

BR. STORRS: As I am detained in the City of St. John, N. B., waiting for the next boat for Portland, I thought I would write a letter for the HERALD OF LIFE, so that the friends may know my whereabouts. After an absence of nine weeks from East Boston, Mass., I left Digby, N. S., with five other passengers, for St. John, N. B. We left at five o'clock on the evening of Wednesday, the 3d inst., expecting to take the boat at eight o'clock next morning for Portland, Me. The wind being east and kept increasing until about half way across the Bay (which is about thirty-five miles wide) a thick snow storm set in; but we still had hopes of making the light, as they have a fog horn near the light-house, which can be heard several miles off. After running about five hours and a half, the speed of the boat was slacked, and the lead hove for soundings. I believe they found fifteen fathoms, so they kept running on and backing off for about an hour, feeling for land right on a lee shore, and the storm kept increasing; at last they made the land, but on account of its being covered with snow we could not tell whether we were to the eastward or the westward of the light, and after giving up all hopes of making harbor that night the captain run the boat off about six miles south, and then headed her up east and faced the storm for six long hours until daybreak. I tell you, I was glad when we got off from the land, where we had more sea room. All this time the storm kept increasing; such blowing snowing and hailing I hardly ever saw. During this time the cook-stove pitched out of the cook house on deck and broke to pieces; the funnel of our stove in the cabin gave way and the fire went out, so we had no fire for four or five hours. There was one lady passenger on board who was very sick all night; also, the men passengers were sick. I was the only one that kept up. Such jumping and pitching into the sea, the boat made that night beat all. The spray would go right into the wheel house where the men were at the wheel. It took one man all the time to dry sacks and coats in the engine room, so that the captain could have a change every fifteen minutes to keep him from being chilled through, as he was much exposed, being on deck all night. I was knocking round all night; sometimes would look out on deck and see the storm rage; at other times lay on the locker. There was no going to bed for me that night; but I kept cool and tried to let patience have its perfect work. About six o'clock daylight appeared, and they put on more steam and run about northeast, climbing over the big seas to see if we could find harbor, and in the course of four hours we made the light, by hearing the fog horn, and all got safe to land; for which I truly thank the Lord for his goodness and his mercy to us. May his name ever be praised.

Before we arrived, the steamer for Portland had left; and as I understand did not arrive at Eastport until Saturday morning, on account of the storm; so I had to make the best of it. I went to a boarding house and rested—did not go out until Friday. I then wrote a little piece for the papers which created quite a sensation among the pilots and steamboat agents. I also called upon the Rev. J. E. Bill, editor of the Christian Visitor. I was kindly received and had some pleasant conversation on "Doctrine." I gave him the "Defence of the Bible" and some other works. I shall see him again this week, and it may be before I leave for home I may stir up another sensation. May the good Lord bless all the brethren and sisters with much grace. Yours, hoping for life.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Br. Potter, some two or three months since, went to Nova Scotia, carrying with him a large quantity of our "Campaign Documents," and has been holding meetings and scattering these works. On his return home, he seems to have had a "peril at sea;" out of which, we are glad to learn, he has been delivered. May he be spared to work still in scattering light and truth.

THE DEVIL'S BUSINESS.—"It is the devil's business, but it pays well." So a Christian minister is reported to have said while disposing of raffling tickets at a fair for the benefit of his congregation. The language may have been misquoted, but that he engaged in the "business" is well known.

Now is it fit that Christian ministers or religious societies should do "the devil's business," because it pays well? What a change of programme is the introduction of a fair conducted, to a great extent, upon such principles, in the midst of a series of religious meetings, and in the midst of rejoicing in a "revival of religion!" Yet such was the case with the fair to which allusion is made. Is there not special danger that converts, gathered under such influences, will "fall from grace?"

But this is only a low step in the direction to which fairs are wont to tend. They are generally a device to get money for the Lord from those who are the servants of the devil, and the means must be suited to the end or it will not pay.

Will the Lord be pleased with such offerings? If He would not allow the price of a dog to be brought into his house for any vow, will he accept the gains of "the devil's business" as a worthy tribute?

Is it not time that Christian ministers and Christian churches set their faces against such things? Such devices for replenishing the Lord's treasury may be fair in promise, but in the end they will not pay. Better that our churches should be unfurnished and unadorned, and that our music should be from voices sustained only by the deep fountain of piety in the heart, than that the taste should be gratified by such unholy means.—Zion's Herald.

To the above we say, Good. And we rejoice to see this stand taken by that Methodist paper.

OBITUARY.

DIED, January 25th, at Oconto, Wis., MILLARD, aged eight years and nine months; also, February 1st, GRACE, aged one year and seven months; the youngest two children of John F. and Ellen HUNTLEY. They had the scarlet fever. May God help us to bear this bereavement like those that are looking for their Lord and immortality for ourselves and our children.

Poetry.

Revision of Pope's Universal Prayer.

FATHER of all: Thou great first cause,
Yet not well understood;
Author of life and Nature's Laws,
And fount of every good.
Thou art indeed a wond'rous God;
For there is none but thee
Can hold the balance and the rod,
And judge in equity.
Though I in nature's darkness grope,
A ray of light I see;
And thank thee for that blessed hope
Of immortality.
Raise and support what in me's low,
Illume what in me's dark,
Faith, hope and grace on me bestow,
What else I need, impart.
Let not poor weak and erring me
Presume thy bolts to throw,
Or think a brother's faults I see,
Whose heart I cannot know.
What Scripture teaches to be done,
Or warns me not to do,
This teach me thou as vice to shun;
As virtue that pursue.
Let not my hand, with error weak,
Attempt the tares to pull
Out from among the growing wheat,
Ere harvest time is full.
Teach me, O Lord, to shun false creeds:
The graceless zealot's pride:
'Tis from thy word all truth proceeds;
Be that alone my guide.
Yet not to earth's contracted span,
Thy goodness let me bound;
In other worlds, celestial lands,
Wisdom divine is found.
So let my stubborn heart relent,
And yield unto thy will:
That when at last my life is spent,
May thou my God be still.
And in the resurrection morn,
When all the good shall rise,
Let me once more again be born,
And dwell in Paradise.

The Struggle and the Victory.

"JOHNNY," said a farmer to his little boy, "it is time for you to go to the pasture and drive home the cattle."

Johnny was playing at ball, and the pasture was a long way off, but he was accustomed to obey; so off he started, without a word, as fast as his legs could carry him.

Being in a great hurry to get back to play, he only half let down the bars, and then hurried the cattle through, and one fine cow, in trying to crowd over, stumbled and broke her leg.

Johnny stood by the suffering creature, and thought to himself: "Now what shall I do? That was the finest cow father had, and it will have to be killed, and it will be a great loss to father. What shall I tell him?"

"Tell him," whispered the tempter—the same tempter who puts wicked thoughts into all our hearts—"tell him you found the bars half down and the creature lying there."

"No, I can't say that," said Johnny, "for that would be a lie."

"Tell him," whispered the tempter again, 'that while you were driving the cows that big boy of Farmer Brown's threw stones and hurried that cow so that she fell."

"No, no," said Johny, "I never told a lie, and I won't begin now. I'll tell my father the truth. It was all my falut. I was in a hurry, and I frightened the poor creature, and she fell and broke her leg."

So having taken this right and bright resolve, Johnny ran home as if he were afraid the tempter would catch him, and he went straight to his father and told him the whole truth.

And what did his father do? He laid his hand on Johnny's head, and said:

"My son, my dear son, I would rather lose every cow I own, than that my boy should tell an untruth."

And Johnny, though very sorry for the mischief he had done, was much happier than if he had told a lie to screen himself, even if he had never been found out.—S. S. Visitor.

Good Company.

IT was a very dark, rainy night. Our boys' prayer-meeting had just closed, and Henry stopped to tell me a word of hope about one of our class for whom we had long been praying. As I went to the door and looked out into the darkness and rain, I said:

"Harry, I am almost afraid to have you go so far alone this dark night. Is there no one going your way?"

He looked up with a bright smile and answered:

"O I am to have good company! I shall not be alone."

"Then your father or your brother are in town, are they?"

"No. Better company than that."

"Who can it be?"

"Why, the one whom we met at prayer-meeting. The Saviour. You know he says (you read it to-night) 'I am with you alway.'"

"So you think you will not be lonely or afraid?"

"No, indeed. Christ is good company, and he has promised to take care of me always. Good-night."

As I stood looking out into the darkness, after Henry's departure, I thought this is not the first time a child's faith has reproved me. Henry is not afraid to go anywhere, for Christ will go with him. Why should he fear? Why should I? He believes Christ is ever at his side, though unseen to his natural eye. Christ is real to him, truly present; and so he will be to all his children as they walk through the darkness of this world.

The next day, meeting Harry, I said, "Did you have a pleasant walk last night?"

"Oh, delightful!" he answered. "It seemed as if Christ was with me all the way. He is blessed company in the darkness or in the light. Isn't he, teacher?"

"Indeed he is, Harry, and may his presence always go with you as now."

The Contrast.

BR. STORRS: The following was written last May for a Western paper, but it was refused. We now send it to the HERALD, with a very little alteration.

W. H. WHITMAN.

IN looking over said paper, we found an article headed "God is Love;" which is a sublime theme. We also noticed in said article, a contrast between God and man, as follows: "God is divine, man is human; God is Spirit, man is carnal; God is pure, man is corrupt; God is strong, man is weak; God is holy, man is vile; God is righteous, man is wicked; God never committed a sin, man is 'dead in trespasses and sins;' God is undying, man is doomed to the grave and the unseen world."

The above we indorse, except the last clause, "the unseen world." Is it right to translate hades, "the unseen world!" Does not hades mean unseen, hidden, without the word world being attached to it! By the aid of a Hebrew and Greek reference, we have examined all the places in the Bible where sheol and hades occur. And it seems to us that the terms mean a state, not a place; the state of death, or state of the dead. And there are but few places in the Bible, when properly translated, but it will make good sense, by using the above terms in the place of hades. But the nature of man will settle the question in our mind. Paul says, "There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body. And so it is written, (in Gen. ii., 7, and nowhere else, that we can find) the first man Adam was made a living soul; (not an immortal soul, or an undying spirit) the last Adam (the Lord from heaven) a life-giving spirit. Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual; but that which is natural, and afterward that which is spiritual. The first man is of the earth, earthy."

We believe the divine lesson as here given by Paul: and he establishes the position from Gen. ii., 7. But the contrast between God and man may be carried farther. God is incorruptible, man is corruptible. Rom. i., 23. God is immortal, (1 Tim. i., 17,) man is mortal. (Job. iv., 17.) God is a spirit, (John iv., 24,) man is flesh. (Gen. vi., 3; John iii., 6; Psa. lxxviii., 39). God is undying, (Matth. xvi., 16; John vi., 57,) man is a dying creature. So we conclude from the testimony, and contrast, that man by nature is a mortal, dying, corruptible creature; having no immortality, or endless life in him by natural generation; but must be regenerated by the Spirit of God, or he will never attain to immortality, incorruptibility, and an endless life. Therefore, such terms are never, in any instance in the Bible, applied to man this side of the resurrection. Again Paul says, "The wages of sin is death;" not dying, nor pain, nor the pain of dying, nor an endless life in misery; "but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

So immortality, or an endless life, is attained through the second Adam, and not the first. Now, unless we have the Spirit of Christ, we are none of his. Rom. viii., 9. And if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in us, it will make alive our mortal bodies in the resurrection, at the last day. Rom. viii., 11; John vi., 39. Stephen possessed this spirit, (and all the men of God that have ever lived), and he yielded it up to Jesus, who is the medium through which the spirit-life comes; he then fell asleep. Acts vii., 59, 60.

And when Christ, who is the Christian's life, shall appear, then shall Stephen, and all God's people appear with him in glory. Col. iii., 4. Some of them will be asleep in the dust of the earth at that time, and some living on the earth. 1 Thess. iv., 14, 17; Isa. xxvi., 19, 21. It depends on the relation we sustain to the second Adam, whether we will obtain life from the dead in the world to come, or perish as the beasts. Psa. xlix., 14–20; 2 Peter ii., 12. We know there are some preachers that can get no converts without preaching hell fire to scare them into their church. But converts made in such a way are of but little use in a congregation. For if you will convince such that there is no hell to burn them in forever, they will, as a general thing, not even try to be moral. Such preachers and converts are a good thing politically, as long as they are kept in this state of fear. But if you will convince such that "GOD IS LOVE," and the love of God leads to repentance, you will turn such to morality. They are infidels at heart, and the constraint taken away causes such to develop their true character. Popularity sometimes causes men to keep themselves in good standing in a congregation. But just convince such that they are not popular and they will soon develop their true character.

But the pure teaching of the Prophets, Christ, and the Apostles, on the "love of God," the great plan of redemption believed in and obeyed, and that the indwelling of the Spirit, is what will give us life in the world to come. Hear what Jesus says, "For as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up." Now just as the serpent stood to Israel in the wilderness, just so the Son of God stands to the human family. Those who would not look on the serpent of brass, in the wilderness; were they effected in any way? No: it was the same to them as if no serpent had been there. But on the other hand, those that looked were healed. And just so it is with Jesus: whosoever believeth in him shall not perish, (die, lose life, wither and decay, be destroyed, be lost eternally), but have eternal life. "God so LOVED the world, (all were going into death without deliverance), that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God sent not his Son into the world, to condemn the world;" for the world was condemned by the first Adam. But "there is no condemnation to them which are in the anointed Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit." They mind the things of the Spirit; their sins are pardoned; the death penalty is annulled; and although they may sleep in death, they are not separated from God. "For I am persuaded, (says Paul) that neither DEATH, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the LOVE of God." How grand, how sublime and glorious is the LOVE of God to the dying sons and daughters of men. "He that believeth on him (Jesus) is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God." "The WORLD is passing away, and its DESIRES; but he who does the will of GOD abides for the age." 1 John ii., 17, (from Diaglott.)

Every son and daughter of Adam must be regenerated by the Spirit, in order to enter the kingdom of God. Now before we can enter the kingdom, we must be born again. And before an individual can be born of the flesh, they must first be begotten of the flesh; then there is a growth to the birth. Before an individual can be born of the Spirit they must first be begotten of the Spirit. This is made plain in the word of truth. John, that lovely disciple, whose theme was LOVE, says: "Every one who believes that Jesus is the anointed one, has been begotten by God; and every one who loves the begetter, loves the one begotten by him. By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God and practise his commandments . . . Because all that has been begotten by God overcomes the world; and this is that victory which overcomes the world, even our FAITH." 1 John v., 1–4; (from the Diaglott).

The Christian is represented as a child in embryo; and the connection between him and his God, is faith, hope, love, and obedience; these must never be separated, or there will be an abortion, and not a birth. The birth will take place, when the Spirit of God makes alive the dead in the last day. A nation will be born at once. 1 Peter ii., 9; Isa. lxvi., 8. And Paul says, Jesus is "the first-born from the dead; that in all things He might have the preeminence."

As the head (Christ) is born from the dead, so will the "one body" be. He is the first-fruits of them that slept: the antitype of the wave sheaf; and the harvest must be in character and kind, or like the first-fruits. Lev. xxiii., and 1 Cor. xv., 20, 23. John says, "It doth not yet appear what we shall be; but when he (Jesus) shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." All true Christians will get their reward when Jesus comes, and not before. Again John says, "If we love each other, God dwells in us; and his love has been perfected in us. By this we know that we abide in him, and He in us, because he has imparted to us of his Spirit." 1 John iv., 12, 13.

This shows us how God connects himself with the Christian. It is by the Spirit: and he imparts it to none, unless they do his will; and by IT they are raised from the dead. And here is where nearly all the world is blinded. From the Mother of harlots, down to her youngest daughter, all assume that the whole human family possess a nature that is spiritual by natural generation. But no one has any such thing, unless they are regenerated by the Spirit of God. But, says an objecter, if we are in Christ, we are all safe any way; so it is no matter whether these things are so or not. But stop, my friend, can you be in Christ, and at the same time deny his word? Has God sent a messenger to man? Yes. Did the messenger bring a message for man to believe? Oh, yes. Well, are you honoring the messenger when you deny any portion of his message? No. We must not only believe in the messenger, but also in the message he brought; then we will honor him as we ought.

GALESBURG, ILL., Jan., 1869.

"The Second Death."

ELD. L. C. COLLINS has issued an address to the Members of the Minnesota Annual Conference of the M. E. Church, which "requested him to surrender his parchments as a minister of the gospel," because he believed that "the wages of sin is death," and refused to affirm "the endless existence of the wicked." Br. Collins has made a very able defence. The kind, loving, but determined spirit of his Master stands out on every page; and I thank the Conference for turning him out, and can only hope that he will not suffer himself to be tied up in another; and that he will remain Christ's freeman. If he be made of the right material, there is opened to him a wide field of usefulness.

His well written book contains one flaw; only one. We have not watched for his halting, neither would we make him an offender for a word. We were much pleased with his forcible and scriptural reasoning against "endless misery." We therefore propose to take his own reasoning and dropping the words "endless misery" insert in their place, "the second death," and his fallacy is not answered himself.

On page nineteen he says, "through the second Adam all will be raised from the dead. . . . The wicked to meet their doom, 'which is the second death.'" These words are not found in all the book of God until we reach Revelation. Now hear what Br. Collins says of this last message, page 31. "It must be conceded by every one that much of this book (Rev.) is highly dramatic. We find no parallel passages to these in any part of the Bible claimed to be literal. And who can build up or even prop up the doctrine of" [the second death] "by passages taken from this most symbolical book, and themselves stamped as symbolical by being unsustained elsewhere by plain Bible language? Such an one at least may become more sober and sensible by reflecting for a while upon what Isaiah says concerning the" [wicked lords, which "are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; thou hast made all their memory to perish."] Br. Collins quotes at this point Isa. xxxiv., what is said of the judgment on Idumea, of its burning, etc., and says, "Such is symbolic language and shows us how little it will do to build upon it a doctrine at once the most awful and momentous. If such a doctrine were true we have a right to look for it in the plain literal statements of the Bible; but we search in vain for any such language. St. Paul, who wrote more than one-fourth of the New Testament, and distinctly mentions the punishment that awaits the wicked twenty-five times over, fails to use a solitary term that would teach the doctrine of" [the second death.] "And how, I ask, is this to be accounted for, other than on the ground that it is not the doctrine of the Bible? For sure, if it were true, Paul, who shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God, would have uttered it in no mistakable terms." "Death is the penalty of the Divine law." . . . "Adam could well understand that by disobedience he would lose his life—the life God had given him. This the law stated. But the penalty could certainly convey to his mind no idea of" [two deaths.] On page 18, Br. Collins says, "It is right here, where the penalty of the law is is stated and man's eternal doom is involved, that words should mean just what they say! And it is alike contrary to common sense and sound criticism to assume differently."

Page 19. "When God passed sentence upon Adam we may be certain that sentence contained just the meaning or penalty of the law. And what is it? 'Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return.'" [How many times? once or twice?] "This is its meaning—it is death." [One death or two?] On page 20, Br. Collins says, "And who is he that shall put forth his hand and ADD to that penalty—The sinner shall" [suffer two deaths.]

On page 14 we read, "Will it be said, 'This makes God only merciful?' and that 'justice demands a more terrible retribution?' But why are we to suppose that God must do his very worst, and torment the sinner to the very utmost of his infinite power, as though possessed only of eternal hate, in order to be just, and secure the welfare of his universe? Should we not suppose rather that God would lean toward mercy's side, at least so far as to inflict the least possible punishment compatible with justice? And can you clearly see that the death-penalty will fail of meeting the demands of justice, and sustaining the Divine government? . . . Can it be that our benevolent Creator has involved in the gift of life such a terrible danger? . . . Does God force life's cup to our lips, mingled with such an infinite peril? and force it there when he knows to drink is but to fail, and our being becomes a curse which none but his own infinite mind can fathom? Can such a doctrine be true? Is there not a mistake somewhere? May not a more reasonable interpretation of the Bible be given? Are we not willing to break away from our creeds, and for a little time take humanity's side, and God's side and see?"

All we desire is, to have Br. Collins take a little of his own medicine, having sweetened it for him; and we think, by the help of God, it will clean out the dregs of that wine which has made drunk all nations. He has got clear of eternal torments; but has one fang or ulcerated root left; only one. Will the Lord of the harvest inform our brother that two deaths are not in the law, or damnation in the Gospel? That it is rather, "glad tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people."

Anecdote of Hume.

AN amusing anecdote is told of Dr. Robertson, of Scotland, who, with a ready wit, drew an illustration from a misfortune of David Hume, to point an argument. It was as follows:

The celebrated Mr. Hume wrote an essay on the sufficiency of nature; and the no less celebrated Dr. Robertson, on the necessity of Revelation, and the insufficiency of the light of nature. Hume came one evening to visit Robertson, and the evening was spent on the subject. The friends of both were present, and it is said that Robertson reasoned with accustomed clearness and power. Whether Hume was convinced by his reasoning or not, we cannot tell; but, at any rate, he did not acknowledge his conviction. Hume was very much of a gentleman, and, as he rose to depart, bowed politely to those in the room, while, as he retired through the door, Robertson took the light to show him the way.

"O, sir," he continued, "I find the light of nature always sufficient," as he bowed on.

The street door was open, and presently, as he bowed along the entry, he stumbled over something concealed, and pitched down stairs into the street. Robertson ran after him with a candle, and, as he held it over him, whispered, softly and cunningly: "You had better have a little light from above, friend Hume," and raising him up, bade him good night, and returned to his friends.

Bones.

THE enemies of the Bible keep up a great ado over human bones in geological formations supposed to be older than Adam. These stories are all fishy, some of them palpably fallacious, and the best by no means certain. It is very difficult to tell the date of particular geological deposits. "Science" has made glaring mistakes in such matters, and will probably make many more. Until very lately it was supposed that "drift" was much older than Adam. Now we are told that the drift of the Sacramento Valley, in no way distinguishable from hundreds of miles of European drift, is not seven years old. The mastodon, whose company has given pre-Adamite antiquity to some human bones, is now proved to have existed on the earth a long while since Adam. The famous California skeleton, again, might quite conceivably have fallen into the position where it was found. The Lord of Revelation allows infidelity a long string, that there may be some scope for faith. —Christian Union.

The Purged Conscience.

YOU ask me, What keeps you from the purged conscience? I answer, Your own evil heart of unbelief. You go to the High Priest, and you say, "Purge me;" but you don't believe that he will do it. If an infidel had gone up to Aaron, and said, "Purge me with your hyssop," would he have done it? No; that would have been mockery. If an Israelite had gone to him for the same thing, but saying, "Though I ask this, I don't believe that you will do it," would he have done it? No; the honor of his priesthood demanded a refusal. So with God. When we go to him, saying, "Purge me," let us believe that he does it. Then is the conscience purged. We are clean, and we know that we are so.

The Power of a Smile.

IT is related in the life of William Hutton, that a country woman called upon him one day, anxious to speak with him. She told him with an air of secresy, that her husband behaved unkindly to her, and sought other company, often passing his evenings from home, which made her feel very unhappy; and knowing Mr. Hutton to be a wise man, she thought he might be able to tell her how she should manage to cure her husband.

The case was a common one, and he thought he could prescribe for it, "The remedy is a simple one," said he, "but I have never known it to fail. Always treat your husband with a smile."

The woman expressed her thanks, dropped a courtesy, and went away. A few months afterwards she waited on Mr. Hutton with a couple of fine fowls, which she begged him to accept. She told him, while a tear of joy and gratitude glistened in her eye, that she had followed his advice, and her husband was cured. He no longer sought the company of others, but treated her with constant love and kindness.

Chastisement.

"SHALL we receive good at the hand of the Lord," said the patient Job, "and shall we not receive evil?" "It is related that when Æsop was a slave, his master one day gave him a bitter fruit, which Æsop ate without hesitation. When his master expressed surprise, he replied, 'You have always given me good things, and now shall I murmur when you give me one fruit that it is bitter?' whereupon his master made him free."

God gives us many good things, "his mercies are new every morning and fresh every evening;" and yet when he brings any evil upon us, we are restive and prone to murmur. Why should a sinful man complain because he is occasionally chastened? Must the sun always shine out brightly, and there be no cloudy and dark days?

Our Chart.

IF you would know whether the Bible be true in its teachings, you must do by it as you do by a chart. A chart is nothing but a piece of paper, and what good would it do for half a dozen captains to sit down on shore and discuss its merits? How can they know whether its descriptions are correct or not? Let them take it on board and prove it by sailing by it. That is a true chart on trial. If there is a rock where it says "rock;" if there is a shoal where it says "shoal;" if there is a current where it says "current;" if it is safe where it says "safe," then it is a true chart, no matter who made it, or how, or when, or where it was made.

It is the sea that is the best test of a chart, so is the human life the test of the Bible. Take God's word, in which human life is charted down, and measure character and conduct by it; measure your whole self by it; measure God's grace by it, and see if it is not true. Would you know the truth of the Bible? Become a Christian. "If any man will do his will," says Christ, "he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God."—Selected.

NEVER BE HAUGHTY.—A humming-bird met a butterfly, and being pleased with the beauty of its person and glory of its wings, made an offer of perpetual friendship. "I cannot think of it," was the reply, "as you once spurned me, calling me a drawling dolt." "Impossible!" exclaimed the humming-bird, "I always entertain the highest respect for such beautiful creatures as you." "Perhaps you do now," said the other; "but when you insulted me I was a caterpillar. So let me give you a piece of advice; never insult the humble, as they may some day become your superiors."

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the LIFE-GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. BY GEO. STORRS. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEO. STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. POST D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. POST took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in thei order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the true teachings of the BIBLE is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY; by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: OR THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN; by a Presbyterian Clergy man. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTERS TO A CLERGYMAN; or Life only through Christ not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburg, Pa. Price 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are 16 pages octavo. They will be sold at $3 per 100, or, fifty cents per dozen, free of postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price 7 cents.

The following are 12mo Tracts, of 24 pages each

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or the Animal Man and the Spiritual Man. A Sermon by GEO STORRS. Price 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to GUESS them out. Also in ordering, the name of the POST OFFICE, COUNTY, AND STATE must be given, and written plainly; and if a CHANGE is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters confusion and delay are inevitable.

THE IMMORTALITY QUESTION.

DR. FINLEY'S REPLY TO "INQUIRER."

MR. EDITOR: My last article closed what I have to say on the constitution of man as related to us in the Bible. This was all I proposed to investigate in the outset, inasmuch as the Bible is our only reliable authority on this important subject. Having promised, however, to reply to "Inquirer," I shall, with your permission, give a cursory examination of the grounds upon which he bases his belief in the inherent immortality of the soul. His proofs are arranged under the heads of Science, Philosophy, Scripture. Theology and History. "Inquirer" is evidently unacquainted with the present status of the discussion; inasmuch as it is almost universally conceded by the advocates of the common belief, that the argument from reason is idsufficient to sustain the dogma; and that the Bible furnishes the only reliable proof. President Timothy Dwight, D. D., LL. D., late of Yale College, says, in his College sermons, volume first, page 163: "Among Christians, I know of but one (Samuel Drew) who has regarded the immortality of the soul as susceptible of demonstration. Should we believe with this ingenious writer, that the soul, metaphysically considered, is so formed as naturally to be immortal, we must still acknowledge, because it cannot be denied, that its existence may terminate at death, or at any other supposable period. Whatever has been created can certainly be annihilated by the power which created it. The continuence of the soul must, therefore, depend absolutely on the will of God. But that will can never be known by creatures unless He is pleased to disclose it. Without Revelation, therefore, the immortality of the soul must be entirely uncertain."

Arch-deacon Blackburn said "The more any man is convinced of the immortality of the soul from the principles of Aristotle or Des Cartes the less he will concern himself about the Gospel account of futurity." And again he says: "All those fine spun notions of the immortality of the soul, and all the artificial deductions from that principle, teach nothing but the art of blowing scholastic bubbles, which will certainly go peacefully to rest, without the least detriment to either sound learning or true religion."

"Inquirer" says the doctrine of the soul's immortality is "a belief dear to the heart and the hopes of humanity in all ages, and under every condition of life." This of course is no argument, but the simple statement of what he claims to be a fact. I must acknowledge that it is strange, if so universally obtaining, that I have learned it for the first time from himself.

The belief of the soul's immortality never is, ought not and indeed cannot be received as an isolated doctrine, but is always associated, at least amongst Orthodox Christians, with its great central and controlling position, amongst and over all those terrific consequences, which are involved in the orthodox belief of its future and eternal destiny. Orthodoxy teaches that all who do not believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, will be consigned to unspeakable torments, never ending and ever increasing. President Edwards and Dr. Benson have given descriptions, with which we are all familiar, of the torments of the damned; horrible enough to turn our world into a great mad-house, if we could only have a realizing belief of our liability to them. We are now dealing with fact, not arguments, and I will, therefore, give the effect of this horrible doctrine on the mind and feelings of one of the most pious and eloquent of Orthodox Ministers.

SAURIN, in one of his published sermons on the "eternal misery of hell," says, "I sink under the weight of this subject, and I declare when I see my friends, my relatives, the people under my charge—when I think that I, that you, that we are all threatened with these torments; when I see in the lukewarmness of my devotions, in the languor of my love, in the faintness of my resolutions and designs, the least evidence, though it be only probable or presumptive of my future misery, yet I find in the thoughts, a mortal poison which diffuses itself into every period of my life, rendering society tiresome, nourishment insipid, pleasure disgustful and life itself a cruel bitter. I cease to wonder that the fear of hell has made some melancholy and others mad; that it has inclined some to a living martyrdom, by fleeing from all commerce with the rest of mankind, and others to suffer the most violent and terrible torments."

I can safely appeal to the experience of every man and woman, and every child old enough to appreciate its liability to this danger, to say whether their belief that they had immortal souls, was a belief "dear to their hearts and hopes." I am not afraid to appeal to the sober second thought of "Inquirer" himself. I certainly can testify in all sincerity that my own feelings have often been as harrowing under the influence of the belief in the immortality of the soul, as those portrayed by the godly Saurin. The recorded experience, of Albert Barnes, John Foster, Prof. Stuart and hosts of others amongst the best men, and the best ministers in the various churches, is equally as sad and as mournful. In view of the fact that even in christian lands, judging from their statistics, but a small proportion of the whole population, in the largest exercise of christian charity, give evidence that they are safe from this awful doom, some of them have declared that instead of being an occasion of rejoicing, the birth of a child should be a source of grief and lamentation. Ministers tell us they preach it not because it is "dear to their hearts and souls" but because it is necessary to alarm the impenitent so as to lead them to escape from it, by drawing them to Christ. One of them said to me "if your doctrine is true you take away all my thunder; what shall I preach?"

I said "if he would preach the love of Christ, and the goodness of God, which he tells us is what leads to repentance, he would find it a better kind of thunder."

"Well, but you know Paul tells us 'knowing the terror of the Lord we persuade men.'"

I replied that Paul never said any such thing, that even Doctor Archibald Alexander, who was the very corypheus of orthodox theologians, having been at the head of the Princeton Seminary for about forty years, said that Phobos, translated terror, meant fear, which any Greek scholar knows it means, and in that passage was the fear of the Lord, equivalent to true religion, and the context shows that that is its proper meaning there.

The first argument is science—1st Phyisolcgy brings into the region of physical demonstration the existence and immortality of the soul. "Inquirer" assumes throughout his article that there is an immaterial soul, meaning by soul a distinct spiritual entity and that intellectual phenomena is owing to the operation of this soul. Physiolgy, on the contrary, teaches that it is the function of the brain to develop intellect; that mentalization is in every instance, whether in man or the lower animals, dependent upon this organ. When the brain is diseased mental operations are either suspended or deranged. If they are dependent upon the soul, why is it that a slight blow on the head suspends them for a time? Orthodoxy tells us the soul is still there, and also that the power of the soul is independent of the body. Dying beds of Fisk, Pope and Halyburton have furnished a cloud of witnesses to the superiority of the immortal part. Physiology teaches, on the contrary, that in all such cases, whilst other parts of the body are deranged in their functions, the brain continues healthy, and therefore its intellectual operations are not disturbed. If the soul is independent of the body, we ought to see it always unaffected by sickness; but on the contrary such cases as those of Fisk and others are exceptions to a general rule, as all physicians can testify. If mental action is proof of an immortal soul, then all animals have immortal souls, for we have shown that all animals that have brains do manifest them in various degrees.

Prof. Lawrence has shown in his admirable lectures on Physiology, and comparative anatomy, that there is a certain form and development of brain which is essential to the highest exercise of mind. This constitutes the standard by which to estimate the highest powers of mentalization, and that all men and animals possess them in a higher or lower degree as they approximate to or depart from this standard. Ancient artists were well acquainted with these facts, and their most exalted conceptions of the good and great men of their times, were governed by this standard. What we find under the 4th section of the argument from science, led me to suppose Inquirer might be a Spiritist. "Visions and apparitions have been received as intimations of the immortality of the soul." I confess that this is an argument beyond my ability to appreciate. It might by Spiritists be considered as going to demonstrate spiritual existences, but how it shows their immortality I can't see. I will mention one occurence of the kind, which is well authenticated, and which will go to show that all such cases are dependent upon some peculiar state of the the brain. The celebrated surgeon, John Hunter, sitting in his study alone, engaged in some one of his profound scientific investigations, was so absorbed in his pursuits, that he took no note of time. It was nearly morning when happening to look up, he was surprised at seeing a gentleman sitting at the opposite side of the table. After the first surprise, he put his finger on his pulse and found it bounding away at a tremendous rate. Keeping his eyes on the figure before him, he drew off his coat, tied up his arm, and reaching a large bowl on the table, he opened a vein. As the blood flowed his pulse became more and more moderate, and in a short time the gentleman vanished from sight. I believe this case will account for all the "visions and apparitions," referred to by Inquirer. The 5th section—the law of development, is equally applicable in all animals and proves their immortality as fully as man's.

6th "We have no experience or knowledge of annihilation." But our friend is kind enough to admit that God can annihilate what he created. The quotation from Dr. Dwight is a sufficient reply to this section.

7. "Other analogies of nature—the chrysalis and butterfly," etc. This section cannot by any possibility prove immortality. The analogies of nature are only resorted to, to illustrate the doctrine of a resurrection; there can be no resurrection of the soul, unless the soul is dead, which its immortal nature would render impossible.

Argument from Philosophy—1st section. "Intuitions are self evident, undeniable truths." We are agreed on this definition, as for example: a part is less than the whole of which it is a part. This we know by intuition; it needs no proof. We know by intuitions that "self is a being, a substance." Agreed again. But when Inquirer adds "a spiritual substance," we deny it in toto. If we know this by intuition, why has Inquirer undertaken to prove it. Intuitions need no proof, they are self-evident. The truth is that the knowledge of what we are in our complex nature, does not belong to the domain of intuitions, or reason or common sense; but of revelation. What does revelation say? Why just nothing at all about any spiritual nature. On the contrary revelation tells us in the most express terms, that we are "formed of the dust of the ground." And Dr. Dwight and every body else except Samuel Drew and Inquirer, agree with us that revelation is our only dependence for any reliable knowledge of our constitution. We have been laying before our readers for five or six weeks past our most careful and honest researches into the book of revelation, and we cannot find any thing about our spiritual nature, until in regeneration we get it by the special work of the Holy Spirit. A., B. and C., are all learned by revelation or tradition, not by intuition; and a large part of mankind do not know and do not believe in their truth, as we will show presently.

2d section "The soul if anything (well put in) is a simple substance, entire, uncompounded, without parts, not dissolvable or divisible." Where in heaven above, or the earth beneath, or the waters under the earth, did Inquirer learn all this; certainly not by intuition nor from the Word of God. It must have been from "those appositions of science, falsely so called," against which Paul cautions Timothy, "which," he says, "some professing have erred from the faith." Inquirer has just now spoken of the soul as "immaterial;" now "if anything, it is a simple substance." It strikes me that his intuition is somewhat confused. Intuition tells us "his soul exists, we have no evidence that it ceases to exist at death." On the contrary intuition tells us man exists, and the Bible and observation tell us, man ceases to exist as man at death.

3d section. "The soul can conceive of the Infinite, the Absolute, the Universal and the Everlasting, and therefore partakes of their nature." This is the queerest argument I have met with, and I confess I don't know how to reply to it. We were told just now, by Inquirer, that the soul was "uncompounded," but if it partakes of the nature of everything it can conceive of, it must be the most awfully compounded, complex and heterogeneous thing in the universe. It is a new idea to me, too, that any created being was infinite. I always supposed that God was the only being who possessed this attribute. I would be glad to learn from Inquirer how the soul is possessed of the absolute and the universal? At present they seem to me, in this connection, to be ponderous words, without signifying anything.

4th section. "The inherent longing for immortality, a feeling which seems to guarantee the truth of the expectation cherished; the instinctive shrinking from annihilation." If we know by intuition that we are immortal, why should we long for it? We do not long for anything else which we have, and know we have in possession. But God has implanted this feeling, which not only seems, but does actually guarantee the truth of the expectation cherished; and we have this longing in order that we may be induced to seek "by patient continuance in well-doing, for glory and honor, and immortality, having His assurance that if we do thus seek, He will bestow upon us eternal life or immortality. Eternal life is "the gift of God through Jesus Christ." We are urged to "lay hold on eternal life." Christ says: "I give unto my sheep eternal life," and complains of the Jews that they would not come unto Him that they might have life. There are a great many similar passages, showing as plainly as words can show anything, that eternal life or immortality is not a natural attribute or possession of man. In fact a large part of the teachings of our Saviour and His Apostles are senseless and unmeaning, if immortality is an inherent part of our nature. To say that eternal life means eternal happiness is a wicked adding to the word of God. If God meant happiness he could have said so, as easily as those can, who claim to speak for Him. Besides it is in very many instances given as the antithesis of death. "The wages of sin is death." "The gift of God is eternal life."

LITERAL FULFILMENT OF PROPHECY.

WE will now examine Ezekiel xxxvii., 15–28: "The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying, Moreover, thou son of man, take thee one stick, and write upon it, For Judah, and for the children of Israel, his companions: then take another stick, and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions: and join them one to another into one stick; and they shall become one in thine hand. And when the children of thy people shall speak unto thee, saying, Wilt thou not show us what thou meanest by these? Say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel, his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand. And the sticks whereon thou writest shall be in thine hand before their eyes. And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land; and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all; and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all; neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions: but I will save them out of all their dwelling-places, wherein they have sinned, and will cleanse them: so shall they be my people, and I will be their God. And David my servant shall be king over them; and they all shall have one shepherd; they shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes, and do them. And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they and their children, and their children's children forever, and my servant David shall be their prince forever. Moreover, I will make a covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them: and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them forevermore. My tabernacle also shall be with them, yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people. And the people shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them forevermore." In this prophecy there are several particulars presented to our attention.

1. The people. 2. The land, called "their own land." 3. The people were divided into "two nations." 4. They went forth "among the heathen." 5. They shall be gathered. 6. They are to be brought into "the land wherein their fathers have dwelt." 7. They are to be united in "one nation;" and this under "one king." 8. That one king is to be "David." 9. They are to "multiply." 10. There shall be "children" among them. 11. They are to be removed from that land no more.

Whatever principle is adopted in explaining one particular, let it be applied to all; if it makes harmony it must be true. It appears to us there are but three interpretations given to this prophecy that are worthy of notice. The first is that which would make it to have its accomplishment in the literal posterity of Jacob, in their captivity and return from Babylon. But it will be found that there are several particulars that cannot be applied to that interpretation. 1. Those who returned from Babylon had never been divided into two nations. It was only the nation called Judah that was carried away out of their own land in that captivity, and that nation only returned. The ten tribes, or nation of Israel, were carried away into Assyria long before Judah went into Babylon, and never returned to this day, as we have previously shown. In this particular, then, there is an entire and essential failure of the fulfilment of the prophecy. 2. Those who returned from Babylon never had either David or a king of David's line over them; in fact, they had no king of Jacob's posterity; Here, then, is a second important failure of a fulfilment. 3. They were again removed out of that land, and continue in their dispersion unto this day. Three failures, as essential as these, are fully sufficient to show that the prophecy was not fulfilled in the captivity and return from Babylon.

The second application of this prophecy is to the spiritual seed of Abraham, and their final gathering into the new earth. There are shades of difference among those who hold this view—some maintaining that it is all the spiritual seed, and others that it is only the spiritual seed who are of the literal posterity of Jacob. We will notice the former opinion first; that is—That it is all the spiritual seed of Abraham who are to be brought into the new earth. Here it will be found are several particulars that cannot apply to such an interpretation. 1. The spiritual seed are made "one nation" before they are brought into the new earth. The prophecy says, "I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel." Besides—The spiritual seed have never been "two nations;" of course no occasion for making them one. 2. This prophecy was delivered at a time when the two nations of Judah and Israel were "gone" forth out of the land of Israel; and it says, "Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone," etc. Could such language, in truth, be understood to be applicable to all Christians? We think not. All Christians have not been scattered, or "gone among the heathen." 3. They are to be brought into "the land wherein their fathers have dwelt." All Christians, when gathered into the new earth, could not say—"This is the land wherein our fathers have dwelt; for, surely their fathers never dwelt there; and besides, those fathers, not excepting Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, will be in the new earth: could they say—"This is the land wherein our fathers have dwelt?" It is evidently the posterity of these fathers, and not the fathers themselves, that are the subjects of this prophecy. 4. Again: After they are brought into that land it is said—"I will multiply them," v. 26. Will the spiritual seed multiply in the earth? We leave that for those to answer who hold the theory of which we are speaking.

Others, to avoid the difficulties that press upon them, by making this prophecy apply to all Christians, restrict it "to the remnant of the Jews 'according to the election of grace,' gathered from all ages and climes, into their own land at the resurrection." In reply to this position it may be asked—When were "the remnant of the Jews according to the election of grace" ever divided into two nations? Again—Will their being brought into the new earth be the same as being brought into the land wherein their fathers have dwelt? If so—When did their fathers dwell in the new earth? Once more—Will the "remnant of Jews, according to the election of grace," after their "resurrection," "multiply?" These theorists say—"Let it be dististinctly understood, that we believe the literal Jews, according to the flesh, will go back—that, 'all the house of Israel, even all of it,' are to go there." They mean, as they tell us, to be understood that this "all the house of Israel, even all of it," is the "elect remnant" gathered into their own land at the resurrection." The very text from which they quote the expression—"All the house of Israel, even all of it," declares, "the wastes shall be builded." Will there have been "wastes" on the new earth? The next verse says—"I will multiply upon you [the mountains of Israel] man and beast: and they shall increase and bring fruit." We ask again: Will the "elect remnant—all the house of Israel, even all of it," after the resurrection, multiply and increase, both man and beast? Enough has been said on this topic to show that such an interpretation cannot harmonize the prophecy, and therefore cannot be true.

FAITH.

A NOT unimportant peculiarity in modern theology is to admit the true character of certain scripture terms, propositions, and even accounts, and at the same time treat them as if they were something entirely different. While a portion of scripture, for instance, is, with eminent propriety, termed a parable, that is, an allegorical representation of something real, the thing represented being, of necessity, something different from that which represents it; from almost every pulpit controlled by orthodoxy, so called, goes the affirmation that it is simple history as well. Few theologians, none, in fact, professing to be orthodox, would dare to take Paul's proposition, "if the dead rise not, let us eat and drink; for to-morrow we die" (we punctuate the quotation thus on the authority of Dr. Adam Clark), and append a note flatly denying its truth; and yet they nearly all, as surely as language has a meaning, fling into Paul's face the epithet of "fool," urging that whether the dead rise or not, Paul would be and is being immeasurably advantaged. Faith itself is not permitted to escape the ravages of this dangerous practice. Very many of the vast multitude of religionists who hold that it is an action of mind, treat it as a principle, and a special gift of God.

Now all this is manifestly absurd, but they who consider the ways of popular theology so soon become accustomed to a contemplation of absurdities that little surprise is experienced. In no way is the assumption that faith is at once an action of mind and a gift of God more strikingly presented than in the present-day system of converting, or attempting to convert sinners. Faith, in theology, is belief of what God has revealed; and belief is assent of the mind. In practising the present theory of conversion, embracing the "anxious-seat" and kindred processes, sinners are told to pray, and call upon God to give them faith; but belief is just what God requires them to exercise. The apostle pertinently inquires, "how shall they call on him in whom they have not believed." When night after night has been spent by sinners upon the anxious-seat looking and waiting for some marvellous demonstration of spiritual power, yet waiting in vain, they are perplexingly told that they are expecting too much, and that they must believe. They are told that if they die in their sins, God will consign them to bitter, unmitigated, eternal torments; and in the next breath they are assured that God in infinite love gave his only begotten Son to suffer in their stead; a few hours of suffering on his part being quite sufficient to atone for the sins of a whole race, every member of which deserves endless suffering. If it is asked upon what principle of justice an eternity of woe may be imposed when it has been demonstrated that so much less can suffice to satisfy the demands of violated law, it is deemed a competent reply to say that Christ suffered in his divine nature, and hence a comparatively small amount of suffering on his part is equal to an eternity of torments to the human nature. Unfortunately, however, for this part of their theory, they hold that souls are breathed directly from God himself. If this be so, then they are a part of himself, and must, when given, be divine; and if once divine they can never cease to be so; consequently, it being the soul which thinks and feels, sinners must also suffer in their divine nature.

May this position be said to be ridiculous? Truly, but it is a child of popular theology. No system or theory, it is said, is wholly without merit; and the distinguishing feature of this in that direction is, that the sinner is favored at first glance with as vivid a conception of the subject as his experienced would-be teachers enjoy, and that is just none at all.

Saving faith is generally, and, we think, rightly regarded as that firm belief of God's testimony and of the truth of the gospel, which influences the will and leads to a reliance on Christ for salvation. Paul said, "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God;" and he asks, "how shall they hear without a preacher?" Proclaiming the truth is a means instituted of God for enlightening ignorant, dying men, and turning them to Christ. The result of hearing the word, when men will to believe, is faith in it; living, justifying faith in Christ. Not that people are justified by faith alone, for "faith without works is dead;" and "ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only." James ii., 24.

But suppose men preach human inventions instead of gospel truth: teach for doctrine the commandments' of men. Will they who believe it exercise faith in the testimony of God? Most assuredly not. There is only "one faith." Just so far as men believe the word of God they have that faith; no more, no less. Oh, say a multitude of professed Christians, "we know but little of what is taught in the word of God, but our faith reaches everything that is in it." Poor souls! They think they talk sensibly. How can they believe that of which they have not heard?

Belief in what people think is taught, or may be taught in the word of God does not does not constitute gospel faith, but what is taught and what they know and feel the power of. Belief of error, however conscientiously and religiously it may be held, can never be exalted to a level with faith in divine truth. Whatever truth people hold, holding it in righteousness, they are benefited by; but the error they hold injures them by crippling the sanctifying operation of what truth they have received, and by prejudicing the mind against the reception of more truth. Growth in grace, therefore, must of necessity be retarded by the influence of error. We know men have what they term "speculative faith," and believe themselves profited by it. A few days since, we heard a minister publicly declare that "people have a right to their speculative faith." That, in one sense, is true; but some one has said, and we think properly, that speculative faith is only another name for speculative nonsense. Paul defines faith as "the substance" (or, as the marginal reading is, the confidence) "of things hoped, the evidence (or conviction) of things not seen." Heb. xi., 1.

If a person simply believes a certain thing may transpire, their is no confidence in his belief; no real conviction of his mind. He cannot even be said to expect it, for expectation of an occurrence is based on a conviction that it will happen. It cannot, therefore, be called faith in any sense. Men might about as well claim a "speculative" love to God, as a "speculative faith" in what he has declared he will do. Real, living faith, and that is the only gospel faith, possesses a substance, a confidence, which renders the prefixing of the term "speculative" an absurdity.

We do not pretend to say how much truth a man must hold in order to justification, nor how little he may hold and yet be saved, for we recognize no man's claim to a right to judge another in such a matter. Obedience to truth, and to the enlightening influences of the Spirit, enables Christians to progress from faith to faith. Paul declared to the Romans, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth . . . For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith." Here Paul gives it to us in a few words, right from his own experience. Christians must not be ashamed of the gospel of Christ. When they are led to see any truth that is at variance with the adopted articles of their church, or their preconceived opinions, and refuse to declare it because it is not in accordance with their creed, or previous notions, or because they judge that doing so might impair their influence for good, or for any other reason, we may know they are ashamed of the gospel of Christ. They are guilty of putting their "candle under a bushel." They suppress the working of the "Spirit of truth," and a darkened mind becomes inevitable. So though a man possess a small amount of the light of truth and be faithful with that little, and use the means that God has given to obtain more, it is well with him. But though he have much and fail to let it shine, thus hiding it from others, it cannot be otherwise than ill with him, for he holds it in unrighteousness, and is ashamed of Christ, being ashamed of his gospel. To be ashamed of any gospel truth is strong evidence that one's faith is altogether very weak.

Believers in eternal life for the righteous only, should, of all Christians, pray and strive for advance from faith to faith. We may and should be constantly receiving fresh light. If we have once examined a question with the aid of what light we then possess, and deemed it inconsistent with truth, let us not be unwilling to examine it again with the assistance of our own and other's additional light; for, peradventure, what then seemed incompatible with truth may now be seen to stand in beautiful and glorious harmony with it. Let us not to any extent fall into the error of present-day religionists, who are content with what little faith can be hung upon creeds, or articles framed scores and even hundreds of years ago, when the protestant church had only just began to put off the vesture of the "Mother of Harlots and abominations of the earth." Faith should be largely exercised, and there is only one faith for us to exercise, viz., faith in the word of God. The duty of all who have much light is in meekness, love, and godly fear, to strengthen the faith of them who have less faith. May we all be found so doing one to another and to all our fellow-men.

"NAPOLEON AND EUROPE."

[WE give the following extract from the conclusion of an article which appeared in the "Prophetic Times." We do not vouch for its accuracy, but record it for future use. We have believed and still think Napoleon III. will rise or fall soon, very soon.]

But what has he [Napoleon] been doing amidst this cloud of silence? Like the cloud-compelling Jupiter, he has been gathering up his thunder-bolts. Woe be to those against whom they shall be launched! He has raised his army to 1,300,000. He has exercised his troops in all the evolutions of war. He has trained them to night marches and night attacks. He has hardened their frames by exposure to all weathers—by encampment in the open fields at all seasons—by incessant yet judicious exercise. He has taught them to be familiar with darkness; to take in the twilight like the lions of the desert; to move with order and rapidity amidst the gloom and confusion of midnight. For that most perfect and most powerful of machines—a Napoleonic army—he has provided an equally perfect and powerful arm. He has completed his new rifles, leaving a million in reserve. He has completed his new artillery, and, still more wonderful, he has kept its secret.

Another engine of destruction has been produced under the immediate directions of the Emperor. It is called the "Mitrailleuse." By means of this engine, a single soldier can discharge fifty musket-balls per minute, each ball being effective at one thousand seven hundred yards—about an English mile. If we combine the "Mitrailleuse" with the new guns, and the Chassepot rifles, we shall find that silence is not imbecility, and that the Emperor Napoleon has not been silent in vain. He has expended his strength, not in empty words, but in pregnant deeds. He has been silent that he might the more secretly prepare, and, above all, that he might preserve the fatal secret of his engines of war.

He has succeeded; and we believe the day to be at hand when the ridiculed and superannuated monarch will burst upon Europe, with one all-withering blaze of power. The dull, dark thunder-cloud will, in one instant, quiver with insufferable light. We make no pretensions to infallibility, but we believe the thunder-storm to be at hand.

C. N. BUZZELL, Ridgeway, Pa., sends $2, and writes: This is all I can do now; but hope, by the grace of God, to be able to do more in future, than I have in time past, to help sustain this messenger of peace. Since the age of thirteen (I am now thirty three) I have been a slave to tobacco, which has cost me about $12 per year, and I felt hardly able to take a paper, I was so poor. I have resolved of late, God's grace assisting me, that I will never use it again; and the money I would have spent for poison, shall be spent in the glorious message of no life-future, except through Christ. Pray for me, that I may have strength to endure.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 24, 1869.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"THE ADVANCE."

THIS excellent Congregational paper, published at Chicago, Ill., comes to us enlarged and is, evidently on the advance. We are glad to find it increasing in prosperity. We were born and brought up a Congregationalist; there we had our first training in theology; yet, at the age of twenty-eight, we united with the Methodist E. Church; and though for the last thirty years differing from both on some points of doctrine, we still agree with both in the necessity of experimental religion and of practical "holiness;" without which no man shall see the Lord."

We occasionally criticise some of their doctrinal points, especially, "inherent immortality" and its natural appendages, possibly sometimes with too great severity; but it is from no want of love to the many truly pious persons found in both of those denominations. We doubt not their honest intentions in still adhering to what we regard as most mischievous errors; and if the age last many years, we believe their views on the immortality question will be greatly modified, if not wholly abandoned. They will find the need of this to keep alive vital piety and to prevent their churches from sinking into mere formalism, or launching into what is called "Liberal Christianity;" which really means, indifference to all heart religion. May the Lord guide us all into the way of Life in Jesus Christ our Lord.

A VISIT TO A PRISON.

THE Editor of The Advance recently gave some account of a visit to the State Prison in Michigan, which we read with much interest. Among other reflections and statements we find the following, which we have divided into three paragraphs for the convenience of reference:

1. We walked around the spacious prison; we inspected the cells, visited the various workshops, saw the men march, in long files and with lockstep, to the dining room, and surveyed the whole six hundred as they partook of their meal. A regiment of criminals! A pitiable sight, surely. Here and there was a head sprinkled with gray, but the exception was rare, and the great mass was composed of young men from twenty five to thirty-five years of age. It made our heart ache to see them thus degraded and doomed in the flower of life; some condemned to spend many years within those gloomy walls, and others soon to go forth with the moral brand of a convict upon them.

2. The young are those who are in danger. Their passions are strong, their caution is small, their experience is almost nothing, their hopes are great, their courage is always bordering on recklessness. The present seems everything to them, and the future can take care of itself. And so the tempter has an advantage, and uses it; for sin's attractions are precisely those which fire the passions, flatter hope, appeal to present gratification, represent restraint as tyranny, and laugh at self-denial as folly. And here were five hundred victims of this youthful infatuation!

3. Is there no need of such a book in the Bible as the Proverbs of Solomon, addressed specifically to young men? No need of such caution as, "Flee, also, youthful lusts;" "Young men, likewise, exhort to be sober-minded?" No need of such a portrait as, "I beheld among the simple ones, I discerned among the youths, a young man void of understanding?" No need of such an injunction as, "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth?" No need of such a prayer as, "Remember not the sins of my youth?" No need of such a parable as the prodigal son? Alas, the Bible, in its appeals to the young, only meets the sad facts of human life in every generation. The shipwrecks are generally made in youth, when, with full sails set to the gale of passion, men drive directly upon the rocks.

The remarks of The Advance in the first paragraph show a melancholy scene, enough to make any heart, not callous to all love for our race, "ache to see." We can sympathize with our brother in his sadness at what he there beheld; for we once acted as Chaplain, for a year, in the State Prison of New Hampshire, and there we learned the heart of prisoners; for we not only preached to them each Sabbath day, but spent evening after evening in going from cell to cell (their confinement at night was in solitary cells), and conversing with them through the grates thereof. We surely learned to pity them, and endeavored to instruct them in the way to life eternal; but we found it necessary to convince them we were their friend. We became convinced there were multitudes, who pass for gentlemen, and perhaps roll in wealth, who are far more deserving of State Prison than many whose fortune has led them to such disgrace. A man for stealing a few dollars finds his way to prison. Another by the practice of misrepresentation, in some form, deceives his neighbor and strips him of hundreds or thousands of dollars, and passes for a smart financier, a most respectable gentleman; and his smiles are courted, and he is bowed down to as if he were a god and not a vile man. He is ready to put the petty thief or robber in prison; but himself, the wholesale thief and robber, comes to honor, and the multitudes cry out, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." Were the real thieves and robbers who live and thrive, yea, grow rich and come to great honor, all put where their crimes against their fellow-men, and against widows and orphans, deserve, we would probably see more "heads sprinkled with gray in" our State Prisons than our editorial Br. saw in Michigan. Yet, the sight he did see was sad enough. We pass, however, so his second paragraph.

This opens up the true source of temptation; and we wonder our Br. Editor does not see that "the tempter" is fully described in his presentation of the case of young men. Who would think of adding a theological devil to all these "youthful infatuations?" Surely here are allurements and enticements enough for the young without a spirit-devil to help on the current of vice. Let all the young be taught early that these flattering thoughts which "appeal to present gratification," are the real devils which they need to guard against and resist, if they would escape remorse, ruin and death; thus they would soon learn that "the tempter" was not the unknown and unseen spirit-devil of theology, but something real, visible, tangible; an enemy so open that they can understand what the Bible means when it says, "Resist the devil and he will flee from you:" they need no longer "fight as one that beateth the air:" their enemy or tempter is no longer in ambush or concealed behind an impenetrable battery. How many are led on to ruin by supposing their grand enemy is some hidden, invisible spirit-devil, whom they can neither see nor know, while the real enemies to be overcome are their own natural propensities to seek excessive indulgences and enjoyments in the things which are but for a moment, and soon to vanish away. Here are to be found, in an open field, the devils or evils to be guarded against, and which youth especially ought to be taught to overcome, if they would inherit eternal life. Against these devils let all Christian men be on their guard, and instruct the young, especially, where their danger lies, and endeavor to fortify their minds against allowing "their passions," however harmless in themselves, to override their judgment and discretion, and thus take the channel of unrestrained license in gratification. If me suffer our passions or desires to take their own course, without being restrained or regulated by the rule our CREATOR has given us, and prefer the will of the flesh to the will of God, we take "the broad road to destruction;" and if we do not land in a State Prison, we will land in the prison of "Death" (the wages of sin), from which we will never, no never be delivered.

The third paragraph of the foregoing extract is excellent, and we commend the inquiries to the candid consideration of all young men. The Bible is truly "the sword of the Spirit." Love it as a power above all other power (save the Spirit itself) to enable you to overcome in this warfare; but forget not, by earnest prayer, to seek God's help to understand and obey that blessed Book.

REASONING RUN WILD.

IN a late number of The Advance we find an article "By Rev. E. W. Cook," headed "The Stumbling Block," which commences thus,

"Endless Punishment is an absurdity," say flippant declaimers against the clear statements of the Bible: "endless suffering in a benevolent administration is absurd and impossible." And such bald assertions have been echoed and re-echoed until good men, who have no wish to disbelieve the Bible, have been disturbed by them and shaken in their belief.

We are not of the number who call in question the fact of endless punishment: we fully believe it to be the clear teaching of the Bible. The only question to settle between us and other believers in endless punishment is, what is the nature of it? We maintain "the wages of sin is death," as Paul affirms, Rom. vi., 23; and that death is never revoked, and is therefore eternal to all who reject God's method of recovery. Our friend in The Advance evidently holds the punishment to be "endless suffering;" which implies "The soul that sinneth, it [shall never] die." Ezk. xviii., 4-20. Which has all the marks of the strange assertion, "Thou shalt not surely die." Gen. iii., 6; both of which emendations of God's testimony are suspicious, to say the least; and we might add they are "bald assertions," which "have been echoed and re-echoed until good men" are led to believe men rather than God, and affirm, "the soul is immortal and cannot die," when such an utterance is not to be found in the Bible. No wonder good men, who have independence enough to think for themselves, "are shaken in their belief" of eternal punishment being the same as "endless suffering." "But," asks this writer in The Advance, "why so confidently affirm the adsurdity of this doctrine" of "endless suffering?" He answers,

Because they are contemplating merely this world, and the few beings who people it, and God's government as a limited and inferior matter, involving mere finite interests; and especially because their conception of God herself—the great Law-giver and Moral Governor of the universe, and the responsible guardian of its welfare, is only that of a fond and doting parent, destitute of firmness, compounded of weakness and pusillanimity, and hesitating and refusing to execute penalty even though the general good demands it. And they foster this conception in spite of human woes, in spite of the earthquake and the pestilence, and fire and storms and whirlwinds and death, and the clear and corresponding declaration of the Bible, that God is a "consuming fire," and "will not at all acquit the wicked."

We pass the first sentence of this paragraph (but will take it up soon) to remark that the author of the middle member of the paragraph has judged without due regard to accuracy, even as to the views of Universalists, against whom he seems to be aiming his engine of war. We do not believe that any intelligent Universalist holds such views of God's government as he attributes to them. What would he think, if a Universalist was to meet him with a contrary representation, and tell the "Rev. E. W. Cook" that the reason why he maintains the doctrine of "endless suffering" is "because his conceptions of God himself is only that of a revengful tyrant, who cares nothing for the misery of his subjects if he can only gratify his own will; and is constantly burning with rage against them if they ever overstep his laws, which they never had any voice in making?" Would Mr. Cook think he was fairly represented? Yet wherein does this representation differ from his, only that it is the contra representation, both of which are probably erroneous.

Mr. Cook says of those whom he thus misrepresents, "They foster this conception in spite of human woes, in spite of the earthquake," etc., and "the clear and corresponding declaration of the Bible, that God is a 'consuming fire,'" etc. Does our Rev. Br. see no difference in the government of this present state of probation, or trial—where we know all God's dealings with the children of men are designed to benefit those involved in these woes, or to be a warning to others whom we know to exist; or else to terminate the career of incorrigible sinners—and such a state as that of "endless suffering," with no known design of any such results? He, himself, in the conclusion of the above paragraph quotes the text which says, "Our God is a consuming fire." Does that mean a preserving fire? Doubtless it does with "reasoning run wild;" but not with sober reason, such as God has given us.

But our Rev. Br. guesses (for it is nothing more than that) there are other worlds to be governed besides this; for the benefit of which, the sinners of this world are to experience "endless sufferings," or perpetual torture! But of such worlds and such beings, to be benefited, he has to confess "the Bible mentions no others" than those of this world. Hence he has to resort to fancy, and goes on to "suppose" and "suppose" with marvellous wisdom as follows:

But, now, suppose this view of the great universe, which these flippant declaimers have, is utterly false and inadequate; suppose the relation of God as Moral Governor to be the paramount relation, and who shall say that it is not? suppose him now to be laying the foundations of a mighty and eternal increase of mind, and that the angels, fallen and unfallen and ourselves, are the only moral beings yet created, for the Bible mentions no others; and that the universe is to go on increasing in glory and grandeur through eternity, for no reason appears why God, who has begun to create, should ever cease in his work; suppose, also, that the same occasions of sin which led the angels and Adam to transgress, are inseparable from free moral agency, and that the love of conscious freedom will be ever tempting newly created mind in all ages to break away from the necessary restraints of law and government; suppose that in the control and management of free agents compulsion has no place, and force is inconsistent, and appeals to fear; interest and affection can alone be used either to lead or bind them to obedience to God, and that nothing less than the constant pressure of these will be adequate to steady the moral universe in its onward and ceaseless expansion; so that to suspend the execution of penalty upon the first transgressors, would render certain the rebellion of the very next race of moral beings created, rendering the farther extension of the universe impossible, and thus sacrificing to the wickedness of the few a whole eternity of every expanding holiness and blessedness.

What does all this special pleading amount to? One thing is clear; it shows that its advocates have no argument from the Bible, or from any revelation of God's plan of government, to prove either the necessity or the fact of "endless suffering" for any of the race of Adam; and they must resort to imaginary reasons to sustain their horrible theory. Such a course we denominate, "Reasoning run wild," because it professes to reason when it is all fancy.

Furthermore, it "supposes" that the Creator did not dare proceed in the work of creating other moral intelligences until He had first secured, by inferior management, a sufficient number of "eternal sufferers" to make sure the stability of "unfallen angels" and His "new created" beings in some other world or part of His creation! Thus the work of governing minds He himself had produced could not be carried on among His creatures without the necessity of eternal sin and eternal torture! Without this awful state of things "the further extension of the universe" would be "impossible!" Have we not well characterized such statements, or guess-work, "Reasoning run wild?" It is an attempt to bolster up a falling theology, unfounded in the Bible and the result of the barbarism of the dark ages of heathenism and papal superstitions; a barbarism alike opposed to God and all that sense of justice which He has implanted in every human breast, and to which Jesus himself appealed when He said to the Pharisees, "Yea, why even of yourselves judge ye not what is right?" Luke xii., 57. A principle which Abraham acted on when he said to God, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" Gen. xviii., 25.

The LORD does nothing, and threatens nothing that shocks sound reason; and He calls on men, saying, "Come now let us reason together," etc., Isa. i., 18, which shows that He does not leave men to such fanciful conjectures as the Rev. Mr. Cook and his fellow theologians resort to for the support of their "endless suffering" theory. That theory carries on the face of it an insult to reason, to God's moral government, and to His character, which no theological fancies can ever wipe out. Mr. Cook has travelled into the same region of "conjectures" that Rev. Dr. Post did some years since; whose work we reviewed; and a copy of which we would send him if we knew where to direct it, and which we would be glad to send to any other minister who entertains the Rev. Mr. Cook's views on the subject.

We fully agree with one sentiment contained in the article under consideration. It is this, that "human thought"

Finds its appropriate position only in sitting at the feet of revelation and saying with the humble Psalmist, "I will hear what God the Lord will speak;" and when the declarations of the Divine World are understood, accepting them without question.

Amen, to this suggestion; and glad should we be to find this position adhered to; then we should have no more vain "conjectures," nor talk about "immortal souls," or "eternal sufferings." Such announcements are all of human invention, and not to be found in the Bible.

Rev. E. W. Cook concludes his article with the following paragraph:

The single objection to the foregoing outline, that the angels of heaven have not sinned, and therefore that they experience no difficulty in submitting to God, is met by the strong probability that they, in connection with all holy minds in all ages, will owe their final confirmation in holiness to the combined influence of Heaven, Hell and Calvary overcoming that difficulty, of which the latter will be the grand and crowning motive.

That is a heavy reproach on "the angels of heaven" and "all holy minds in all ages," for they have not love enough to God to "submit to" Him and to become "confirmed in holiness" if it were not for the "influence of hell," or the "eternal sufferings" of sinners there. "Heaven and Calvary" could not do it alone! So, if the Creator had not planned "eternal sufferings" for the largest part of Adam's race, and so arranged matters as to secure that result, holy angels and saints glorified, there is a "strong probability," could not have had a "final confirmation in holiness." So if the theological hell should lose its place in the trinity of agencies there is a "strong probability" that our Rev. Br., and those of like faith, would not remain loyal to God, and might be found in rebellion against Him and his government. "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John iii., 16. But that love equally provided "eternal sufferings" for the largest part of the world, to help keep those who do not believe from revolting after they are glorified! How long, O LORD, shall Thy "name be every day blasphemed" by thy mistaken friends? May God hasten the time when His name shall "be hallowed;" honored, reverenced, and adored; and no longer profaned by the representations of His professed friends. "The wages of sin is death;" Rom. vi., 23; not life, under any circumstances. "Ye will not come unto Me that ye might have life," saith Jesus, John v., 40. Who dare to contradict Him, and say, they shall live forever in eternal suffering? Who?

A QUESTION.

WILL you give what you consider the Bible view of the manner of Christ's second coming? Is He not to come in a more humble manner than what the advent people are expecting? Consequently, will they not stumble over him as the first house of Israel did? Is not the man living on the earth to-day through whom Christ will be manifested to His people?

N.

If the above question, or questions, had not been put to us by a respected brother, we would have considered the matter too absurd to need a reply. That anti-christs may be manifested in the manner indicated in the last question, we have no doubt. Our Lord warned his followers against such as follows:

"Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo here is Christ, or there; believe it not: for there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. Behold I have told you before. Wherefore if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert; go not forth: behold he is in the secret chambers; believe it not: for as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so also shall the coming of the Son of man be." Matth. xxiv., 23-27.

Thus warned and thus armed with the sword of the Spirit, we reject all pretenders of the class our Br. refers to. We need no clearer evidence that they are "false prophets and false Christs," than the very idea of a gradual or secret development, or of the coming being in some man now on the earth, or any class of men. To us, the idea is blasphemy. "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts i., 11. "The Son of man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him," etc. Matth. xxv., 31. "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels," etc. Matth. xvi., 27. "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise," etc.—1 Thess. iv., 17. "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire," etc. 2 Thess. i., 7, 8. "Ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead," etc. 1 Thess. i., 9, 10. "Our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ," etc. Phill. iii., 20.

Thus we might go on using "the sword of the Spirit," which hews in pieces these modern Agags, who lay claim to the discovery that Christ is not to return from heaven in glory, but in some "secret chamber," some pretender, or "man now living on the earth," whose pride, or the pride of his deluded followers, has "exalted above all that is called God, or that is worshipped." Such are "false Christs and false prophets." Take heed to Jesus' command, "Go not after them, nor follow them." Their steps lead to death; and to follow them is to place ourselves in the list of those who will "be consumed by the brightness of His coming."

Thus have we responded to our brother plainly, but in love to him and all others who may be tempted, in these last days, to follow pretenders, who have become puffed up by their imaginary discoveries, and have departed from the faith of the gospel to magnify themselves.

THE CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

IT will be seen by reference to our CATALOGUE on the last page, that we have added to its list three more tracts, making eight in all. For twenty-four cents you can send them all to one address. Let no friend go without a set who you think will read them. If you do not wish to send them all, select such as you do. Let all work while the day lasts.

If our "Tract Fund" will allow, we intend to add to the list of these Documents, "Letters to a Clergyman, by Dr. Finley;" "Earth, not Heaven, the Inheritance of the Saints," also, "The Soul Saved or Lost." Shall we do it? If so, help with funds to this end. Much has been accomplished already by these documents, and the work is hardly under way. Let it be pushed with energy, and the result will be a rich harvest.

THE "SIX SERMONS."

WHILE some one hundred and fifty thousand of the various editions of these Sermons have been disposed of in Europe and America since 1842, there is still a demand for them, which we have determined to provide for, if possible; and for this purpose we now offer a cheap edition at 16 cents per copy, or $12 per hundred, sent at the expense of the purchaser. At these prices, cash will be expected with the orders. The postage will be two cents per copy.

We shall place this cheap edition among the "Campaign Documents;" and when ordered in connection with an assortment of those documents, the Six Sermons will be put in at 14 cents per copy and postage, which is as low as the two cent documents in proportion to the size.

MRS. M. B. DUMAY, East Hampton, Conn., writes: The HERALD OF LIFE is the best paper I ever read. It is life from the dead to dying mortals. I can sacrfice many things, but not my beloved HERALD. I wish I had the means, I would delight to send a copy to thousands that are groaning in darkness, and in death's shadow. Yes, I look back a year, and remember the thick darkness that had settled down on my mind; but, blessed be God, the fog has cleared away, and by God's blessed sunshine I see all things clearly; hope brightens, faith revives, and thank God for the gospel hope of Life eternal through the resurrection. May God bless you, and all who labor to establish the truth of Life only through Christ. I wish I could thank you all personally, but as I cannot, I will thank my heavenly Father and take courage, hoping to see you all, in the resurrection.

Another "Canadian Correspondent."

Many of the Herald readers will recollect how frankly and intelligently Br. L. C. Percival confessed the truth about three years ago. It comforted me then, and cheers me to day. Although I love peace, and think much of dwelling in unity with all around me, still the cause of truth is so precious that it does my soul good to see people embracing it.

Now it is not to get praised for benevolence that I inform Eld. Geo. Bangs, of Canada, that I was the "unknown friend" that sent him the "pamphlet" and "tract" which shed such light upon him; for it cost but ten cents, any way; and you may be certain it was a great satisfaction to me to find that he not only got benefited by the ten cents, but straightly returned to the tract fund two dollars.

I knew Br. Bangs used to be a studious man, long loved to "search the Scriptures," and always willing to let God plan his own purposes; and so it occurred to me that a little new light might be acceptable. And if any of the pastors or people up there, feel bad about the matter, give them my love, and tell them I shall very likely do so again. My mind rests on three other preachers in Canada, and I hope to send them a few tracts soon.

There are some leading ones in Canada who may call me "a troubler," but no matter. When doctors disagree, let the people judge for themselves. Let the light shine. If it is not light it cannot shine.

Canada is a hard place to introduce new things, unless they come from England. However, with God hard things are possible. May He greatly bless Br. B., and enable him to present the truth in love, though for it he suffer persecution and be cast out of the synagogue, as he certainly will be. Yet in this, Christ has suffered before us, and he can sympathize with all who are called to fill up the measure of his sufferings.

May we women who are called to be "keepers at home" save a few dimes from falling into the jeweller's hands, and with them send out tracts to hundreds who would gladly receive the words of life, and bless God for light and salvation.

Br. Burbank's Arrival.

Saturday, Feb. 20th, J. W. McCagg, at Warsaw, writes: Br. Burbank arrived here all safe yesterday morning, at eleven o'clock; and last night commenced our meetings. We had a house composed mostly of infidels and skeptics; and to day I learn that they are much interested. I am, individually, having a feast of fat things. God grant our dear Br's efforts may be blessed abundantly; and I believe they will. You will excuse any more, as it is mail time. Br. Burbank will write you the details. Your Br. in Christ.

From J. C. Day.

So. Ashburnham, Mass., Feb. 14, 1869.

Br. Storrs: I thought that I would write you a few lines before that "Embryotic Tract" was issued; for I should judge from the spirit and letter of that article in the Voice of the West that the author expected to annihilate our hope of being quickened into life by the Spirit of God; and, in fact, if he, by his mortal resurrection theory, could prove, as he proposes to do, that Christ was resurrected with the same life that he laid down, then we shall have to confess that he has annihilated some of the plainest passages of God's blessed word, which teach "He was put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit;" and if the saints come up with the same, or the blood life (for the Scripture saith that the blood is the life of all flesh, Leviticus xvii., 11–14), then the saints get no more by the birth from the dead by the second Adam than they did by their natural birth. This, according to Eld. Sheldon's opinion, is all they get; it is the same animal or blood life; no more, no less. But how does this agree with St. Paul's reasoning? he says, "The last Adam was made a quickening Spirit;" 1 Cor. xv., 45; hence, says the apostle John, "He that hath the the Son hath life;" and this agreeth with the testimony of the apostle Paul, "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. viii., 11.

Again, St. Paul says, "It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." Now we get our natural body by generation, or our natural birth; but we get our spiritual body by regeneration, or the new birth; for the first Adam was to people the earth by generation; but not so with the second Adam; He is not a generator, Br. Sheldon to the contrary notwithstanding; but He has undertaken to people the new earth by regeneration; hence, He quickens into life all who possess the Spirit of God when He comes. Hence the child of God is not raised as he went down in corruption, and then changed; but, this mortal, corruptible body is quickened into life by the Spirit of God. Therefore the apostle could say, "Ye are dead and your life is hid with Christian God; when He who is your life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."

"Adamic Death."

Much is said about the Adamic death by mortal resurrectionists. They talk as if that was so awful and cruel a death that God would be unjust if He did not restore it to all dead sinners, and hence is compelled to do it. But for what? Why, "to see what they have lost!" Then it must be to see life, for that is what the sinner loses; even eternal life. The righteous are raised from the dead to see it; but the wicked never can see it, even if raised from the dead; and they cannot see the new earth, even if the resurrection of both classes is at one and the same time, as mortal resurrectionists are compelled to say; for the wicked are destroyed before the new earth appears, according to that theory. I ask, how can the wicked see what they have lost till the new earth inheritance is prepared and the saints are in possession of it?

What is this "Adamic death," about which those talk so much who would have the wicked dead all made alive? Is it different from that which all Adam's posterity would have died had not God provided for an eternal life by a resurrection? Did God not promise that life, through Jesus, to obedient believers in Him? We think the true answer to these questions ought to settle this whole subject. The phrase "Adamic death" is coined to sustain the dual death theory, and has no authority from the Bible. It is used to help maintain a penalty for which there is no law. One death is all the penalty known to the law of God, viz., the cessation of Adamic life, or our animal life. As said Watts of the wicked,

> Like brutes they live,
> Like brutes they die, etc.

With this agrees the language of David and Solomon: "Like sheep they are laid in the grave . . . they shall never see light." "Man that is in honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish." Psa. xlix. "For that which befalleth the sons of men, befalleth the beasts, even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth so dieth the other: yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no pre-eminence over a beast . . . all go to one place: all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again." Eccl. iii., 19, 20. Thus David and his son Solomon agree as to the end of wicked men, or "the sons of men," who do not become the "sons of God" by regeneration. Eternal life never was in Adam: it was in the tree of life, to which he had access, if obedient; but from which he was cut off by disobedience, and died the same as other animals; and his posterity die in the same manner; and only a union with the Life-giver—Jesus Christ, the new tree of life—can give any man life from the dead. All who are by one Spirit baptized into one body—the body of Christ—are to be made alive, at the last day by that same Spirit which raised up Christ (the Head) from the dead. Over all others death holds its dominion. "Like natural brute beasts . . . they shall utterly perish in their own corruption." 2 Pet. ii., 12. Adam sowed to the flesh, and of the flesh reaped corruption. So do all impenitent and unbelieving sinners. They are not begotten of the incorruptible seed, and hence cannot be born again, or of the Spirit; so they are held in the bondage of corruption. Thus ends their wicked career.

May God guide us into all truth, and save us from the traditions of men.

Samuel L. Walter.

Illinois, 1869.

From Daniel Chase.

Fitzwilliam, N. H., Feb. 14, 1869.

Br. Storrs: I wish to let you know there is one more mortal on earth that sympathises with you in the Life views. The Herald of Life is a welcome visitor. That, the Bible and the Holy Spirit are my meat and drink. I might not have known there was such a paper in existence if it had not been for Br. S. S. Call, who came to see me while he was on a visit to his sister's. He had a copy of it with him. He wished me to subscribe for it. I rather declined; but he said, if I would take it six months and did not wish it continued he would pay me back my money. I could not deny such a liberal and earnest offer. I have not repented that I accepted it. I have great reason to thank Br. Call for his kindness. He knows I had many prejudices of long standing to abandon before I could drink from the living fountain of truth and the love of God. It seems strange to me that I could be so blind. But so it was, and there are none so blind as those who will not see. The Lord has known me from my youth up; and if I know myself, I have been inquiring after the truth ever since I was a small lad; and with my getting I wanted to get understanding. Great and mysterious is our God. No man can fathom Him; but we may know enough to become wise unto salvation. We see through a glass darkly now; but hope cheers us on our pilgrimage to that promised land that Abraham saw afar off, which we believe is now nigh. I embraced the advent cause in 1843, all but the time; that I could never see as some have. I felt it my duty to occupy till our Lord come; yet I have much to mourn over. Too much of my time has run to waste. I am in my fifty-fifth year, and my eye is growing dim; but yet I can hope, and that is the substance of things in the future; and I believe Christ is able to save unto the uttermost all that will come unto God by him; and that there is no life in the future only through Him.

I send five dollars for books and pamphlets. Select such as you think will do the most good; for I shall sow them broad-cast to all I think will read them. I wish some of our brethren would give us a call and preach the word of life to the people here. I am alone on the Life views; but not alone, for I feel that Christ is with me to comfort me. I think some begin to get their eyes open. If any one can come this way, let them write me, and I will procure the Town Hall and give notice.

The Hope of the Just.

One of the blessings bestowed on man by the Giver of every good and perfect gift is Hope, both the child and sister of Faith. "Hope springs eternal in the human breast." It is the inspiration of all human endeavor, giving courage to endure as seeing that which is invisible, and rest in the midst of its painful toil. All men have hopes, but they are as different as the ends which they pursue. The hopes of those who are enemies to the cross of Christ, and whose affections are centred on self, are destined to overwhelming disaster. The hopes they cherish are as unsubstantial as the shadows they pursue. Why is it that men, whom the world calls wise and prudent, waste their days and consume their energies in the pursuit of pleasure, fortune, power, applause, renown, and "other lying vanities" of earth, which dance before them, only to entice them to a lingering death in the morass of sin, or, like the wrecker's beacon, mislead them, and cause them to make "shipwreck of the faith."

But the hope of the just, how sure it is. How brightly it beams forth upon his path like a never-setting star, or, rather, like the rising sun, "shining more and more unto the perfect day." As soon doubt the actual existence of ancient Orion, or the sun, as the reality of those "things not seen," on which the hopes of the justified are fixed. The spiritual eyes of the believer, when opened by the healing touch of Christ, see these things as clearly by the light of God's word as the miner, in the rays of his gleaming lamp, sees the glittering gold, and feels more certain to obtain them by patient continuance in well-doing.

Those who have no hope in Christ as an anchor to the soul, drift at the mercy of every gale of passion, and lie at last wrecked upon the shores of time, "whose end is destruction." But the hope of the just is sure and steadfast, like an anchor in the crevice of a rock. We may not see the rock, hidden as it is beneath the whelming waves of trial and distress, but, blessed be God, the anchor holds, and we need not fear "though the earth be removed, and the mountains cast into the sea." Our hearts are fixed and our anchor cast within the vail, hard by the throne of God. That Rock is Christ, the Stronghold to which the prisoners of hope have fled for refuge in all ages from the storms of life, and from the tempests of man's wrath. "The expectation of the wicked shall perish, but the righteous hath hope in his death." The hour of final dissolution reveals to the wicked the fatal nature of those strong delusions wherewith the enemy of souls has led them astray, like stars wandering from their courses, "for whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever." But to the righteous, death [gives a discharge from all his trials, and the resurrection, at Christ's return from heaven] brings a welcome release from earth ['s corruption and mortality], and ushers him to the brightness of paradise, where hope in full fruition dies, and all is joy and love [eternal].

Remarks by Ed. Her. of Life.—The foregoing article we selected from Zion's Herald, but it is due to that paper to say, the matter in brackets is our addition to the excellent thoughts of our Br. Editor. He will excuse us for this act.

Principle and Feeling.

Religion in personal experience includes both principle and feeling. This is involved in the nature of the case as related to the operation of truth upon the soul. When religious truth is presented, and is perceived by the intellect to be truth, the sensibility is moved in some way of complacence or displacence, of hope or fear, of pleasure or pain. The will also accepts or rejects the truth as law to the soul by which it shall be governed. Principle, then, consists in the full determination of the man to obey God, in his actual choice of Christ as his King and Saviour. Feeling is the accompanying and resultant sorrow and shame for past sin, and joy and hope in present and future salvation.

Now of these two it will be noticed that principle is the main thing, and feeling the incidental. It is the former which decides the man's character, by turning the supreme choice of the soul from evil to good, from sin to holiness, from an attitude of selfish pursuit of his own gratification to a benevolent devotion to the divine glory and universal welfare. One cannot have right principle without being a converted man; for conversion is the turning of the will (and thereby of the whole man) from sin's falsities, and its surrender to the truth. He, therefore, who is conscious of choosing the will of God as the law of his life, and of accepting Christ as his perfect Saviour, has the evidence that his heart is changed. When we speak of a man's principles we mean the ideas which rule him, the purposes which are supreme in his mind, the aims which are paramount to all others; and we never doubt that a man morally is as his principles. And so the Bible affirms; "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." This is the fixed requirement and characteristic; the same for all men, and the same for each man continually; and it is something under our control and for which we are responsible.

Feeling is more variable and less decisive, more like the surface wave and less like the deep and steady current. It differs greatly in different men of equal principle, according to natural temperament and degrees of intellectual and spiritual cultivation; some being excitable, and others phlegmatic; some uniform in feeling, and others always at an extreme of elevation or depression; some accustomed to stimulate and express their emotions, and others to check and hide them. Moreover, feeling will vary greatly in the same man at different times without respect to his Christian principle, according to his condition of health or illness, of weariness or refreshment, of solitude or society, of exciting or quieting circumstances. On this very account it is often beyond our control.

This being true, it must be a great mistake to take feeling rather than principle as our test of character, for ourselves or for others. A Christian may overflow with feeling, because he has a very emotional nature, and is easily wrought upon by appeal, while yet he has a vacillating will, and therefore unsteady principles, and often falls into inconsistent conduct. All his gush of emotion in prayer-meetings, does not save him from being accounted a very weak brother, as men see his infirmities of temper, and violations of principle. In the next pew, perhaps, sits a rather dry disciple, for he seldom manifests feeling and is conscious of little or none, but he is firm in his holy purpose, and never grieves his brethren by misconduct. In religion, as in other relations of life, the true test is practical. Who was the most loyal citizen in the late rebellion? Not he who huzzaed the most loudly, or tossed his cap the highest, or grew most angry at the traitors, or most nearly lost his senses when he heard a band play Yankee Doodle or the Star Spangled Banner; but he who most thoroughly and firmly set his purpose to sustain the government at all hazard, who wavered not under reverses, who made the greatest sacrifices of property or ease or life. And so must we judge of loyalty to Christ.

And this idea may aid those who are revolving the question of commencing a Christian life, but are deterred, from want of the requisite feeling. There is no requisite degree of feeling; there is a requisite degree of principle. No two souls ever entered the kingdom with precisely the same emotions; all souls enter it with a submission of their wills to God.—The Advance.

The World when Christ Comes.

It is clearly set forth in the Scriptures that the return of Christ to judgment will find the world anything but holy, peaceful, Christian and happy; and that the last days will be earth's worst days, crowded with all forms of abounding wickedness, apostasy, irreligion, disorder and sensuality. Indeed, it is one of the uniform laws of Providence, that judgment never comes in a pure and peaceful age. It is only when the blasphemies of men run highest that the Almighty strikes. When the wickedness of the old world culminated, the flood came. When the iniquities of Sodom were at their height, the day of doom dawned. When "the iniquity of the Amorites" was "full," the sword of Israel was upon them for their extermination. When the Jews, to their many crimes and apostasy, added responsibility for the Messiah's blood, the ploughshare of destruction overturned their city, destroyed the last remnants of their state, and entailed eighteen centuries of woe upon their children. The greatness of judgment is also always graduated by the extent and turpitude of the offences which call it down. And as all divine judgments, hitherto, have been samples and earnests of the great judgment to come; and as that, when it comes, is to be the most universal and awful of all, we are forced to the conclusion that it will overtake the world in a condition of unbounded guilt and godlessness, transcending everything that has thus far marked the history of man.

To this, also, agree all the Scriptural statements on the subject: "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Luke xviii., 7, 8. "As it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of Man." Luke xvii., 26, 27. We know what sort of days those of Noah were. We know that they were not centuries of righteousness and peace. The testimony of God certifies to us what was the state of things. The inspired record is, that "God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. . . The earth, also, was corrupt before God; and the earth was filled with violence. And God looked upon the earth, and behold it was corrupt; for all flesh had corrrupted his way upon the earth." Gen. vi., 1–13. Such is the awful portrait of those times, sketched by the Holy Ghost himself. And the word of the divine Jesus, more than once recorded, is: "As the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Math. xxiv., 37–39. We know, too, from the same infallible source, what was the moral estate of the cities of the plain, at the time they were overwhelmed. "The Lord said: 'The cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and their sin is very grievous.'" Not ten righteous men could be found in all their teeming populations. Gen. xviii., 20–32; xix., 1–17. But the word of Jesus is: "Likewise, also, as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all: even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." Luke xvii., 28–30. Paul testifies to the same effect: "This know, also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." 2 Tim. iii., 1–9. And if this correctly portrays what is to be the prevailing condition of the professing church, what shall be said of the vulgar multitudes who make no pretensions to piety or godliness?—Prophetic Times.

An Inquiry.

I have heard this assertion made repeatedly by Advent preachers at the West, viz.: "Judaizers don't pray—they don't believe in prayer." Now I understand the term "Judaizer" to be applied to all who believe in a future restoration to their own land of those "who turn from ungodliness in Jacob," at the coming of Christ, and of probation to them, and the "left of the nations," during the restitution age.

Now as this view has nothing to do whatever with leading people to cast off prayer, inasmuch also as many of the most devoted, spiritual-minded, as well as intelligent of those looking for the speedy coming of Christ, do believe in the restoration of Israel, is it right to represent to the public that these are a prayerless people, because perchance some who do not believe in praying believe in the return of the Jews?

This latter class believe also in no immortality out of Christ. Suppose then our "Orthodox" opponents should act upon precisely the same principle, and proclaim through the land that those who believe they must seek for immortality in order to attain unto eternal life are a prayerless people; reflecting this error of a few upon all who chance to agree with them upon any point. Would this be regarded as just? Would it not be considered far otherwise? C. H.

What is it to be Born Again?

Jesus said, "that which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." John iii., 6. Now it seems clear to us, that the above contains two distinct propositions, which relate to two distinct events.

In the first place, "That which is born of the flesh," relates to life in the flesh; which is inherited from Adam.

In the second place, "That which is born of the Spirit," relates to life in the spirit, such as Jesus possessed after his resurrection.

There are, also, two conditions that belong to each proposition. A begetting and a birth. That which is born of the flesh, must first be begotten of the flesh. That which is born of the Spirit, must first be begotten of the Spirit. We know what it is to be begotten and born of the flesh. But what is it to be begotten and born of the Spirit?

When the gospel is believed and obeyed from the heart, then we are said to be begotten, which begetting precedes the second birth.

Paul says, "For in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel." 1 Cor. iv., 15. "I beseech thee for my son Onesimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds." Philemon, x. Peter says, God "has begotten us to a living hope through the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." 1 Peter i., 3. "Having been begotten again, not from corruptible but from incorruptible seed, through the living and enduring Word of God." 1 Peter i., 23.

James says, "Having willed it, he (the Father) begat us by the Word of Truth." James i., 18. "Every one practising righteousness has been begotten by him" (God). 1 John ii., 29. "Every one who loves has been begotten by God, and knows God." 1 John iv., 7. "Every one who believes that Jesus is the Anointed one, has been begotten by God." 1 John v., 1.

We have followed the Diaglott rendering. Compare the last quoted verse with Matt. xvi., 16. "Thou art the Anointed one, the Son of the living God." Upon this confession the Church of God is built, and the gates of hades (the state of death) shall not prevail against it. For the Lion of the tribe of Judah holds the keys. All true Christians are only the begotten sons of God, or the children of God by faith. Gal. iii., 26. They are said to be begotten by the gospel; by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead; by the living and enduring word of God; and by God. Therefore the highest sense in which Christians are the children of God in this life, is that of being the begotten children, or children by faith and hope.

When is the second birth? Ans. When the dead saints are raised incorruptible, and the living ones changed to immortality. Jesus was raised from the dead, and thus showed what it was to be born again. He is the head of the church, and the Son of God with power by the resurrection from the dead. Rom. i., 4. He is the first-born among many brethren. Rom. viii., 29. He "is the image of the invisible God, the first born of every creature . . . And he is the head of the church: the first-born from the dead." Col. i., 15–18.

Now as the elder brother—"the head"—is born, so will the younger brethren—"the one body"—be born also. The saints are predestinated unto the adoption of children. Eph. i., 5. And for this adoption they wait and hope. Paul says, "We have received the spirit of adoption (i. e., by being begotten) whereby we cry Abba, Father." This is not the adoption to which the saints are predestinated; it is only the spirit of adoption. Rom. viii., 15. The adoption itself is brought to view in verse 23. "Those who have the fruits of the Spirit, even we, groan within ourselves, "waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body" (the church). If we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it.

The saints wait for God's Son from heaven that their vile body may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God (in fact, not in faith) being the children of the resurrection." Luke xx., 35, 36. This will be their adoption. They only have now the spirit of adoption. They will then be born of the Spirit. They are only now begotten of it. They can then enter into the kingdom of God. They only have it now by promise. Acts. xiv., 22; 1 Cor. xv., 50; James ii., 5. "Except a man be born again, he cannot enter the kingdom of God." "Marvel not that I said unto thee, ye must be born again." W. H. Whitman.

Edward B. Fish, Glens Falls, N. Y., writes: Since embracing the Life views, six months ago, I have read the Bible through, from the beginning of Genesis to the Amen of Revelation, to see if these things were so; and praise the Lord, my faith is grounded in Christ, "the resurrection and the life;" and when He appears, I hope to be like him. Pray for the outposts, for I am alone in this large village.

Remarks by the Editor.—We are much pleased at the course pursued by this brother. The Bible is the standard of appeal as to the truth of any theological theory. If it cannot be clearly proved by that, reject it, let who will promulgate it, or what Synod, Council, Presbytery, Conference, or other self constituted body may demand faith in it. "Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto" such, "rather than to God, judge ye."

James Grant, Montrose, Scotland, writes: I could have wished my small contribution [1£., Ed.] to have been at your disposal earlier; but from sickness in my family and other hindrances it has been delayed at least two months. I do not need to say anything in commendation of the Herald of Life farther than to express my thankfulness that those who have the means have been prompted to bestow them so liberally for its support. May the light of Truth continue to shine through its columns till He who is the true Light shall appear, is the prayer of your affectionate brother in Christ.

Note by the Editor.—We are glad to get a few lines from Scotland. The "Order" sent us is six dollars and fifty-three cents, in our money. Thank you, brother; and hope the blessing of our Father in heaven may attend you and yours.

A Scotch Preacher, when he was reading the 119th Psalm, "I will run the way of Thy commandments when Thou shalt enlarge my heart," adds,

"Well, David, what is your first resolution? 'I will run.' Run away, David, what hinders you? What is your next? 'I will run the way of Thy commandment.' Better run yet, David. What is your next? 'I will run the way of Thy commandment when Thou shalt enlarge my heart.' No thanks to you, David; we could all run as well as you with such help."

My Friend.

I'm glad I've found a faithful Friend,
One ever kind and true,
Ready to listen to my joys,
And to my sorrows too.

Once I believed my earthly friends
Would friendly ever be,
But some of them, alas, became
Most bitter foes to me.

O, when they spake such tender words,
And kissed so fondly, too,
My simple heart ne'er doubted that
They would be ever true.

Now lips that kissed and tongues that blessed
Are speaking cruel things,
Taking my friends from me, and laugh
To see the grief it brings.

Such snares, such mischief, wittily
Laid out before my feet,
And every way I turn there is
Some of their work to meet.

Great God, I see thee through my tears,
So hot they blind my eyes;
Weighed down with grief I come to thee,
For thou wilt hear my cries.

I trust in an Almighty Friend,
He will my shelter be;
The Lord of glory is my Guide,
And truly comforts me.

Sermon for Children.

Text.—Matthew vi., 9: "Our Father, which art in heaven."

Will the great God, who made all things, and who dwells in the highest heavens, permit us to call him Father? Yes: these are the words that Jesus Christ has taught us: "When ye pray, say, Our Father, who art in heaven."

You have, my little friends, been taught to say Our Father who art in heaven, but have you been taught who this heavenly Father is, and what he has done? When you say, Our Father, do you feel such a disposition as a child ought to feel toward a tender father? Do you feel a reverence for him, and a love for him; a sorrow for having offended him, and a desire to be his dutiful and obedient child?

These are the dispositions you ought to feel toward your earthly parents, and much more to your heavenly Father.

And let me tell you, children, if you have never prayed in this manner, you have never prayed at all. To say the prayers only with your lips, is not praying; you must pray with your hearts or it is no prayer.

It is affronting the blessed God to call him Father without loving.

Though he is in heaven he sees and knows all that you think, as well as all that you say or do; in the darkness as well as in the light he sees you.

You will not, then, children, affront the blessed God, by drawing near to him with your lips, while your hearts are far from him? From this time will you not call upon him as your heavenly Father, with all the duty and love that becomes obedient children? He is a kind and tender Father. "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pities his children."

It is he who gives you every good thing that you enjoy. It is his flax that clothes you, and his corn that feeds you. It is he that preserveth you from a thousand accidents, healeth your diseases, and crowneth you with loving kindness and tender mercies.

And above all, he has sent his well beloved Son to redeem and save you, that you might not perish, but have everlasting life. Has your heavenly Father been thus kind to you, and will you not love him? Go, children, with all your wants, to this compassionate Father; he who heareth the young ravens when they cry, will surely hear when you cry unto him.

Do you want food to eat? He who giveth food to the beasts of the field, will feed you also. Do you want raiment to put on? He who clothes the lilies of the field will much more clothe you, Your earthly parents may be taken from you by death, but your heavenly Father hath said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."

Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? Yea, she may forget, yet I will not forget thee.

This is the kind language of our heavenly Father, and what should be your language toward him? Should it not be all duty and love? Can you be at a loss to know what to say to him? Can you ever forget to pray to him? Go, like his dear children, and say to him, "Our Father, who art in heaven, we thank thee that thou wilt permit us to call thee by that tender, that delightful name; we would come to thee with all that duty, love and affection that becomes thy children. We are grieved that we should offend so kind a Father: forgive, we pray thee, the sins and follies of thy children. May we be holy, for thou art holy; and merciful, as thou, our heavenly Father, art merciful. We come to thee for all that we want; for food and raiment; but above all, we pray for a heart to love thee more, and serve thee better, that we may be fit to dwell with thee in in thy heavenly kingdom forever."

To God who reigns above the sky,
Our Father and our Friend,
To him let all our vows be paid,
And all our prayer ascend.

'Tis he who claims our youthful hearts,
He loves to hear us pray;
By night we'll think upon his love,
And praise him every day.

With all the love a father feels,
He pities and forgives;
And though our earthly parents die,
Our heavenly Father lives.

Spiritism.

The following article we copy from the New Albany Daily Commercial, Ind. We recognize the writer as our worthy friend C. W. Lyndall, merchant in that place. It seems this delusion of the last days is at work in that region.—Ed. Her. of Life.

"Progressive Christians."

Spiritism and Witchcraft of to-day not Unlike the Wizardism and Necromancy of the days of Moses.

Eds. Commercial: This being Sunday morning it is probably well enough to call the attention of the Sunday readers to some Bible extracts, or facts, and compare them with incidents of every-day life. I have been reading the Scripture account of the Witch of Endor and Saul. The first a necromancer, and the second might be called a wizard, inasmuch as both are represented as God-forsaken beings; and these appellations, in almost every age, having been used as something frightful, it must be very frighful to see, and terribly so to feel, that God has sent such persons strong delusions that they may believe a lie that they all may be damned who believe not the truth but have "pleasure in unrighteousness." The spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, "giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of the devils." But to notice this necromancer Witch of Endor: in Deut. xviii., under the head of Abominations, you will find it says, "there shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divinations, or an enchanter, or a witch, or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer." In Exo. xxii., 18, you will find it declared, "thou shalt not suffer a witch to live."

In 1 Saml. xviii., 10, you will find the Lord had departed or withdrawn himself from Saul. He having disobeyed and turned away from God necessarily subjected himself to the wrath of Him who had heretofore guided him; and when he wanted wisdom the Lord would not give it because of the disobedience of the wicked king. Now, in 1 Saml. xxvii., 15, Saul is represented as talking with Samuel; but remember that God had departed from him and answered him not, neither by prophets nor by dreams. Also bear in mind that there is no record that Saul did see Samuel except the declaration of the Witch, who, like all other witches was of her father, the devil—and this father was a liar from the beginning. The record is "he perceived," or understood, from what the Witch told him. It is very singular that at the time she was so frightened, when she said she saw God, and then immediately told another lie by saying it was an old man, that amid all these pretended scenes of terror, she professes for the first time to recognize Saul, notwithstanding the record tells us, 1 Saml. xiv., 23, that Saul, from his shoulders upward, was higher than all the people.

Is any one silly enough to believe that a subtle Witch would place her life in the hands of one without authority? Thus you see the pretence of her not knowing Saul was like her other deceptions, and reminds us of the deceptions of the spirits of this day. But some of the Witches and Wizards of this nineteenth century may stiil claim that the declaration said to be from Samuel concerning Saul and his sons was fulfilled; and this is just what the Witches and Soothsayers of New Albany would establish in the minds of the people of this age. They have Samuel to say to Saul; "To-morrow thou shalt leave the form and be with me in the progressive world." Thus they have their "Universalism-gone-to-seed." But even this declaration to Saul that he should be with him to-morrow did not cheer him, as he ranted and charged around more terrible and ridiculous than a New Albany doctor—pretending to be possessed of the spirit of an Indian doctor.

If these ridiculous ideas of Spiritualism and Witchcraft were once established, then harmonious meetings could be held at the Court House. Now, just imagine a company of these Witches, Wizards, Necromancers, and Professors assembled together, as on last Sunday afternoon at the Court House, to organize and listen. One says that "Dr. Davis's spirit is communicating." Another says, "I have been confounded, having seen a mysterious writing on a card, notwithstanding the flowing of the Quaker tears of my fathers, who is honest but does not practise what he professes."

The leading spiritists think enough of the Prophet that God has raised up to mention his name. But this is only to deceive. They deny most He has said, except when there is a harmonious atmosphere, and they are formed in a circle, as suggested by the spirit of Dr. Davis. How are you, Dr. Davis! Next a spirit got hold of a little fly-up-the-creek, and he wanted the organization called "Teachers' Meeting." Then another said call it "My Church," the name the Master gave it. But this was objected to by two individuals, one of them saying he acknowledged no Jesus as his Master. Another would not accept Jesus as his pattern, because he had ordered some of his followers to take a jackass that did not belong to him, the inference from this language being that this was a thieving business, and he did not want a thief for his pattern. And how terrible the thought that these two individuals in their language acknowledge Christ, and then reject him.

But not least in size was a fellow that calls people "ignorant." Now what he don't know he can find out from "that book that was written before the Bible." By the aid of this book and the spirit of Dr. Davis he can prove he is not a monkey. (Wisdom above what is written.) But the noisiest of all is that dried-peach merchant, who claims he has the gift of gab, and says he intends to use it. Then there is the gentleman from the Fifth Ward, that don't like to see a lawyer go to church on Sunday morning with a hymn-book in his hand; (N. B. Lawyers!) especially if it is just after court week. The most liberal of all is that "Unita," who will always come and listen but can take no part if they sail under the flag of Universalism-gone-to-seed.

But we have not space enough to make honorable mention of all, and could not if we had. Now, out of this august body not one had a beam in his eye; and suppose he had, Dr. Davis was there, and could "harmonize" things and take it out.

Martus.

The Kingdom of Heaven.

The kingdom of heaven, though in its glorious realization yet future, has a relative bearing to all dispensations from the beginning. The germ of it was contained in the Adamic covenant, wherein it was said to him: "Be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth." (Gen. i., 28.) And on his defection it was given to Christ as the second Adam, who "shall not fail nor be discouraged till He have set judgment in the earth, and the isles shall wait for His law." Isa. xlii., 4. See also Psa. viii., 4–8, and Heb. ii., 6–9, where it is shown that the Dominion promised to Adam is transferred to Christ, under whom all things are not yet put, though we see Him crowned with glory and honor in His exaltation to the right hand of the Majesty on high, till His enemies be made His footstool. This kingdom was involved in the declaration that the woman's seed shall bruise the serpent's head, thus laying a foundation for the faith which was found in Abel, Seth, Enoch, Noah, and others of the antediluvian age, and was involved in the organic government then divinely administered over the community known as the "sons of God," in contradiction from the Cainite faction known as the sons of men. This kingdom was typically represented by the kingdom of Shem or Melchizedek from the deluge to the days of Abraham, to whom it was given by promise: "For the promise that He should be the heir of the world was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith—to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all, before Him whom he believed, even God, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were." Rom. iv., 13–17. To the nation of Israel, consisting of the natural seed of Abraham, it was promised, as already shown, on condition of obedience; and, during their national trial, was included in their theocracy, until the Babylonish captivity, when God said, "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more. until He come whose right it is; and I will give it Him." Ezek. xxi., 27. The kingdom of Israel was confirmed in the family of David by an everlasting covenant (1 Chron. xvii., 9–14, and Psalm lxxxix., 34–37), and to Solomon, God promised, on condition of his obedience, to establish the throne of his kingdom upon Israel forever (1 Kings ix., 2–5), that is, in Millennial glory; but, as he was disobedient, the glory was not manifested, and Soloman died, and the kingdom was rent in twain, and his line continued in possession of the minor section only until the Babylonish captivity, when it ended in the childless Coniah, and the destruction of all that remained of Solomon's seed. Jer. xxii., 34–40, and lii., 10, 11, 31–34. But still the covenant insured that David should have a Son, who should also be God's Son, with whom the promise shall be fulfilled according to Isa. ix., 6–7; and when the angel of the Lord announced to Mary the miraculou conception and birth of a Son, he said, "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David. And He shall reign over the house of Jacob forever (that is in in Millennial glory), and of His kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i., 32–33. But the throne of his father David was not given to him during his first advent, nor after his resurrection; and when his disciples inquired, "Wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom of Israel?" he replied, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power," or hath retained in his own right. Acts i., 6, 7. But when he ascended, and took his seat at the right hand of God, angels appeared to them, and told them that he should come again in like manner as they had seen him depart. And they subsequently learned, after God shall have visited the Gentiles, in the mercy of the gospel dispensation, to take out of them a people for his name, the Lord Jesus will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and will build again the ruins thereof, and set it up. Acts xv., 16. And during the gospel dispensation, the kingdom of heaven is like the grain of mustard which a man took and sowed in his field: it is in its hidden, undeveloped, unmanifested condition. It is not now seen. It is sown in the world by the preaching of the gospel now, as it was formerly sown by the precious promises which contained it, by types and symbols which foreshadowed it, by the predictions of prophets and songs of poets in anticipation of it. And every true believer is an heir of that kingdom, and shall be a king and priest in it. But it doth not yet appear what we shall be; the world now knoweth us not, because it knew not Christ. The professing church is known and recognized as a power in the world, but the saints, the elect remnant, are not known, are not recognized as a power of the earth. The professing church is not the kingdom of heaven. It is only the blade, the stalk, the husk which serves for the better concealment of the precious grain. Nothing but the grain will be harvested at last; all the rest will be consumed with unquenchable fire. If it were not for the grain there would be no blade, no stalk, no husk; and if it were not for the remnant whom the Lord will save, there would be no professing church. The professing church and sectarian organizations are only preserved for the sake of the hidden remnant, the few names of Christ's chosen people. The church of Sardis may count her membership by thousands, but there are only a few who have not defiled their garments. In every age the saints of God have been a small remnant of the professed people of God.—Prophetic Times.

From William Steele.

Arkansaw, Wis., Feb. 5, 1869.

Br. Storrs: I enclose two dollars for the Herald of Life for this year. It seems to me that I ought to make some report concerning the state of the religion of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, once a year, to those of like precious faith through the Herald, the readers of which are strangers scattered far apart. But by writing to our paper occasionally we all get somewhat acquainted. We all have neighbors with whom we have dealings and exchange thoughts, and when those who can make a particular report of what they have seen and heard, do it; it is very interesting. I will not attempt to do this, as I fear it would be too much for me. I will only report in a general way. Concerning myself and wife, I have to say that the words of Life, as published in the Herald of Life, have been precious to us all through the past year.

Last summer I got engaged with a Sunday School, which prevented me from attempting to set forth Jesus as the resurrection and the Life to dying men. I spoke publicly only twice; once on the Lord's day and once at a funeral; on both occasions the Lord was with me; and though I cannot see such results from my feeble efforts as I wish to see, yet I have reason to hope that some good will follow. There are some here who will read the Herald of Life, and do not oppose its teachings; and though they are not disposed to subscribe for it, they are willing to exchange papers with me, and in this way the Herald must do some good.

We used to have only Methodist preaching here once in two weeks; but now a Baptist preacher alternates with the Methodist, and so the place and time are taken up at present. We attend their meetings and make all we can of them. But all the time I carry with me a purpose to improve every opportunity of making known what the blessings of the Gospel really are. Why is it that men will not believe that eternal Life is God's gift to dying men? The answer is, because they assume that we possess immortal souls. I don't know but I could write a good deal on this theme, but I am no scribe and it tires me: so I will drop it for the present. I must tell you that the doctrine of the kingdom of God is very edifying to us; and I feel very much interested in the tract cause; though I have not done much for it yet. I heartily approve of every tract that is advertised in the paper, unless it be the Essential Baptism; but I think the one on the Judgment is perhaps the best. I shall send for some as soon as convenient. Your brother in Christ.

From Wm. Forrester.

Dundee, N. Y., Feb. 1869.

Br. Storrs: In the fear of God and in due respect to his law, I will endeavor to write a few lines by confessing his truth before my fellow men, that He may not deny me before the holy angels. I have been well pleased with the way the Crisis has been conducted till lately. I have been taking it for over twelve years. I think it is yet a tolerably good paper; one of the best. I wrote a letter on the first of Dec. 1868. I sent $1, so as not get behind. They credited the money but not my letter with the many others who sent letters. I don't know why, unless on account of my not seeing with some others on the subject of the resurrection, as I wrote somewhat freely on that subject, but as charitably as I dare to, in the fear of God. I saw an address in the Crisis delivered in New York by Eld. Munger about that time, which I wrote plainly in reply to; as I am one of my Lord and Master's free-thinkers. I do not wish to think for others, and I am not willing that they should think for me, so long as I can read and understand my Bible. I am very well aware of the ground on which I stand, as I have sometime since found there is no hope for those who die out of Christ having a resurrection. If so, they are the children of the resurrection just as much as the righteous are. I can find no positive "thus saith the Lord" for the resurrection of the wicked to life; Jesus nowhere says he will raise them up at the last day. I would like to have all honest Christians read John vi., in connection with chap. v., also Luke xx., 39–40, etc., with Mark xii., and Matthew xxii. So we can see men do "err, not knowing the Scripture nor the power of God." This is plainly to be seen by every Bible student who has the spirit and mind of Christ, as says Paul, in Romans viii., Except we have the spirit or mind of Christ, we are none of his. So we must belong to somebody else; for Christ's word and his spirit invariably agree. Our Saviour plainly told us, when he was going away, that we would not know the day nor hour when he would return. I thank my Lord and Master for the teachings of his word and Spirit, which teach us we are living in the last days, as we see men will not endure sound doctrine. But our Saviour said, What is that to thee, follow thou me. I could write far more in confirmation of the resurrection, and scripturally too, from the Old and New Testament; but this must suffice for the present.

Perhaps you may think my letter not worth publishing; if so, omit it, and I shall not be offended. But I want to see the Herald of Life; so please send it to me. For some reason our Advent friends are scarce in this section. I often feel that I w uld not count hardly any sacrifice to much if I could again be where I could enjoy the privilege of worshiping with my brethren who hold with me on "No Life out of Christ" hereafter. I should be much pleased to hear you or some one else of our views preach in Elmira, Havana, Watkins, or Dundee, N. Y. I think if a course, through the blessing of God, can be taken, the way can be opened for some of you to come to one of those places: so Br. let us pray over this matter, and act accordingly. Your Br. in Christ.

From William H. Spence.

Bristol, R. I. Feb. 10, 1869.

Br. Storrs: In these days there is much said about death and the resurrection. The cause of this is, the great and glorious truths being promulgated in the Herald of Life. We also offer our thoughts. Our prayer is, that they may be in accordance with God's words of eternal life. There are many classes of believers in the world: three of which we will only hint at. The first class believes that the body of man dies, but the soul never dies, being the man proper. Very well. We are very glad, and we trust thankful to be able to see that this theology is not the theology of the Bible. The Bible takes the living man—soul, body and spirit—and calls him soul. Mark this: The soul that sinneth, it shall die. Judge ye whether this was said to the living soul, man, or to the dead soul man. Surely the man must be the finished creature as he came from the hand of his Maker before he could sin; and surely if there be a penalty for sin, the whole man that committed the offence, or sin, in justice must receive the penalty, which is death.

There is another class; it is hard to tell what they believe. Yet they all profess to believe that the wicked will die twice literally; and that all must have a resurrection to suffer and secure the second death. We have no doubt of the power of God to make men live twice, that they may die twice, if His word required it; but what would be thought of a nation if it were to make a law with the penalty death, and the man condemned, waiting for the day of execution, dies a natural death before the time set for his execution, and is buried; what claim has the law now upon him. Would you dig him up, and have him hung up by the neck for some little time until the law was satisfied? Would such a process be looked upon with respect and love? No, never; but would be despised by all the world. We hope this class, many of them, will yet see, believe, and rejoice in the truth.

The third class is called a peculiar class; they believe, as we do ourselves, that our present life is forfeited, and lost forever through the first Adam; but, glory be to God, in His plan He has given his dear Son to die; and he did die, and gave his life's blood for a guilty, lost and ruined world. But thanks be to God, he has risen again, being glorified in immortality, eternal life; and has opened a wide door; for, all that will come, may come and partake of the water of life freely. O how blessed it is to see and live in Christ; for we know, then, that He will give us eternal life, and raise us up at the last day. Now we see in the theology of the day what a mist of darkness and confusion rests upon the religious atmosphere of the minds of men. Why is it so? Our answer is, that man's religious knowledge is by man, who is trusting in man; and the result is, that the curse of God is on the people. See Jer. xvii., 5–8. If men will not return to the theology of God's precious word of eternal life, they will keep wandering on, until they finish their course, and land in eternal death. Forgive them, Lord, for they know not what they do.

S. S. Call, writes from Hesper, Iowa: The work is gaining. Br. Corlis, of Chatfield, Minn., has come out and embraced "Life only in Christ:" and as he is a preacher of the Advent faith, his influence will be all the greater; for he is a very candid and worthy brother. He is how preaching life from the dead through Jesus Christ, the Life-Giver; and that the wicked dead will remain in the dominion of death. There is much opposition to the Life views. A few words, sometimes, sets them in hostile array. It seems that they cannot bear the plain truth. "The word of God is quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword, and divideth asunder" truth and error.

Frederick II. of Prussia received a petition from one his districts praying that a certain clergyman be suspended from preaching because he held that the punishment of the wicked would come to an end. The king took his pen and wrote the following: "I have considered the above petition, and do hereby give my royal permission to all my loyal subjects to be damned to all eternity if they choose it. But I do positively forbid their quarrelling with their neighbors who are not willing to keep them company so long."

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—" the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in thei order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. Earth, not Heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. The Soul Saved or Lost. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 5. Moral Depravity; by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 7. Doom of the Ungodly: or The Wicked Dead remain eternally under death's dominion. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 8. The Wages of Sin; by a Presbyterian Clergy man. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. Letters to a Clergyman; or Life only through Christ not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. Finley, Pittsburg, Pa. Price 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are 16 pages octavo. They will be sold at $3 per 100, or, fifty cents per dozen, free of postage.

No. 9. The Essential Baptism; by the Editor of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price 7 cents.

NON-IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

REPLY TO "INQUIRER," BY DR. FINLEY.

UNDER the head of Philosophy, section on intuitions, we have "The intuitive shrinking from annihilation."

Why should we instinctively shrink from annihilation if we know by intuition that we are immortal? It would be self-evident and undeniable, and therefore the liability to annihilation would never cross the mind or affect our instincts.

The remaining part of this section led me to suspect that "Inquirer" might be a Universalist or a Spiritist. He says "the growth of pure and holy affections for our fellows, but partially gratified on earth, and leading to the hope of full satisfaction hereafter; noble intellectual powers suddenly blasted here, but trusting in a field of activity beyond the grave; ambition laboring for a fame that will endure through the ages, of which it hopes to enjoy the consciousness; the impulse to prayer, the soul seeking to commune with its kindred everlasting, as a fountain struggles toward the height of its source; all indicate a spirit that eludes death, a being that escapes the tomb."

Now this is all very pretty; indeed, quite beautiful, as coming from a Universalist or Spiritist, but as we know, both from the Bible and universal observation, the vast majority of mankind do not have any of these pure and holy affections, etc., what becomes of them? According to Orthodoxy they go down to hell to endure all the horrible torments that an almighty God can inflict upon them; as I heard it preached from a Presbyterian pulpit about six or seven years ago, that "God would increase the sensibility of every fibre of these bodies to their fullest extent, and then fill every fibre of these unnaturally sentient bodies with all the pain they can possibly endure throughout the never-ending ages of eternity." Will Inquirer please inform us how will all these beautiful, well-turned sentences, apply to them?

If Inquirer supposes we believe the whole race will be annihilated, he is egregiously mistaken. We believe all the righteous will have immortality bestowed upon them as "the gift of God through Jesus Christ." We believe that "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard," all the glories that God hath in reserve for those who love him. We think it will be time enough to believe that immortality belongs to all the race by natural constitution, when he gives us one text in the whole Bible that affirms it; until then we are constrained to place all his fine-spun sentences in the class of what politicians term "speeches made for buncombe."

Third argument from Scripture—section 1. "Notwithstanding the objections of Mr. Hudson and others, there is no good reason to doubt that the immortality of the human soul is as much assumed in the Bible as the being of God," etc.

If Inquirer had stated what Professor Hudson had said, they could have judged for themselves as to their weight. I should be glad to have all my readers know just what he has said, but as the extracts would be too lengthy for our present purpose, we will give only his conclusions. On page 163 of his most learned work, "Debt and Grace," he says, speaking of God's existence as we find it in the Bible;

"The doctrine of God's existence is the apple of gold in the picture of silver. It is the koh-i-noor—the mountain of light that illumines the volume. It is the central truth that makes the Bible a discourse of God—the word of God. It is the shekinah that imparts sacredness to the Book, so that even sceptics have approached it with awe, as standing on holy ground. And lest this one great truth should weary the devout reader with monotony, it appears in endlessly varying forms, in manifold names of the divine Being and of his glorious attributes. And to arrest the attention and invite the study of reluctant men, the Bible yields a thousand expressions of the power, wisdom, and goodness of God. If we strike out from the record all those passages which tell of his being and his works, we reduce the dimensions of the volume almost by half, we make it a book without sense or meaning, we exchange its radiant light for midnight darkness.

"But if we expunge from the same book all those passages in which the immortality of the soul is mentioned or expressly assumed, we leave the volume unchanged; it remains as it was."

Section 2d—"But the Bible does not leave us without clear and definite witness. I cite but a few of the proof texts," etc. David saith, "Truly, as the Lord liveth, and as the soul liveth." 1 Sam. xx., 3. Here it is assumed by Inquirer that the word soul means what Orthodoxy says it does, which is the very thing to be proved. We have seen that it designates the whole man, as in Gen. ii., 7: "Man became a living soul." We will give a few quotations to show that in all such cases as the one referred to by Inqurer, the man or person is meant. Lev. vii., 20, and onward. "But the soul that eateth of the flesh of the sacrifice—even that soul shall be cut off." "The soul that toucheth any unclean thing, even that soul shall be cut off." The Psalms are full of such cases. Ps. xvi., 10: "For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine holy One to see corruption." Here we have what is termed a parallelism, the latter clause explaining the first. My soul is the same as thine holy One. Does the soul go to sheol? Peter tells us this was a prophecy of Christ's resurrection. Was Christ's soul in the grave—sheol—hell? Psalms xxxv., 4. "Let them be confounded and put to shame that seek after my soul; let them be turned back and be brought to confusion that devise my hurt." Here my soul means evidently me, or my life, verse 7. For without cause have they hid for me their net in a pit, which without cause they have digged for my soul (or me). Verse 12, they rewarded me evil for good to the spoiling of my soul (or me). Psalm x., 14, "Let them be ashamed and confounded together that seek after my soul to destroy it (or me). Let them be driven backward and put to shame that wish me evil." lix., 8. "For lo they lie in wait for my soul (or me); the mighty are gathered against me." Again, "I will say to my soul, soul, thou hast much good laid up for many years, take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry." Here soul is evidently put for man, the person. Does the soul eat, drink, and be merry?

But it is not necessary to multiply examples to this effect. The Bible is full of them. The plain meaning of the passage quoted by Inquirer is, "As the Lord liveth, and as thou livest. In Psalm xi., 5, we have, "The Lord trieth the righteous, but the wicked, and him that loveth violence, his soul hateth." Evidently He hateth. I suppose it will hardly be contended that God has a soul. The next passage quoted is David's lament over the child of Basheba. "Can I bring him back again?" Where from? I would inquire: from the grave, or sheol? or did he mean that he would go up to heaven to try and persuade its soul to come back with him? I cannot see that this passage has any bearing on the question whatever.

The next is Eccl. xii., 7: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the ruach return to God who gave it." Now turn to Psa. civ., 29: The Psalmist is speaking of the "things creeping innumerable, both small and great beasts" in the "wide sea," he says: "Thou takest away their ruach, they die and return to their dust." In Ecclesiastes our translators have seen proper to render ruach, spirit; in this Psalm they have given it its proper rendering, which is breath. Why? Because they were orthodox: I know no other reason. Turn again to Psalm cxlvi., 3, 4: "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His ruach goeth forth, he returneth to his earth (or dust), in that very day his thoughts perish." Here the same passage as in Ecclesiastes is properly translated breath. The next passage quoted is Job's question, which we have examined in a previous article. The next is Isaiah xxv., 6: "He (the Lord of hosts), will swallow up death in victory." Does this take place when man dies? Paul, in 1 Corth. xv., 54, tells us, speaking of the resurrection, "So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, death is swallowed up in victory," referring to this very passage quoted by Inquirer. The next, Math. x., 28, Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul (Psucheen, the accusative of Psuche). Inquirer has only given the first part of the verse, leaving out "but rather fear him which is able to destroy both body and soul in gehenna." So that we see God is able to destroy the soul, if it is immortal.

Let us look now at Math xvi., 25: "For whosoever will save his Psucheen shall lose it, and whosoever shall lose his Psucheen for my sake shall find it. For what is a man profited if he gain the whole world and lose his own Psucheen? or what shall a man give in exchange for his Psucheen?" Let us now refer to the parallel passage in Luke ix., 24, 25, "For whosoever will save his Psucheen shall lose it; but whosoever will lose his Psucheen for my sake, the same shall save it. For what is a man advantaged if he gain the whole world and lose himself, or be a castaway?" Now referring to the passage in Math., in verse 25, Psucheen is twice rendered life, and in the 26th verse the same word is translated soul twice. Some years ago one of the most distinguished theological professors in the country came to Pittsburg, and I went with the crowd to hear him preach. His lesson from the New Testament was chap. xvi. of Matthew. He read as follows: "For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul, or life; or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul, or life?" I said to myself, this is too fine a scholar and too honest a man to be humbugged by translators, or to try to humbug others. Dr. Adam Clarke says, also, that Psucheen in all these passages means life; temporal life and eternal life. The translating it life in one verse, and soul in the next is due to the orthodoxy of the translators.

Luke makes the whole matter plain by saying he shall lose himself, or be a castaway. In other words, be eternally destroyed. So in Matthew x., 28, man can only cause the loss of temporal life; God can destroy the whole man in gehenna, which is the figure of total destruction. This word gehenna, translated hell, is found some fifteen or sixteen times in the Old Testament, and is always called the valley of Hinnom, which is its literal meaning, from Ge, valley, and Hinnom, the name of the man who once owned it, and after whom it was called. But from the very first of its appearance in the New Testament, our translators render it hell. This valley lies just outside of Jerusalem, on the south and east side of the city, and was the place where all the dead carcasses of animals, and sometimes of malefactors, and all the refuse matters of the city were taken to be destroyed; for this purpose fires were kept constantly burning. It was to the Jews, to whom our Saviour was speaking, the emblem or figure of entire destruction, and was so understood by them. Around the fires were seen the worms rioting in the filth which escaped the action of the fire, and it was a proverbial expression of the Jews, "where there worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched," signifying the total destruction of everything cast into gehenna. Read the last verse of the last chapter of Isaiah, and this will be apparent. Gehenna was not a place of punishment or suffering, but only for the destruction of the accumulated filth of Jerusalem that otherwise might have produced pestilence.

The next is the vision of John, Rev. xx., 2, "I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God." Does this prove they had immortal souls? They and were judged and cast into the "lake of fire and brimstone, which is the second death." "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire and brimstone." The whole of this language shows that it is symbolical, and what these symbols teach no man knows, except that we know it is symbol of total destruction. The whole book is symbolical, and enough of the symbols have already been explained by the facts which have occurred during the past seventeen hundred years to show us that it is a political book, foretelling the wars of the fourth or Roman Empire in its civil and ecclesiastical forms, by which the enemies of Christ attempt to prevent the establishment of his kingdom on earth, and the final triumph of Christ over his enemies. It is demanded by orthodox theologians themselves that Revelation must never be relied upon as the basis of any doctrine, so that we shall pass this quotation by, as irrelevant to the question.

The next is, "the doctrine of immortality was current among the Jews," Math. xiv., 2. Herod said, "This is John the Baptist, he is risen from the dead." This proves that Herod believed in the resurrection of dead persons, which is just what destructionists believe, in opposition to a belief in a soul, especially an immortal soul. If there is an immortal soul in heaven, where is there any need of a resurrection of the body? Orthodoxy claims that the body is only a cage, or cell, in which the soul is imprisoned, and that the soul is much better off without it. Why bring the soul back and put it into the cage again? This doctrine of an immortal soul that lives in heaven without the body, is in fact fatal to the doctrine of a resurrection? Luther denied the doctrine, and Chancellor Moore, an excellent and learned Catholic, attacked Luther's doctrines. Mr. Tyndale, the translator of the Bible into the English language, and who afterward suffered martyrdom at the hands of the Catholics, replied to Moore. He said in his answer to Moore, page 180–1: "And ye, in putting the souls of the dead in heaven, hell, and purgatory, destroy the arguments wherewith Christ and Paul prove the resurrection. If the souls be in heaven, tell me why they be not in as good case as the angels? and then what need is there of a resurrection?" Perhaps Inquirer can tell us.

Paul, in 1 Cor. xv., says: "If the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised; and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain: ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Could Paul say this if their souls were in heaven? Mark the expression, "then they also." This also shows that there were some [the wicked] who had perished; and Christians would be in the same category if there was no resurrection. He goes on to say, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." Could he say this if their souls, which orthodoxy says are the real persons, were to go to heaven at death to enjoy the inexpressible glories of the heavenly state? "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." If there is no resurrection, that is clearly the end of us. Now, how could Paul say all this if he knew at death his soul would be with his Saviour in heaven? Paul says, "Our life is hid with Christ in God, and when he who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory." Paul always refers to Christ's second coming as the time when all his followers shall receive their reward.

J. K. FINLEY.

BRUTE INTELLIGENCE.

THE theology of the day possesses the human race with living entities which are termed intelligences upon the assumption that without such a possession men would not be intelligent creatures; that man, as a simple animate organization, is incapable of reasoning, or of developing intelligence. This idea is, of course, nothing new, but is as old as the immortal soul theory, in the interests of which it was conceived and is perpetuated. To make this theory effective, reasoning intelligence must, of necessity, be denied to all animals inferior to man, nothing being allowed them higher than what these would-be profound theorists denominate instinct. Webster defines instinct as "a certain power or disposition of mind, by which, independent of all instruction or experience, without deliberation, and without having any end in view, animals are unerringly directed to do spontaneously whatever is necessary for the preservation of the individual or the continuation of the kind." If, then, admitting instinct to be a principle so widely differing from reason that it cannot be justly considered as connected in any way with that quality of intelligence, we find some of the lower orders of animals giving evidence that they sometimes act with "deliberation" and with some "end in view," and that, too, under circumstances entirely new to them, and without any incentive to self-preservation, we may safely accord to such, at least, the possession of reasoning faculties, be those powers peculiar only to something styled immortal, or not.

So much stress is laid in these days upon man's reasoning powers; so often is his intelligence flaunted by boasting claimants to immortality—a favor which it cannot be proved has ever been conferred on any human being but Jesus—that we love to sometimes show, from authenticated cases, that those qualities of mind, which man arrogates to himself alone, may be found, in various stages of development, walking on four feet, flying through the air, crawling upon the earth, and swiming through the sea.

"While living at Durham," says Dr. Warwick, "I took a walk one evening in Lord Stamford's park. On reaching a pond in which fish were kept ready for use, I observed a fine pike of some six pounds weight. At my approach he darted away like an arrow. In his hurry he knocked his head against an iron hook fixed in a post in the water, fracturing his skull and injuring the optic nerve on one side of his head. He appeared to suffer great pain; he plunged into the mud, floundered hither and thither, and at last, leaping out of the water, fell on the bank. On examination a portion of the brain was seen protruding through the fractured skull. This I carefully restored to its place, making use of a small silver toothpick to raise the splinters of broken bone. The fish remained quiet during the operation; when it was over he plunged into the pond. At first his sufferings appeared to be relieved; but in the course of a few minutes he began rushing right and left until he again leaped out of the water. I called the keeper, and with his assistance applied a bandage to the fracture. That done, we restored him to the pond and left him to his fate. Next morning, as soon as I reached the water's edge, the pike swam to meet me quite close to the bank, and laid his head upon my feet. I thought this an extraordinary proceeding. Without further delay, I examined the wound and found it healing nicely. I then strolled for sometime by the side of the pond. The fish swam after me, following my steps, and turning as I turned. The following day, I brought some young friends with me to see the fish. He swam toward me as before. Little by little he became so tame as to come to my whistle and eat out of my hand. With other persons, on the contrary, he continued as shy and as wild as ever."

This anecdote is averred to have been read, in 1850, before the Liverpool Literary and Philosophical Society. Who will deny that the pike proved himself not only intelligent, but even capable, singular though it may seem, of gratitude.

Both revenge and gratitude imply intelligence; still more so does the application of an unforseen expedient. These are demonstrated in the following incidents published in a New York journal.

"In Madagascar, an elephant's cornac, happening to have a cocoa-nut in his hand, thought fit, out of bravado, to break it on the animal's head. The elephant made no protest at the time; but next day, passing a fruit-stall, he took a a cocoa-nut in his trunk and returned the cornac's compliment so vigorously on his head that he killed him on the spot."

"At Pondickerry, a soldier who treated an elephant to a dram of arrack every time he received his pay, found himself one day the worse for liquor. When the guard were about to carry him off to prison, he took refuge under the elephant and fell asleep. His protector would allow no one to approach, and watched him carefully all night. In the morning, after caressing him with his trunk, he dismissed him to settle with the authorities as he best could."

"A train of artillery going to Seringapatam, had to cross the bed of a river. A man who was sitting on a gun-carriage, fell; in another second the wheel would have passed over his body. An elephant walking by the side of the carriage saw the danger, and instantly, without any order from his keeper, lifted the wheel from the ground, leaving the fallen man uninjured?"

The same journal has the following:

"At Clemency, on the border, of Switzerland, a wolf, toward nightfall, entered the village, and immediately gave chase to a small terrier belonging to no one in particular. Instead of taking shelter in the nearest cottage, the dog rushed on to the end of the hamlet, and, entering a wheelwright's yard, leaped safe and sound into the kennel of a huge mastiff. The wolf had followed too closely to recede, and the mastiff, in spite of a heavy chain that cramped his movements, darted out suddenly and seized the wolf by the skin of the back. The sequel was remarkable. The mastiff, impeded by his chain, began to yield to the struggles of the wolf, which was a full-grown powerful beast, when, just at the right moment, another large dog arrived at full speed, accompanied by the little terrier, who had evidently seen his comrade's need of assistance, and gone off to procure it. This unexpected ally put an end to the conflict, and the wolf was speedily mastered."

We do not note these instances because proof of the existence of reasoning faculties in brute animals is any way slight, for no observer, willing to acknowledge the truth, can fail to see it, but for the benefit of some who will not receive any evidence, short of overwhelming, that makes against their theory.

REV. J. HYATT SMITH'S THEOLOGY.

BY ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

I LISTENED last Sunday evening to Rev. J. Hyatt Smith, of the Lee Ave. Baptist Church, Brooklyn. Subject, "The superiority of the Redeemed Saints over Angels." The Rev. gentleman read for his text the language of the Son of God to the thief on the cross—the language of the Saviour in John vi., in part; and, also, the words of Paul 1 Cor. xv., 42–45.

The object, manifestly, was not to explain fully all this amount of Christ's doctrine; but to use these scriptures as illustrations of the speaker's position. We might even commend the verbiage if not the action of the preacher's discourse; but the doctrine and strange sentiments of the man will allow of some criticisms; especially, when his bold and defiant manner is considered. Yet it is time-serving, we should say, with respect to the mass who would be likely to agree with him in his expressed sentiments. I say expressed; for how a man believes, as he declared he does, and at the same time can announce some views that he did, in good faith, it is impossible to determine.

He declared that Jesus said to the thief on the cross—"To-day," i.e., now, "shalt thou be with me in paradise." We know that semeron may well be translated now; but how Jesus or the thief could then be (at the time he spake) in paradise we do not know; nor does the Rev. gentleman. He confessed he did not know where paradise is, or was then; but told us it must be a state of perfect happiness, and might not be so far off as some imagine, but very near, as heaven and hell might elbow each other. Implying of course that spirits (as of the thief and Jesus) might mingle in the close neighborhood of hell. Whether he meant hades or a pit of fire, did not appear.

He said that the spirit did not remain with the body; i.e., in the grave with that corruption. But it required the speaker's fancy with much action to teach us where it did stop. Would it not have been well for the speaker to have quoted scripture? But the word would have told him that the spirit was with the Lord and of the Lord; and consequently teaches the sleep of the dead. This certainly would have been a good citation, "Then shall the dust return to the dust as it was, but the spirit to God who gave it." Perhaps he saw that if the dust would consist as it did before the being was organized, the spirit would consist as it did before it came from God!

He stated that he did not think that the idea of the lapse of time was a valid objection to the sleeping of men in Jesus (unconsciously), which he said some there might believe, but he did not. (Why did he take so much pains to tell us, unless he feared we might suspect him?) The objection was nothing, becauset of the perfect sleep and in the resurrection (which, by the way, he insisted upon as essential to the perfection of bliss) there would be no realization of passing time. Time only referred to this world. (How about Christ and the thief in a perfect state—paradise without the resurrection?)

But he did offer one proof that the spirit live and is conscious—the conscious man. It was this: "Moses was dead! Yet Moses appeared on the Mount of Transfiguration!" Wonderful! He forgot that there was a miniature representation, by vision, on that mountain, of the kingdom of God, in which, not spirits, but real men are presented. And Jesus calls it a vision. Upon Lazarus, whom the Lord raised, he gave his hearers a most wonderful lesson. Lazarus was dead and the spirit gone. The Jews believed that the spirit lingered round for four days; even till decomposition took place, generally and thoroughly, to find some avenue of entrance. But after four days, it must go. This was the explanation of the sister's remark. Received thankfully! So Jesus spake with a loud voice that Lazarus might hear in heaven. Lazarus did hear in heaven! He dropped the enjoyments and the employments of heaven (one would think, by the orator's action as children drop their toys), saying to his fellows in glory (and consequently glorified beings), "the Master calls," and came so quickly to wake up the corporeal Lazarus, that there was no lapse of time after Jesus spake before the body (Lazarus in fact) began to move out of the cave.

Heaven was amazing near hell, that time, forsooth!

Somehow, this minister makes me think of the unconverted man (not that I would charge him with an ignorance of grace) who, when the tract distribution came into his place of business, asked, "What are these things for?" "Why" said the distributor, "these are to teach us how to go up." "Oh, I am all ready to fly," said the man. "But are you sure you will be ready to land on that celestial shore above?" said the other. "Yes, if you fellows will let me alone, that I may navigate my own schooner," was the reply.

Our preachers finally came to his argument which was, that the saints, in the resurrection condition, will be like the Lord Jesus Christ in his resurrection, and, therefore, above angels! All very well. He uttered here some sentiments which I wonder how he could gain or hold in connection with the fancies he flung off at other points, unless he had drunk at a fountain which he dare not, in the least, confess.

Among other things, he said that Christ went to heaven with a human body, and that a human head wore the crown which the son of God received; also, that a human hand held the sceptre of power which the Father had given to him. Well, indeed! But what a commixture of error and truth we have as a whole, in the piece of the evening.

Lest he should leave the hope of the resurrection (the hope of the church in the resurrection) clear, after having announced it—and having thus disputed his previous position—if his fanciful declarations deserve the name—he must be sure to inform us that, as a part of this hope, the resurrection of the wicked to a living damnation would transpire. There must indeed be a wonderful power in the resurrection of Christ to give a hope of future life and superiority over angels, when all men will have a resurrection, whether in Christ or not, and will live in the future, whether they rise or not, and live because they are naturally immortal. So there is no special matter about Christ! Thus with all their preaching of Christ, they ignore the real power which God wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead!

Strange that men will make the resurrection necessary to rewards and punishments, and yet contend that men receive them as soon as they die!

The great trouble in this case appeared to be a disposition to employ the traditions of men, in connection with the word of God. These traditions contradict the plain testimony of the Lord. The Lord speaks plainly, as to the condition of the future, and the power to secure it; while the speculations of men, aside from his voice, are but the miserable conflicting light of heathenism.

ADVENT MOVEMENT IN ENGLAND.

[There has been a Society formed recently, called "The London British and Foreign Second Advent Publishing Company." It is issuing a paper called "The Watchman of Ephraim." The following extract from its "Prospectus" will give some idea of its objects.]

"AT no period of the world's history have there been such accumulative indications of some mighty and momentous change impending over the nations as at the present moment. There is a palpable tremor of anxiety and expectation passing over the whole aspect of the religious, moral, social, and intellectual world, closely resembling that undefined dread which appears in the faces of people who watch the gradual development of the signs of an approaching earthquake. The religious world trembles from centre to circumference with a strange excitement, and unconcealed dread of change. Doctrines, rituals, creeds, ceremonies, all clash and jostle together in a manner resembling the vibrations which pass through human dwellings and material constructions which lie immediately over the seat of volcanic action, giving sure indications of a rapidly approaching upheaval. In the moral world, ancient standards and landmarks are already thrown down, and Pagan theories of spiritual wives and other sensual devices and practices are regarded not with regret and dismay, but with toleration. In the intellectual world, the human mind runs riot in the wildest speculations. In the material world, there have been earthquakes many, and wars, and rumors of war, little and great; to say nothing of that extraordinary uprising which is only now subsiding in the Western Hemisphere—of that Titanic contest which, as regards the vastness of the theatre of operations, and the gigantic waste of blood and treasure which flowed from it, far surpassed everything which the world has ever witnessed in the same space of time; to say nothing of the late sharp and decisive conflict in the centre of Europe, which rolled the smoke of battle up to the gates of Vienna, and at one blow swept away half the dominions of an ancient empire.

"To say nothing of these accomplished facts and significant signs of the times, the most advanced nations of the world at this very moment stand surveying each other in an attitude of watchful solicitude, as if expecting the opening of some magnificent drama, improving their implements of war to the very verge of destructive perfection, probing the sources of their wealth and strength, and carefully ascertaining and husbanding their material resources, as though preparing for an awful and final contest. At such a crisis it is the solemn duty of every true Christian to use all energies, efforts, and means to prepare men's minds for the evanishment of an era which is now so plainly closing up, and the approach of the new and better dispensation. It is an awful consideration that tens of millions are now entombed in gross darkness upon these glorious doctrines. So largely did the prophets dwell upon them, with all the accompanying glories, that the Jewish nation was led to fix its exclusive attention on these predictions, and totally to overlook others which declared that Christ was to suffer before he was to reign.

"The holy apostles, in their writings, continually urge the second appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ as the present motive to enforce all their exhortations to holiness of heart and life. Our Blessed Lord's own discourses, moreover, are full of this subject. Nearly all His parables have reference to it. His admonitions to the disciples to watchfulness and prayer are founded upon it.

"We feel, moreover, at this momentous epoch, the most solemn conviction of the speedy closing up of this age; and that if all who love our Saviour, and look and wait for his glorious appearing, were brought to a unity of mind on this great question, it would go far, under God's blessing, to awaken the careless and worldly multitude.

"For the diffusion and defence of the great truths of the gospel in these days of abounding heresy and infidelity, it is the incumbent duty of all who are loyal to the standard of the cross to use the mighty power of the 'press' for the glory of Christ and the good of souls—the vindication of the near Advent of the Lord. It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of this sacred doctrine. It is pre-eminently the doctrine needed, with an army of teachers by press and pulpit, to give consistency and completeness to other truths most surely believed among us."

The "Six Sermons:" Cheap Edition.

We have given notice that a cheap edition of the above-named Sermons is issued. This edition contains all the matter of the more costly ones. The only difference is, they are printed on a cheaper paper, and we now offer them at 16 cents single copy, or $12 by the hundred, sent in either case at the expense of the purchaser. They may be considered as among the Campaign Documents; and when ordered in connection with an assortment of those documents, we shall put them in at 14 cents per copy, and postage, which is two cents each.

G. H. Buzzell, Concord, N. H., sends a new subscriber, and writes: It seems the Life doctrine gains some ground in almost every place, though it meets with opposition. The statement that it is a "dangerous and fatal error" is a mere assumption. So far as my observation goes, prejudice is at the bottom of the opposition. I am glad there are a few in this place who dare to think for themselves. Quite a number here have become more or less favorable; and it is remarkable that it should be so, with so little effort. We seem to have the advantage of some; for while they have stuck their stakes and are "kicking against the pricks," we are out in a large field and wish for all the truth we can get, and are willing to change error for truth any time, and think we make a profit thereby.

Hypocrisy.—Many who would not for the world utter a falsehood are yet eternally scheming to procure false impressions on the minds of others respecting fact, characters, and opinions.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MARCH 3, 1869.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

Last Week's Paper.

If any of our subscribers failed to receive their paper of last week, please inform us immediately and we will supply it. From facts before us, we fear that some have not received it, which we regret. We do the best we can to have all these matters attended to in a correct manner, but we have not eyes to see to everybody and every item till the paper gets to its destination.

The Tract on the Devil will not be published till we receive, at least, $75 or $80 in pledges. As yet they are less than $30. We have frequent calls for it, but at present cannot supply it.

One Dollar Subscribers.—We will still supply the last 30 numbers of the present volume of the Herald of Life to new subscribers for $1. Now is the time to avail yourselves of this offer. Let there be no delay.

Campaign Documents.

Please look at our list of these on the last page, and help with funds to print more. Many are ready to distribute them, and this is likely to be one of our best agencies in scattering our Life views. They preach where no other preacher can gain access.

From Ex-Chancellor Halsted.

[It has been months since we had heard anything from this aged lover of truth, and we feared he had passed away from this life. Inquiries frequently were made of us about him and his "Theology of the Bible." At length, we wrote him, uncertain if our letter would find his whereabouts, as we heard a report, some months since, that he had removed from Newark, N. J., into the country. After waiting several days, we were gladdened by the reception of the following letter, which we lay before our readers without abridging, because we know they are interested in whatever he may say relating to the Life views. We have no idea he intended the letter for the public, but he must excuse us for gratifying the desire of our friends to hear from him.—Ed.]

Newark, N. J., Feb. 22, 1869.

Rev. Geo. Storrs—My Dear Friend and Brother: Your esteemed favor of the 18th was received the 20th. To your kind inquiry, "How you are?" I am thankful to be able to say, I am in excellent health. To your inquiry, "Where you are?" I am happy to inform you, that I am on a beautifully-situated tract of land of about forty-four acres, two and a half miles from Newark, about half way between Newark and Elizabeth, a little west of what is called the upper road between the two cities, and commanding an extensive and beautiful view. The site is so charming that I have often, in thought, applied to it the Italian expression in reference to Naples and the surrounding country: "Un pezzo di cielo caduto in terra"—a piece of heaven (the heavens) fallen down upon earth. I indulge the hope that you will visit it one of these days, when you may tell me whether there is much extravagance in the thought.

One of my age, who has passed through the struggle of life, and seen so much of its cares, toils, hopes, fears, ambitions, excitements, and disappointments, and has been sustained through such varied labors, should feel the deepest gratitude toward the Giver of all good that he is permitted to enjoy the quiet and pleasantness of such a spot of earth to pass what of time may remain to him, as on a narrow isthmus connecting this life with that which you and I hope, by the grace of God, to receive from the grave. How difficult it is for us to obtain a realizing sense of the glorious truth that to them who shall be accounted just, and so be children of the resurrection, this life, and that from death, will, to their senses, be so connected as to seem but one; that such are, therefore, even now, in possession of immortality, for there is no consciousness in the grave, and, consequently, no time. To them who shall be awakened from among the dead, the life eternal will seem but a continuation, without a pause, of the life temporal.

You and I have lived long enough to know and feel that the one great interest in this life is in the hope of the promised redemption through the merits, death, and resuscitation of God's dear Son. Secondary, to this one great personal interest, they who believe they have found God's revealed truth in its simplicity and purity, stripped of the corruptions and errors under which it has in so great a degree been hidden for centuries, cannot but feel a deep interest in its spread among their dying fellow men.

I read the Herald of Life with great interest and much profit. I believe it to be the best religious paper in the world. Its Editor, long a teacher of error as a distinguished minister of the Methodist Episcopal persuasion, had the intellect to perceive, in his riper years, and the honesty to confess, that he had been a false teacher. That same intellect and honesty made him the able champion of the truth when he had found it. Another distinctive superiority of the paper is, that its correspondents are of those who have accepted the truth, and have the zeal and ability to maintain it triumphantly.

Having been led to the study of the original Scriptures for my own instruction in their teachings, and having become satisfied in my own mind what those teachings are, and, as I trust, accepted them with a measure of that thankfulness with which their glad tidings should fill every heart, it is a source of ever-recurring pleasure to me to have there learned that the system I found to be taught in the original was the same in all its parts with that which the Rev. George Storrs had reached by a different line of investigation and course of study, and which he had been promulgating as Editor of a public paper—the Herald of Life—all the while I had been engaged in my Biblical labors, and, it may be, before I commenced them.*

You once gave me, my dear sir, in conversation at your house, a succinct account of the steps by which you advanced from one truth to another, dispelling one error after another, until at length the light of the great truth—Life only through Christ, and eternal extinction of being to the wicked, broke upon your mind and dispelled your every remaining difficulty. I was deeply interested in the narrative. It gave affecting proof of the mental pains and labors it cost you to struggle on through hoary errors, one after another, to which your own mind had long yielded so implicitly that you were a public preacher of them. I was not subjected to so much anxiety of mind and trouble of spirit. I could breathe more freely in pursuing the work I undertook. My task was comparatively easy. It was not that of arguing the questions involved. They had been argued for centuries, and volumes without number written in reference to them, and yet the diversity of sects and opinions was greater than ever. To my mind this state of things could not have arisen from the true Bible itself if that was a revelation from God, but must have been the result of the inventions of men who had assumed to be wise above what is written. Under such circumstances I was unwilling to rest my faith and hope upon any of the numerous commentators and so-called theological writers, or upon any so-called translation. The question with me was, What does the Bible really teach? I saw no sure way of finding what God's revelation taught but by going to the languages in which it was given. To this fountain, therefore, I went, and I soon found that the true meaning of a few leading Scripture words would settle all controversy as to the system revealed. To prove their meaning, these words were followed through the entire Scriptures. Such mistakes in our English version as I met with in my course I noticed. A gentleman of high culture and great attainments expressed to me his admiration that I should have hit upon a plan which had never before been adopted, adding, "You don't argue the questions, you give the facts, and every one can judge for himself." My answer was, that the questions involved had been argued for centuries, and opinions in reference to them were more diversified than ever.

You and I, dear sir, followed different courses, each unknown to the other. I am unable adequately to express my delight on finding that we reached the same conclusions. Yet this should be no cause of surprise. The truth, when reached, no matter by what different routes, is one and the same. And every truth agrees with every other truth.

You inquire whether I have any copies of "The Theology of the Bible" on hand, and whether I will still send the work to the subscribers of the Herald of Life for $2? To this I am glad to say that I have up to this time continued to receive letters from such subscribers, from time to time, enclosing $2, and have always mailed a copy according to request, and prepaid the postage. I shall continue to do so with the copies I have on hand, and my purpose is to keep up a supply. Applications from others than your subscribers indicate that the book has made an impression, and is working its way.

I still get my letters at the Newark post-office. My box is 91. They may be addressed to me, Box 91, Newark, New Jersey. Letters addressed as before, 417 Broad Street, are put into my box.

And now, brother in "the blessed hope," may your life be precious in God's sight, and may He continue to you health and strength to vindicate his truth until all the corruptions and blasphemies of anti-Christ, infecting and repeated by so many so-called churches, shall disappear in the sunlight of eternal truth. Faithfully, your friend and brother in the hope of life beyond the grave, O. S. Halsted.

[* We published a monthly magazine, the "Bible Examiner," for twenty years prior to the commencement of the Herald of Life.—Ed.]

"In Paradise."

. . . . . . . A correspondent of the Herald of Life (Nov. 4, 1868) gives a quotation from Judge Halsted's "Theology of the Bible"—a work which we have not seen—which is supposed to make all plain! The Judge says:

"In Luke xxiii., 43, we have, Gr., 'And said to him, Jesus: Verily, I say to thee, this day with me thou wilt be in to paradeiso, in garden' [without our article; [Lat., in paradiso, garden: Douay, in paradise; Ital., in paradiso; E. V., in paradise. The Ital., the Douay, and E. V. give their respective words in paradiso [in garden], in paradise, without the article. This is right, for garden is here used in an abstract sense, not of any particular garden: so when Jesus saith, 'thou wilt be with me in garden,' it means, with me in burial; i.e., in a grave from which thou wilt be raised to life again; from which thou wilt be made a partaker of resurrection, equivalent to 'the bosom of Abraham' in another place, meaning the same thing, a grave from which there will be a resurrection."

Then after referring to 2 Kings, xxi., 18, 26, and John xix., 41, and to the fact that "certain places were appropriated by the Jews for the purpose of burying the dead, and they were usually in gardens," we are told:

"We now see that Jesus' words to the thief on the cross, 'With me thou wilt be in paradeiscis,' garden, mean with me thou wilt be in burial; in contradistinction to what is said of the wicked in Job xxvii., 15."

As the phrase, "In garden with me," is pronounced "simple and rational," we must of course accept the interpretation given of the text as being equally so, and the sublime promise of our Lord amounts to an assurance that He and the penitent thief would be "in burial" together! How wonderfully lucid the passage is now! We never supposed the body of the penitent thief was buried "in the garden" with Christ—we never before knew what become of it, but always thought it likely that it shared the same fate as the body of the impenitent one, and that the thief who railed at Christ but did not pray was as much with Him "in burial" as the one who said, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom"—but if the Judge's decision is correct we were mistaken.

The above we clipped from the "Advent Herald" of the 23d ult. The marked misapprehension of our "orthodox" brother, of that paper, induces us to lend him our aid in comprehending Judge Halsted's idea; for it is clear he has wholly "mistaken" it.

To be "buried with Christ" is not to be buried at the same time or in the same place, as our Br. seems to suppose, any more than to be "raised with Christ" (Eph. ii., 6) is to be raised at the same time and place with Him. To be buried with Christ is to have a union with Christ at death, and so dying in Him—when ever that death may occur—we are buried with Him as a member of His body—the Church—and thus a resurrection from the dead is secured; for Jesus has said, "The gates of hades shall not prevail against my church." The resurrection of all its members is secured by the promise of Christ. Such a promise no "impenitent" man has. The impenitent are not buried with Christ in any sense: they are buried in their sins, with no resurrection principle in them; and having "wandered out of the way of understanding," they "remain in the congregation of the dead." Prov. xxi., 16. "The sting of death" was not removed, and they "are holden with the cords of their sins." Prov. v., 22. "The sting of death is sin: and the strength of sin is the law." 1 Corth. xv., 56. "But thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ:" verse 57. How came they with the victory over death and the grave? Because they "fell asleep in Christ;" verse 18; hence were "buried with Christ"—had a burial connected with Him, who is "the resurrection and the life." Such a burial the "impenitent thief" had not.

Does our Br. of the "Advent Herald" begin to see that he was "mistaken" in his construction of Judge Halsted's language? Does he see no difference between the burial of a sinner and that of one in Christ? To be "in burial together" with Christ, is not, we repeat it, being put in the same garden, tomb, or grave; or being buried at the same time; and Judge Halsted made no such foolish statement: nor was he talking of an "orthodox" burial of a mere "body," but of the personal burial of the man.

"Christ died . . . and He was buried, and He rose again," etc., 1 Corth. xv., 3, 4. His burial was one from which He would be revived into life, to die no more. Those who go into the grave united to Him are buried with Him; and because "the Spirit of Him who raised up Jesus from the dead dwells in them, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken their mortal bodies by His Spirit which dwells in them." Rom. viii., 11.

Will our Br. persist in overlooking the fact that to be buried with Christ is to die in Him, and thus to be assured that his resurrection from the dead is made certain? Will he still call such an assurance a trifling affair, and treat it with ridicule, as he has done in his remarks before us? Look at his language. The Judge's "interpretation," the "Advent Herald" tells us, "amounts to assurance (from our Lord) that He and the penitent thief would be 'in burial' together! How wonderfully lucid the passage is now!" We might respond, "how wonderful" is our Br.'s understanding of what Judge Halsted had said.

The "Advent Herald" adds, "We never supposed the body of the penitent thief was buried 'in the garden' with Christ; we never knew what become of it," etc. Indeed! nor did Judge Halsted tell you or any one else what became of it:" he was talking of the thief, and said nothing of his "body." Our Lord addressed the thief, not his "body," but the man; nor did He say anything of His or the thief's soul; but "thou shalt be with me," etc. Nothing is said of body or soul: the person — Jesus — addressed the person—the man whose penitence had moved the heart of Jesus to make the promise that "because I live ye shall live also." John xiv., 19. You shall have a burial with me, who am the resurrection and the life; hence your prayer shall be answered when I come into my "kingdom"—"at the last day." John vi., 40, 44, 54.

That Christ did not go into the "orthodox" paradise for three days after His death, He himself testifies, when He said to Mary, "Touch Me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father." John xx., 17. This was after His resurrection. There is no escape from this testimony by saying, He had not ascended in His body, but His soul had been there. He says, "I" and "Me" to Mary. He said to the thief, thou shalt be with "Me." Here is the same personality in both cases. If "Me" meant His soul when He addressed the thief, it equally means His soul when He addressed Mary: and Jesus affirms He had not ascended to his Father, three days after the promise to the thief. "Orthodox Adventists" may say, "paradise is in the under-world; and not up in heaven." But against all such special pleading we urge Paul's statement, 2 Corth. xii., where he speaks of "a man caught up to the third heaven," and repeating the statement, says, "he was caught up into paradise." That does not look much like an "under-world paradise." The Bible paradise differs widely from orthodoxy's paradise, whatever view is taken of the matter.

As to the "Advent Herald's" remark, that it always thought the penitent thief's body "shared the same fate as the body of the impenitent one," Judge Halsted has said nothing about that. But has our Br. "always supposed" the penitent and impenitent are buried alike? that is, that they are alike buried in hope? Is not "the wicked driven away in his wickedness," while "the righteous has hope in his death?" Prov. xiv., 32. Is not the latter buried in hope of a resurrection "at the last day?" Will he maintain the wicked are buried with the same hope? If not, is it not a "sublime promise of our Lord" that His friends shall share in his burial, thus securing their resurrection, as certain as the Head cannot live without its Body (the church)?

We trust when our Br. comes to see Judge Halsted's view in its true light his mind will change on the subject. But to see it truly he must have the eclipse removed. A dark "body" has got between his vision and the glorious sun of eternal truth. There is but one way for its removal; that is, to talk of man as man, and not split him up into fragments. God made man—threatened man—man dies; and if another life is ever had, it will be because man is raised from the dead, and not barely a "body."

Literal Fulfilment of Prophecy.

EZEK. XXXVII., FURTHER EXAMINED.

There is but one other interpretation that can seriously claim our attention: that is—That the literal posterity of Jacob, in the flesh, are to be gathered into the land between the river of Egypt and the great river Euphrates. Let us now try the prophecy Ezek. xxxvii., 15–28, and see if all the parts can be made to harmonize in such an interpretation.

First. Was the land of Canaan "their own land?" See Gen. xv., 18, "In that same day the Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates." Also, Psa. cv., 6–12, "O ye seed of Abraham his servant, ye children of Jacob his chosen. He is the Lord our God: his judgments are in all the earth. He hath remembered his covenant forever, the word which he commanded to a thousand generations. Which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac; and confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant: saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan the lot of your inheritance: when they were but a few men in number; yea, very few, and strangers in it." Texts might be easily multiplied to prove this point, but these, we judge, are quite sufficient.

Second. Was the posterity of Jacob divided into "two nations?" 1 Kings xi., 31, "And he said to Jeroboam, Take thee ten pieces: for thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, Behold, I will rend the kingdom out of the hand of Solomon, and will give ten tribes to thee." And xii., 20–24, "And it came to pass, when all Israel heard that Jeroboam was come again, that they sent and called him unto the congregation, and made him king over all Israel: there was none that followed the house of David, but the tribe of Judah only. And when Rehoboam was come to Jerusalem, he assembled all the house of Judah, with the tribe of Benjamin, an hundred and fourscore thousand chosen men, which were warriors, to fight against the house of Israel, to bring the kingdom again to Rehoboam, the son of Solomon. But the word of God came unto Shemaiah, the man of God, saying, Speak unto Rehoboam, the son of Solomon, king of Judah, and unto all the house of Judah and Benjamin, and the remnant of the people, saying: Thus saith the Lord, Ye shall not go up, nor fight against your brethren the children of Israel; return every man to his house; for the thing is from me. They hearkened therefore to the word of the Lord, and returned to depart, according to the word of the Lord." That point is settled.

Third. Did they go forth "among the heathen?" See 2 Kings xvii., 6, 20–24, "In the ninth year of Hoshea, the king of Assyria took Samaria, and carried Israel away into Assyria, and placed them in Halah and in Habor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes." "And the Lord rejected all the seed of Israel, and afflicted them, and delivered them into the hand of spoilers, until he had cast them out of his sight. For he rent Israel from the house of David; and they made Jeroboam the son of Nebat king: and Jeroboam drave Israel from following the Lord, and made them sin a great sin. For the children of Israel walked in all the sins of Jeroboam which he did: they departed not from them; until the Lord removed Israel out of his sight, as he had said by all his servants the prophets. So was Israel carried away out of their own land to Assyria unto this day. And the king of Assyria brought men from Babylon, and from Cuthah, and from Ava, and from Hamath, and from Sepharvaim, and placed them in the cities of Samaria, instead of the children of Israel: and they possessed Samaria, and dwelt in the cities thereof." As to the nation of Judah, or the Jews, they were scattered into all nations after the destruction of Jerusalem. Here then is a fulfilment.

Fourth. Can the remnant of the literal posterity of Jacob, in the flesh, be gathered into the land of Canaan? We think we have already demonstrated this in our previous numbers: but look at Isa. lxvi., 20, "And they shall bring all your brethren for an offering unto the Lord, out of all nations, upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the Lord, as the children of Israel bring an offering in a clean vessel into the house of the Lord." Also, Jer. xxxii., 37–44, "Behold, I will gather them out of all countries, whither I have driven them in mine anger, and in my fury, and in great wrath; and I will bring them again unto this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God: and I will give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear me forever, for the good of them, and their children after them: and I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me. Yea, I will rejoice over them to do them good, and I will plant them in this land assuredly with my whole heart, and with my whole soul. For thus saith the Lord: Like as I have brought all this great evil upon this people, so will I bring upon them all the good that I have promised them. And fields shall be bought in this land, whereof ye say, It is desolate without man or beast; it is given into the hand of the Chaldeans. Men shall buy fields for money, and subscribe evidences, and seal them, and take witnesses in the land of Benjamin, and in the places about Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, and in the cities of the mountains, and in the cities of the valley, and in the cities of the south: for I will cause their captivity to return, saith the Lord." And Jer. xxxiii., 7–9, "I will cause the captivity of Judah [one nation] and the captivity of Israel [the other nation] to return, and I will build them as at the first." "And I will cleanse them from all their iniquity, whereby they have sinned against me; and I will pardon all their iniquities, whereby they have sinned, and whereby they have transgressed against me. And it shall be to me a name of joy, a praise and an honor before all the nations of the earth, which shall hear all the good that I do unto them: and they shall fear and tremble for all the goodness and for all the prosperity that I procure unto it." So when this event shall occur there shall still be "nations" upon "earth," who "shall hear all the good that" God will do to Judah and Israel, when he has gathered them. They are to be built "as at the first." They were "one nation, at the first."

The Lord next administers a reproof, which we all should do well to hear—verses 23, 24, "Moreover the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, saying, Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, The two families which the Lord hath chosen, he hath even cast them off? Thus they have despised my people, that they should be no more a nation before them."

Fifth. Can they be brought into "the land wherein their fathers have dwelt?" Not if this gathering is the "elect remnant," brought up in the "resurrection" upon the new earth, after the final conflagration; for, we repeat it, their fathers never dwelt there. But if we understand literal Judah and Israel, we have shown it can be done.

Sixth. Can they be united again in one nation under one king? See Hosea i., 11, and 3, 4, 5, "Then shall the children of Judah and the children of Israel be gathered together, and appoint themselves one head, and they shall come up out of the land: for great shall be the day of Jezreel." "For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod and without teraphim: Afterward shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days." Also Isa. xi., 12, 13, "And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth. The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off: Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim." Here is a perfect union.

[Conclusion next week.]

Beauty, Fancy, and Deformity.

We give the following article entire for its general excellence, and the loveliness of the character of the subject of it. We take it from "Zion's Herald." On the last two paragraphs we shall make some remarks at the close.

MY FRIEND'S VOW.

BY MRS. PHEBE PALMER.

"What I gave, that I have."

On an old gravestone is the following quaint epitaph: —"What I spent, that I had; what I kept, that I have lost; what I gave, that I have." There is a solemn significance in these words, that it would be well for all to ponder.

I had a friend who was an uncommon man. In his early career of business life he made a resolve to which with pious carefulness all along to the close of about three-score years he closely adhered. He belonged to a family of some wealth, who in worldly phrase was called aristocratic.

After having passed a portion of his young manhood at Yale College, he left the parental roof to try the fortunes of business life in New York. An amount of means, moderate, yet sufficiently large for his father to risk, were placed at his disposal. His first experiment was a failure, and he returned to his father's house, sad that his debut into the business world had not been more successful.

Again he left the paternal roof, and through the kindness of a father, who, though not flushed with means, placed a sufficient portion at his command to enable his dutiful son to enter again upon a moderate business career. On his way from New Haven to New York, with feelings perhaps akin to the patriarch Jacob, when in young manhood he left his father's house, our friend G. P. S. also "vowed a vow, saying, If God will be with me, and will keep me in the way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, then shall the Lord be my God, and of all that thou shalt give me, I will surely give the tenth unto Thee."

He who prospered Jacob prospered our friend. We must not say that he had no tests to his faith and patience, by occasional straits incident to business life. These he had, but it was really beautiful to observe how subservient even these were made to the higher purposes of life.

By way of illustration we will state an incident out of perhaps more than a score of similiar bearing. One morning, as he was about to obey his benevolent promptings and call upon a poor widow, he was reminded that he had but one dollar in his pocket. "You certainly must not call on that widow this morning," whispered an evil genius, "for if you do, you may be tempted to give it." He purposed rather that he would not do what might seem so inconsistent, but still felt that he could not deny himself the privilege of calling.

He found that her needs were unusually pressing, and ere he left, concluded that the last dollar was the Lord's money, and as the widow needed it to meet present emergencies more than he did, she must have it. "Providence is God in motion," and from this point, Providence favored him quite beyond former precedent. Ere the day closed, the dollar given to the widow had been returned to him sixty-fold.

A now prosperous business career fairly commenced. The tenth of the sixty-fold was hastily returned to the heavenly Giver, and thus with all future intrustments, till he was able, years in succession, to cast thousands, and even tens of thousands, into the Lord's treasury.

Among other good resolves made in early life, was one which we think of marked importance. It was this; that he would never be a rich man. A certain amount he regarded as needful to meet emergencies. His business required capital. Thirty thousand dollars was the maximum. Anything above this he thought might endanger him, by bringing him under the appellation, "rich." Here he fixed a boundary over which he would not pass. Till he arrived at this point, he not only strictly gave the tenth but, as occasion required, much more.

After reaching it, he resolved to give all. Years in succession, as the Lord prospered him, he poured thousands into the Lord's treasury, and when most prospered, tens of thousands. In the meantime, he was careful of his own and his family expenditures. Ever mindful of the fact that he was a steward of his Lord, he was studiously careful to avoid sumptuous living, or anything that might favor the appearance of grandeur in style, either in his choice of a residence, or in household equipage. And thus he passed the days of his pilgrimage, in blessing and being blessed, scattering sunlight on sorrow's dark pathway wherever he went.

Never have I known a more truly unostentatious giver. He gave not merely because it was a duty, but regarding it a high privilege to be counted worthy to be a dispenser of his Lord's goods. When friends occasionally spoke of his deeds as noble, the well meant eulogium would bring a shade of sadness over his benignant countenance, and we have heard him on such occasions exclaim thus—"What do I sacrifice for God in comparison to many others? It was the widow that gave her last mite, that cast into the Lord's treasury more than those who gave of their abundance. It is only when we cast in that which costs something, that we really sacrifice to God."

A few months before his death and while still in comfortable health, he was called to pass through a most trying ordeal in connection with his business. Through the failure of the old United States Bank, he lost nearly all his property. Though pained with the thought that he might not possibly be able to meet all his liabilities, yet rejoicing amid tribulation, he exultingly said to the writer, "How thankful I am for that which I have had the privilege of giving! Had all been treasured in the United States Bank, all would have been swept away, but that which I have treasured up in heaven cannot be touched." It was then our dear friend felt the significance of our Lord's precious words, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasure in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal, for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

But our dear friend knew not that he was so soon to pass through the vale, and to enjoy his treasure in heaven. Time is but the dressing-room for eternity, and in a few short months we were called to the last affecting ministrations of friendship. And such a death-bed! No, we must not speak of it as a death-bed. It was his entrance into life. His bridal hour! The Bridegroom had come. That a convoy of ministering spirits were awaiting the release of his purified spirit, was such a felt consciousness, that faith lent its realizing light. During his illness we had witnessed a remarkable verification of the words of the Faithful and the True—it was well-nigh open vision. "Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble; the Lord will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing. Thou wilt make all his bed in his sickness."

But O, when Death, as a smiling porter, came to open the door by which he was to be introduced into the presence-chamber of the King of kings, how his eye brightened, and his beckoning hand seemed to say "I come!" Thus passed away our noble and honored friend, George P. Shipman, brother-in-law to the late lamented Dr. Payson.

Remarks by Editor of Herald of Life.—To a believer in inherent immortality the last two paragraphs of the foregoing article may appear not only harmless but glorious. To us, some of the remarks are a fancy, a deformity, bordering on blasphemy. Our readers will see wherein this deformity and fancy lies. We regret to call off attention from the beautiful and lovely character of Mr. Shipman.

We would that the world were blessed with a multitude of such bright examples of living Christians; and we have no doubt he will "enter into life"—"at the resurrection of the just;" but that is not at death.

Our excellent Sister Palmer may play with "death" as a child would with a serpent; but her fancy does not convert "death" into "a smiling porter." Death comes not "to open the door into the presence-chamber of the king of kings." No; death is an enemy; "the last enemy," Paul saith, 1 Corth. xv., 26; an enemy to "be destroyed." Destroyed how? By the "resurrection, at the last trump," saith Paul. But the writer of the foregoing article sees no resurrection at all; it is not worth a thought to her. Jesus said of such characters as she has described, "They shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just:" Luke xiv., 14; and, "I will raise him up at the last day." John vi., 39, 40, 44, 54; and Paul says, "at the last trump."

All this is overlooked or ignored in the above description of Mr. Shipman's death. Death is honored, and the Resurrection unthought of, so far as the language goes, for it is not even alluded to.

What else do we see in this deformed theology? A death-bed is not a death-bed! No, it is "His bridal hour!" No wonder here is a mark of surprise. Truly it is surprising how a good and pious person, like the writer of that article, could be so deluded by a theory as to make death the bridal hour, when the Bible teaches that the whole church is to be the Bride, the Lamb's wife; and that the marriage does not come off till the Mother of Harlots is destroyed, even "that great city Babylon is thrown down and shall be found no more at all," Rev. xviii., 21; till then the "bridal hour" does not come; after that it is that great multitudes are heard rejoicing, and saying, "The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready," etc., Rev. xix., 1–9.

Our Sister has forestalled God's time, and hurries the wedding day. Hark! "The Bridegroom had come" when Mr. Shipman died. Died! No, he did not die! "It was his entrance into life." Just then the marriage came off! There was no "last trump"—no resurrection of any one—the marriage must be hurried or the immortal soul theory will prove false, and the grave will hold its victim till "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we who are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thess. iv., 16, 17.

"Away with all your poetry, Paul; we have a shorter route to the bridal hour; death is our archangel and smiling porter to let us into the presence-chamber of the King of kings; it is too long a route, altogether, to go through the grave to a resurrection! True our Lord went that way, and Paul says, 'if the Spirit that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by His Spirit that dwelleth in you;' Rom. viii., 11; but that route does not suit us, so we take a short one and get to the bridal hour before our bodies are put in the grave at all."

Such talk may suit fancy people; but they might profitably consider the words of Jesus, that he who "climbeth up any other way, the same is a thief and a robber." John x., 1. There is no other door but "Jesus and the resurrection." Acts xvii., 18. Beware of making void the counsel of God by your traditions of inherent immortality and going to heaven at death.

A Baptist Resolution.

Edward Kelly, Hinesburg, Vt., writes: I send $2 for our best of papers: wish I could do more to sustain it. My desire is that the Herald of Life may live to carry the blessed message of unending life to the righteous, through Christ, to thousands of families who are not now in possession of a Bible hope of future life. The Baptist ministers—some thirty in number—met in Burlington, Feb. 9th, and organized the "Vermont Ministerial Institute." I will copy from the "Burlington Free Press" a resolution as reported by the Committee of Arrangments:

"Resolved, That we express to Dr. Hovey our conviction that his Lecture on the consciousness of the human spirit during the intermediate state is peculiarity adapted to meet a form of error widely prevailing; and ask him to consent to its publication in a form suited to general circulation."

Thus we see the need there is to send out words of living truth to counteract this false teaching of these mighty D. D.s; and I am thankful that this "form of error," as they call it, is "widely prevailing." May it continue to do so. My post-office address hereafter will be Burlington, Vt.

Remarks by the Editor.—The more Lectures and Resolutions, like those referred to above, the better for the cause they are aimed to overthrow. We were treated with silence and contempt for years. Silence was the grand weapon used; but when that failed to stop the progress of the views of No life out of Christ, and no future life except by a resurrection from the dead, then commenced the preaching and publishing of Lectures against our views. This was a desirable achievement for us; because it called the attention of thousands to our position and developed the lack of Bible argument and authority on the part of our opposers. Hence as the Life views became widely known they have been "widely prevailing;" nor can all the power of men, high or low, now arrest their onward progress. Church Decrees, Resolutions, Lectures, Essays, and whatever else sectarians choose to use are as unavailing as if they should order the sun to stop in its course. The light of Life, in Christ, alone, is too strongly planted in the Bible to be moved away into a corner again by any or all the powers of men, good or bad, while the Bible is admitted to be the standard of truth, and the only appeal. Let our opposers fight on; they may blind their own eyes, but thinking and investigating minds, which earnestly desire to know the truth, are as certain, sooner or later, to reject the doctrine of inherent immortality as the sun is certain to rise and set. Not a statement is made in the Bible of an "immortal soul" or of a "deathless spirit:" no, not one such utterance can be found in the Book of God; such expressions are the result of corruptions of the system of eternal truth as revealed by God to men through prophets, Jesus Christ and His apostles. Let us have back the pure truth of the Bible, and inherent immortality dies.

Papacy In Our Government.

Many thinking men are anxiously watching the development of papacy in this country, and not a few are convinced that a violent struggle between it and Protestantism is becoming inevitable. Though we have not shared this anxiety, we confess to a conviction that so far from its being groundless, certain facts tend rather to compel it. Papal political power has already assumed gigantic proportions, and it steadily increases. Its power is more or less felt throughout our whole country but not sufficiently so to excite any great degree of mistrust, except in certain great centres. For instance, the city of New York, and consequently the State, to a great extent, is already ruled by it. If any doubt this, let them contemplate the following from a statement contained in a recent number of a New York daily paper. Accordingly to it, the following named important and lucrative offices are held by Roman Catholics.

Sheriff, Register, Comptroller, City Chamberlain, Corporation Council, Police Commissioner, President of the Board of Water Works, President of the Board of Aldermen, President of the Board of Councilmen, Clerk of the Common Council, Clerk of the Board of Supervisors, five Justices of the Courts of Records, all the Civil Justices; every Police Justice, except two; all the Police Court Clerks, three out of the four Coroners, two members of Congress, three out of five State Senators, eighteen out of twenty-one members of the Assembly, fourteen-nineteenths of the Common Councilmen, and eight-tenths of the Supervisors.

The above strongly attests the existence of a powerful politico-church party in our midst; for the Catholics, unlike Protestants, are a unit on all political questions of any considerable importance. No wonder, then, it has transpired that of about one hundred and twenty five thousand dollars appropriated by the Legislature of the State of New York, for distribution in aid of charitable institutions, more than a hundred thousand was given to the Catholics. It is not strange, either, that Catholic institutions are able to obtain long leases on valuable city property, paying therefor little, if any more than sufficient to make the contract valid. Is it not quite natural that the church, having placed her sons in office, should seek to use them for self-aggrandizement? It seems to be true that "the Roman Catholics virtually control the taxation of the city, and have in their power the appropriation of millions of the revenue." Where is the limit to this evil? Will it go on until the two religious systems of our country are brought into deadly conflict? Or, is it one item in that grand carnival of crime and corruption which shall exist at the coming of our Lord and King? L. C. T.

From Catharine E. Conklin.

Seneca Falls, N. Y., Feb. 22, 1869.

Br. Storrs: As the Herald of Life makes its weekly visits, how grateful I feel to our heavenly Father that he is still giving you health and strength of body and mind to continue at your post and bring out of God's treasure house things new and old to comfort and strengthen the scattered flock; many of them, like myself, having no other preacher. How good the Lord is, not only to you, but to all the readers of the Herald of Life, that at your advanced stage of life you are so wonderfully sustained to perform the arduous duties devolving upon you. Truly God's mercies are manifold; new every morning, and fresh every evening; yea, every moment of our lives. And yet many times we manifest apparently so little gratitude of heart. Can we breathe freely and without pain? then we should give glory to God. How many times we breathe free all the day long "the breath of the spirit of lives" and hardly think of giving God thanks! I thought when I was suffering constant pain, for days and weeks, if I could live one hour free from pain, I would never cease giving God thanks. But how prone to forget God's mercies and benefits. He knows all our frailties and weaknesses, and trust He will forgive all my seeming ingratitude. What a thought that the omniscient eye of God is continually searching the inmost recesses of our hearts! How circumspectly we ought to live and walk before him. David says, doth he not see all my ways and count all my steps? Would that these great truths were realized more and more by us, graven as with a pen of iron upon the tablet of our hearts, to regulate all our thoughts, words and ways.

I took up my pen to tell you how much I prize the Herald and the precious truths it contains. But am sorry to see some of our good brethren feel such an antipathy to the blessed doctrine of the non-living of the wicked dead. Some cry out, "What a dangerous doctrine!" If sinners are saved through fear, then we must admit, that it is a dangerous doctrine. But "there is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear; because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love. We loved him because he first loved us."

I find some who are investigating the subject and earnestly desire the truth. They begin to see "men as trees walking." May God help them, and bring them out into the full blaze of the mid-day sun. No hope for those who are willingly blind of ever seeing the truth as long as they shut their eyes and oppose it. Let us earnestly contend for the truth; for I contend that we cannot love God in sincerity and truth, until we can view him as a God of love. Yours, hoping for eternal life when Jesus comes.

From Catharine C. Williams.

Butler, Mo., Feb. 12, 1869.

Br. Storrs: I should be glad to express the sympathy felt for our afflicted sister, Emeline Wood. Since reading her statement concerning her eyes, in the Herald, in connection with the probable cause of the malady, viz., too close application to sewing, especially night sewing, I have thought that a restoration of sight and a consequent ability to resume her accustomed means of self-support, etc., would doubtless be better to her than "silver and gold;" and as I have had a variety of maladies to treat in my family, and among them inflamed eyes, I would like to name a simple and effective prescription, which I think would benefit her eyes likewise; at any rate, it will not cost much to try it; viz., To a half tea-cup full of pure soft water add half teaspoon full of salt. Then take any soft, fine old cloth and fold so as to make several thicknesses; saturate with the salt water and bind on the eyes at night; and continue every night (if it agrees) till relieved.

Note by the Editor.—Sister Wood writes us, her eyes are improving. She has great faith in prayer; and Sister Williams's prescription may have been sent in answer to prayer. Prayer does not preclude the use of means, if in our power. When Hezekiah's prayer was answered, the prophet "Isaiah had said, Let them take a lump of figs and lay it for a plaster upon the boil, and he shall recover." Isa. xxxviii., 21; and 2 Kings xx., 7.

From Polly G. Pitts.

Fredericksburg, Iowa, Feb. 22, 1869.

O how much should I adore the love of God this day! Yes, his long-suffering mercy and forbearance to me. Seventy-four years ago to-day I was a helpless infant. While looking back the long, long stream of life, to this my birthday, the extreme weakness and mortality of man came vividly before my mind, and I could realize the truth of the saying of one that I suppose wrote more than a hundred years ago. It was this:

Lord, what is man? Ans. Original dust: engendered in sin, brought forth in sorrow, helpless in infancy, extravagantly wild in his youth, mad in his manhood, decrepit in his age; his first voice moves pity, his last commands grief. Nature clothes the beasts with hair, the birds with feathers, the fishes with scales, but man is born naked; his hands cannot handle, his feet cannot walk, nor his eyes see arightly; vain are his desires, toys are his delight; he no sooner puts on the distinguishing character of manhood than he burns it with wild fires of passion, stains it with abominable pride, or contaminates it with debauchery. Lord, what is man? Ans. A dunghill blanched with snow, a make-game for fortune, a mark for malice, a butt for envy; if poor, despised, if rich, flattered, if simple, derided, if foolish, mistrusted. His beauty is but a flower, his wit a flash, his wisdom folly, his art imperfection, his glory a blaze, his life a span, himself a bubble. He is born crying, lives laughing, dies groaning.

Who, then, to vain mortality would trust?
Who is crushed before the moth?
Whose dwelling is in dust?"

Yet all these long, long days of sin, and darkness, and folly, and light, and hope, and gladness, God's mercy has held me up; and to-day I am a monument of God's long-suffering goodness through the one great atoning sacrifice, and shall be through the ages of ages, and onward, world without end. I can truly say today, "God is Love." Yes, perhaps I can say it more to day than ever before. Bless his holy name forever. Amen.

LaFayette Norris, Campton, Iowa, writes: I hope you will keep the subject of these "Conferences" before the people. I consider that business nothing less than republican Popery. Some people are very conscientious about what they call themselves; but I do not believe in any name but Christian, and to change that for any other I do not believe we have any authority; no, nor to add thereto, though it should be "Advent," or any other sectarian name. I hope Life believers will keep clear of these exclusive practices. I am honest, when I say, I would as soon join the "Mother" church as one of her "Daughters." I am sorry to learn that any Life believers have joined such organizations. I do not believe the daughters are all as wicked as the mother, but the act of joining them, in itself, is the same; it is denying Christ as the one living Head, and looking to fallible men for our rule of faith and practice. Pray for me, that I may lay aside every weight and be prepared to meet my Lord at his coming.

Mrs. C. M. Hopkins, Prattsburg, N. Y., writes: Since I last wrote you I have passed through fires of afflictions; yet the Lord has been with me, saying, "It is I, be not afraid." The only sister I had living in this place died the last of August, and the first of October my dear husband died of typhoid fever. I am consoled with the belief that both sleep in Jesus. It is difficult, at first, when passing through afflictions so severe, to say heartily, Thy will be done: but blessed be God, through Christ, who strengtheneth us, we can do all things.

Cannot we have a tent meeting and a good spiritual preacher, who will preach the truth, here next summer? I am distributing tracts as fast as my health will permit. I am again nearly out, and would be glad to get more.

Note by the Editor.—We are glad our sister finds God's grace sufficient for her in these fiery trials. We would be pleased to have her request for a tent meeting granted; but by all means keep up the work of tract distribution. Brethren, remember the Tract Fund if you would have this work go on.

A. O. Hillstream, Manchester, Iowa, writes: We are glad to see the truth prosper. There are only about six families of us here who believe in Life only in Christ. The "orthodox" Adventists here are many, and their preachers are the only ones we have to listen to. We would try to do something for a man who believes in our Life views to come here for a time. It would be a great blessing to the public. The understanding mind cannot comprehend the millennium past, or the resurrection of the wicked dead. Some that I converse with, even of the "orthodox" Adventists, are uncertain as to the correctness of their views. What we now need is a strong defender of the Life views, and a good many would see the life-giving light. Their preachers would oppose; but their fables could not stand the light any more than the snow on a hot day. We take what we can from these orthodox advent preachers and let the rest pass. May God bless and speed the living truth. Pray for us. Yours in hope of eternal life when the Life-giver appears the second time.

Obituary.

Hattie May, infant daughter of C. N. and Mary A. Buzzell, fell asleep at Ridgeway, Pa., Feb. 18.

She is gone: that lovely form has fled,
And left us here in tears:
Early enrolled among the dead,
To sleep till Christ appears.

Russia.

In Middle and Southern Russia, the missionaries are greatly encouraged. Meetings are crowded, and some striking cases of conversion are reported. The "Macedonian and Mission Record" says—

"The word of God is preached, especially in Kurland, without molestation, and baptism is administered at noon-day in the presence of hundreds of spectators. Proclamation has been made that none who wish to do good, and particularly the Germans, shall be disturbed. At a recent religious festival many brethren came together from different colonies, some from a distance of nearly a hundred English miles. One was also present from Turkey. The Pentecostal feast was like a repetition of that in Jerusalem. The Spirit came like a mighty rushing wind. From Tiflis in Caucasia it is reported that seven have been baptized.

"Mr. Ondra, in Middle Russia, reports that during the last quarter he baptized fifty-six believers. Seven were baptized in a locality immediately between a Catholic and a Russian church."

joy, a praise and an honor before all the nations of the earth, which shall hear all the good that I do unto them: and they shall fear and tremble for all the goodness and for all the prosperity that I procure unto it." So when this event shall occur there shall still be "nations" upon "earth," who "shall hear all the good that" God will do to Judah and Israel, when he has gathered them. They are to be built "as at the first." They were "one nation, at the first."

The Lord next administers a reproof, which we all should do well to hear—verses 23, 24, "Moreover the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, saying, Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, The two families which the Lord hath chosen, he hath even cast them off? Thus they have despised my people, that they should be no more a nation before them."

FIFTH. Can they be brought into "the land wherein their fathers have dwelt?" Not if this gathering is the "elect remnant," brought up in the "resurrection" upon the new earth, after the final conflagration; for, we repeat it, their fathers never dwelt there. But if we understand literal Judah and Israel, we have shown it can be done.

SIXTH. Can they be united again in one nation under one king? See Hosea i., 11, and 3, 4, 5, "Then shall the children of Judah and the children of Israel be gathered together, and appoint themselves one head, and they shall come up out of the land: for great shall be the day of Jezreel." "For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod and without teraphim: Afterward shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days." Also Isa. xi., 12, 13, "And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth. The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off: Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim." Here is a perfect union.

[Conclusion next week.]

BEAUTY, FANCY, AND DEFORMITY.

WE give the following article entire for its general excellence, and the loveliness of the character of the subject of it. We take it from "Zion's Herald." On the last two paragraphs we shall make some remarks at the close.

MY FRIEND'S VOW.

BY MRS. PHEBE PALMER.

"What I gave, that I have."

ON an old gravestone is the following quaint epitaph: —"What I spent, that I had; what I kept, that I have lost; what I gave, that I have." There is a solemn significance in these words, that it would be well for all to ponder.

I had a friend who was an uncommon man. In his early career of business life he made a resolve to which with pious carefulness all along to the close of about three-score years he closely adhered. He belonged to a family of some wealth, who in worldly phrase was called aristocratic.

After having passed a portion of his young manhood at Yale College, he left the parental roof to try the fortunes of business life in New York. An amount of means, moderate, yet sufficiently large for his father to risk, were placed at his disposal. His first experiment was a failure, and he returned to his father's house, sad that his debut into the business world had not been more successful.

Again he left the paternal roof, and through the kindness of a father, who, though not flushed with means, placed a sufficient portion at his command to enable his dutiful son to enter again upon a moderate business career. On his way from New Haven to New York, with feelings perhaps akin to the patriarch Jacob, when in young manhood he left his father's house, our friend G. P. S. also "vowed a vow, saying, If God will be with me, and will keep me in the way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, then shall the Lord be my God, and of all that thou shalt give me, I will surely give the tenth unto Thee."

He who prospered Jacob prospered our friend. We must not say that he had no tests to his faith and patience, by occasional straits incident to business life. These he had, but it was really beautiful to observe how subservient even these were made to the higher purposes of life.

By way of illustration we will state an incident out of perhaps more than a score of similiar bearing. One morning, as he was about to obey his benevolent promptings and call upon a poor widow, he was reminded that he had but one dollar in his pocket. "You certainly must not call on that widow this morning," whispered an evil genius, "for if you do, you may be tempted to give it." He purposed rather that he would not do what might seem so inconsistent, but still felt that he could not deny himself the privilege of calling.

He found that her needs were unusually pressing, and ere he left, concluded that the last dollar was the Lord's money, and as the widow needed it to meet present emergencies more than he did, she must have it. "Providence is God in motion," and from this point, Providence favored him quite beyond former precedent. Ere the day closed, the dollar given to the widow had been returned to him sixty-fold.

A now prosperous business career fairly commenced. The tenth of the sixty-fold was hastily returned to the heavenly Giver, and thus with all future intrustments, till he was able, years in succession, to cast thousands, and even tens of thousands, into the Lord's treasury.

Among other good resolves made in early life, was one which we think of marked importance. It was this; that he would never be a rich man. A certain amount he regarded as needful to meet emergencies. His business required capital. Thirty thousand dollars was the maximum. Anything above this he thought might endanger him, by bringing him under the appellation, "rich." Here he fixed a boundary over which he would not pass. Till he arrived at this point, he not only strictly gave the tenth but, as occasion required, much more.

After reaching it, he resolved to give all. Years in succession, as the Lord prospered him, he poured thousands into the Lord's treasury, and when most prospered, tens of thousands. In the meantime, he was careful of his own and his family expenditures. Ever mindful of the fact that he was a steward of his Lord, he was studiously careful to avoid sumptuous living, or anything that might favor the appearance of grandeur in style, either in his choice of a residence, or in household equipage. And thus he passed the days of his pilgrimage, in blessing and being blessed, scattering sunlight on sorrow's dark pathway wherever he went.

Never have I known a more truly unostentatious giver. He gave not merely because it was a duty, but regarding it a high privilege to be counted worthy to be a dispenser of his Lord's goods. When friends occasionally spoke of his deeds as noble, the well meant eulogium would bring a shade of sadness over his benignant countenance, and we have heard him on such occasions exclaim thus—"What do I sacrifice for God in comparison to many others? It was the widow that gave her last mite, that cast into the Lord's treasury more than those who gave of their abundance. It is only when we cast in that which costs something, that we really sacrifice to God."

A few months before his death and while still in comfortable health, he was called to pass through a most trying ordeal in connection with his business. Through the failure of the old United States Bank, he lost nearly all his property. Though pained with the thought that he might not possibly be able to meet all his liabilities, yet rejoicing amid tribulation, he exultingly said to the writer, "How thankful I am for that which I have had the privilege of giving! Had all been treasured in the United States Bank, all would have been swept away, but that which I have treasured up in heaven cannot be touched." It was then our dear friend felt the significance of our Lord's precious words, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasure in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal, for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

But our dear friend knew not that he was so soon to pass through the vale, and to enjoy his treasure in heaven. Time is but the dressing-room for eternity, and in a few short months we were called to the last affecting ministrations of friendship. And such a death-bed! No, we must not speak of it as a death-bed. It was his entrance into life. His bridal hour! The Bridegroom had come. That a convoy of ministering spirits were awaiting the release of his purified spirit, was such a felt consciousness, that faith lent its realizing light. During his illness we had witnessed a remarkable verification of the words of the Faithful and the True—it was well-nigh open vision. "Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble; the Lord will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing. Thou wilt make all his bed in his sickness."

But O, when Death, as a smiling porter, came to open the door by which he was to be introduced into the presence-chamber of the King of kings, how his eye brightened, and his beckoning hand seemed to say "I come!" Thus passed away our noble and honored friend, George P. Shipman, brother-in-law to the late lamented Dr. Payson.

REMARKS BY EDITOR OF HERALD OF LIFE. —To a believer in inherent immortality the last two paragraphs of the foregoing article may appear not only harmless but glorious. To us, some of the remarks are a fancy, a deformity, bordering on blasphemy. Our readers will see wherein this deformity and fancy lies. We regret to call off attention from the beautiful and lovely character of Mr. Shipman.

We would that the world were blessed with a multitude of such bright examples of living Christians; and we have no doubt he will "enter into life"—"at the resurrection of the just;" but that is not at death.

Our excellent Sister Palmer may play with "death" as a child would with a serpent; but her fancy does not convert "death" into "a smiling porter." Death comes not "to open the door into the presence-chamber of the king of kings." No; death is an enemy; "the last enemy," Paul saith, 1 Corth. xv., 26; an enemy to "be destroyed." Destroyed how? By the "resurrection, at the last trump," saith Paul. But the writer of the foregoing article sees no resurrection at all; it is not worth a thought to her. Jesus said of such characters as she has described, "They shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just:" Luke xiv., 14; and, "I will raise him up at the last day." John vi., 39, 40, 44, 54; and Paul says, "at the last trump."

All this is overlooked or ignored in the above description of Mr. Shipman's death. Death is honored, and the Resurrection unthought of, so far as the language goes, for it is not even alluded to.

What else do we see in this deformed theology? A death-bed is not a death-bed! No, it is "His bridal hour!" No wonder here is a mark of surprise. Truly it is surprising how a good and pious person, like the writer of that article, could be so deluded by a theory as to make death the bridal hour, when the Bible teaches that the whole church is to be the Bride, the Lamb's wife; and that the marriage does not come off till the Mother of Harlots is destroyed, even "that great city Babylon is thrown down and shall be found no more at all," Rev. xviii., 21; till then the "bridal hour" does not come; after that it is that great multitudes are heard rejoicing, and saying, "The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready," etc., Rev. xix., 1–9.

Our Sister has forestalled God's time, and hurries the wedding day. Hark! "The Bridegroom had come" when Mr. Shipman died. Died! No, he did not die! "It was his entrance into life." Just then the marriage came off! There was no "last trump" —no resurrection of any one—the marriage must be hurried or the immortal soul theory will prove false, and the grave will hold its victim till "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we who are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thess. iv., 16, 17.

"Away with all your poetry, Paul; we have a shorter route to the bridal hour; death is our archangel and smiling porter to let us into the presence-chamber of the King of kings; it is too long a route, altogether, to go through the grave to a resurrection! True our Lord went that way, and Paul says, 'if the Spirit that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by His Spirit that dwelleth in you;' Rom. viii., 11; but that route does not suit us, so we take a short one and get to the bridal hour before our bodies are put in the grave at all."

Such talk may suit fancy people; but they might profitably consider the words of Jesus, that he who "climbeth up any other way, the same is a thief and a robber." John x., 1. There is no other door but "Jesus and the resurrection." Acts xvii., 18. Beware of making void the counsel of God by your traditions of inherent immortality and going to heaven at death.

A BAPTIST RESOLUTION.

EDWARD KELLY, Hinesburg, Vt., writes: I send $2 for our best of papers: wish I could do more to sustain it. My desire is that the HERALD OF LIFE may live to carry the blessed message of unending life to the righteous, through Christ, to thousands of families who are not now in possession of a Bible hope of future life. The Baptist ministers—some thirty in number—met in Burlington, Feb. 9th, and organized the "Vermont Ministerial Institute." I will copy from the "Burlington Free Press" a resolution as reported by the Committee of Arrangments:

"Resolved, That we express to Dr. Hovey our conviction that his Lecture on the consciousness of the human spirit during the intermediate state is peculiarity adapted to meet a form of error widely prevailing; and ask him to consent to its publication in a form suited to general circulation."

Thus we see the need there is to send out words of living truth to counteract this false teaching of these mighty D. D.s; and I am thankful that this "form of error," as they call it, is "widely prevailing." May it continue to do so. My post-office address hereafter will be BURLINGTON, VT.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—The more Lectures and Resolutions, like those referred to above, the better for the cause they are aimed to overthrow. We were treated with silence and contempt for years. Silence was the grand weapon used; but when that failed to stop the progress of the views of No life out of Christ, and no future life except by a resurrection from the dead, then commenced the preaching and publishing of Lectures against our views. This was a desirable achievement for us; because it called the attention of thousands to our position and developed the lack of Bible argument and authority on the part of our opposers. Hence as the Life views became widely known they have been "widely prevailing;" nor can all the power of men, high or low, now arrest their onward progress. Church Decrees, Resolutions, Lectures, Essays, and whatever else sectarians choose to use are as unavailing as if they should order the sun to stop in its course. The light of Life, in Christ, alone, is too strongly planted in the Bible to be moved away into a corner again by any or all the powers of men, good or bad, while the Bible is admitted to be the standard of truth, and the only appeal. Let our opposers fight on; they may blind their own eyes, but thinking and investigating minds, which earnestly desire to know the truth, are as certain, sooner or later, to reject the doctrine of inherent immortality as the sun is certain to rise and set. Not a statement is made in the Bible of an "immortal soul" or of a "deathless spirit:" no, not one such utterance can be found in the Book of God; such expressions are the result of corruptions of the system of eternal truth as revealed by God to men through prophets, Jesus Christ and His apostles. Let us have back the pure truth of the Bible, and inherent immortality dies.

PAPACY IN OUR GOVERNMENT.

MANY thinking men are anxiously watching the development of papacy in this country, and not a few are convinced that a violent struggle between it and Protestantism is becoming inevitable. Though we have not shared this anxiety, we confess to a conviction that so far from its being groundless, certain facts tend rather to compel it. Papal political power has already assumed gigantic proportions, and it steadily increases. Its power is more or less felt throughout our whole country but not sufficiently so to excite any great degree of mistrust, except in certain great centres. For instance, the city of New York, and consequently the State, to a great extent, is already ruled by it. If any doubt this, let them contemplate the following from a statement contained in a recent number of a New York daily paper. Accordingly to it, the following named important and lucrative offices are held by Roman Catholics.

Sheriff, Register, Comptroller, City Chamberlain, Corporation Council, Police Commissioner, President of the Board of Water Works, President of the Board of Aldermen, President of the Board of Councilmen, Clerk of the Common Council, Clerk of the Board of Supervisors, five Justices of the Courts of Records, all the Civil Justices; every Police Justice, except two; all the Police Court Clerks, three out of the four Coroners, two members of Congress, three out of five State Senators, eighteen out of twenty-one members of the Assembly, fourteen-nineteenths of the Common Councilmen, and eight-tenths of the Supervisors.

The above strongly attests the existence of a powerful politico-church party in our midst; for the Catholics, unlike Protestants, are a unit on all political questions of any considerable importance. No wonder, then, it has transpired that of about one hundred and twenty five thousand dollars appropriated by the Legislature of the State of New York, for distribution in aid of charitable institutions, more than a hundred thousand was given to the Catholics. It is not strange, either, that Catholic institutions are able to obtain long leases on valuable city property, paying therefor little, if any more than sufficient to make the contract valid. Is it not quite natural that the church, having placed her sons in office, should seek to use them for self-aggrandizement? It seems to be true that "the Roman Catholics virtually control the taxation of the city, and have in their power the appropriation of millions of the revenue." Where is the limit to this evil? Will it go on until the two religious systems of our country are brought into deadly conflict? Or, is it one item in that grand carnival of crime and corruption which shall exist at the coming of our Lord and King? L. C. T.

NEW YORK, March 1869.

FROM CATHARINE E. CONKLIN.

SENECA FALLS, N. Y., Feb. 22, 1869.

BR. STORRS: As the HERALD OF LIFE makes its weekly visits, how grateful I feel to our heavenly Father that he is still giving you health and strength of body and mind to continue at your post and bring out of God's treasure house things new and old to comfort and strengthen the scattered flock; many of them, like myself, having no other preacher. How good the Lord is, not only to you, but to all the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE, that at your advanced stage of life you are so wonderfully sustained to perform the arduous duties devolving upon you. Truly God's mercies are manifold; new every morning, and fresh every evening; yea, every moment of our lives. And yet many times we manifest apparently so little gratitude of heart. Can we breathe freely and without pain? then we should give glory to God. How many times we breathe free all the day long "the breath of the spirit of lives" and hardly think of giving God thanks! I thought when I was suffering constant pain, for days and weeks, if I could live one hour free from pain, I would never cease giving God thanks. But how prone to forget God's mercies and benefits. He knows all our frailties and weaknesses, and trust He will forgive all my seeming ingratitude. What a thought that the omniscient eye of God is continually searching the inmost recesses of our hearts! How circumspectly we ought to live and walk before him. David says, doth he not see all my ways and count all my steps? Would that these great truths were realized more and more by us, graven as with a pen of iron upon the tablet of our hearts, to regulate all our thoughts, words and ways.

I took up my pen to tell you how much I prize the HERALD and the precious truths it contains. But am sorry to see some of our good brethren feel such an antipathy to the blessed doctrine of the non-living of the wicked dead. Some cry out, "What a dangerous doctrine!" If sinners are saved through fear, then we must admit, that it is a dangerous doctrine. But "there is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear; because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love. We loved him because he first loved us."

I find some who are investigating the subject and earnestly desire the truth. They begin to see "men as trees walking." May God help them, and bring them out into the full blaze of the mid-day sun. No hope for those who are willingly blind of ever seeing the truth as long as they shut their eyes and oppose it. Let us earnestly contend for the truth; for I contend that we cannot love God in sincerity and truth, until we can view him as a God of love. Yours, hoping for eternal life when Jesus comes.

FROM CATHARINE C. WILLIAMS.

BUTLER, MO., Feb. 12, 1869.

BR. STORRS: I should be glad to express the sympathy felt for our afflicted sister, EMELINE WOOD. Since reading her statement concerning her eyes, in the HERALD, in connection with the probable cause of the malady, viz., too close application to sewing, especially night sewing, I have thought that a restoration of sight and a consequent ability to resume her accustomed means of self-support, etc., would doubtless be better to her than "silver and gold;" and as I have had a variety of maladies to treat in my family, and among them inflamed eyes, I would like to name a simple and effective prescription, which I think would benefit her eyes likewise; at any rate, it will not cost much to try it; viz., To a half tea-cup full of pure soft water add half teaspoon full of salt. Then take any soft, fine old cloth and fold so as to make several thicknesses; saturate with the salt water and bind on the eyes at night; and continue every night (if it agrees) till relieved.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Sister Wood writes us, her eyes are improving. She has great faith in prayer; and Sister Williams's prescription may have been sent in answer to prayer. Prayer does not preclude the use of means, if in our power. When Hezekiah's prayer was answered, the prophet "Isaiah had said, Let them take a lump of figs and lay it for a plaster upon the boil, and he shall recover." Isa. xxxviii., 21; and 2 Kings xx., 7.

FROM POLLY G. PITTS.

FREDERICKSBURG, IOWA, Feb. 22, 1869.

O HOW much should I adore the love of God this day! Yes, his long-suffering mercy and forbearance to me. Seventy-four years ago to-day I was a helpless infant. While looking back the long, long stream of life, to this my birthday, the extreme weakness and mortality of man came vividly before my mind, and I could realize the truth of the saying of one that I suppose wrote more than a hundred years ago. It was this:

Lord, what is man? Ans. Original dust: engendered in sin, brought forth in sorrow, helpless in infancy, extravagantly wild in his youth, mad in his manhood, decrepit in his age; his first voice moves pity, his last commands grief. Nature clothes the beasts with hair, the birds with feathers, the fishes with scales, but man is born naked; his hands cannot handle, his feet cannot walk, nor his eyes see arightly; vain are his desires, toys are his delight; he no sooner puts on the distinguishing character of manhood than he burns it with wild fires of passion, stains it with abominable pride, or contaminates it with debauchery. Lord, what is man? Ans. A dunghill blanched with snow, a make-game for fortune, a mark for malice, a butt for envy; if poor, despised, if rich, flattered, if simple, derided, if foolish, mistrusted. His beauty is but a flower, his wit a flash, his wisdom folly, his art imperfection, his glory a blaze, his life a span, himself a bubble. He is born crying, lives laughing, dies groaning.

Who, then, to vain mortality would trust?
Who is crushed before the moth?
Whose dwelling is in dust?"

Yet all these long, long days of sin, and darkness, and folly, and light, and hope, and gladness, God's mercy has held me up; and to-day I am a monument of God's long-suffering goodness through the one great atoning sacrifice, and shall be through the ages of ages, and onward, world without end. I can truly say to-day, "God is Love." Yes, perhaps I can say it more to day than ever before. Bless his holy name forever. Amen.

LAFAYETTE NORRIS, Campton, Iowa, writes: I hope you will keep the subject of these "Conferences" before the people. I consider that business nothing less than republican Popery. I am sorry to learn that any Life believers have joined such organizations. I do not believe the daughters are all as wicked as the mother, but the act of joining them, in itself, is the same; it is denying Christ as the one living Head, and looking to fallible men for our rule of faith and practice. Pray for me, that I may lay aside every weight and be prepared to meet my Lord at his coming.

MRS. C. M. HOPKINS, Prattsburg, N. Y., writes: Since I last wrote you I have passed through fires of afflictions; yet the Lord has been with me, saying, "It is I, be not afraid." The only sister I had living in this place died the last of August, and the first of October my dear husband died of typhoid fever. I am consoled with the belief that both sleep in Jesus. It is difficult, at first, when passing through afflictions so severe, to say heartily, Thy will be done: but blessed be God, through Christ, who strengtheneth us, we can do all things.

Cannot we have a tent meeting and a good spiritual preacher, who will preach the truth, here next summer? I am distributing tracts as fast as my health will permit. I am again nearly out, and would be glad to get more.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We are glad our sister finds God's grace sufficient for her in these fiery trials. We would be pleased to have her request for a tent meeting granted; but by all means keep up the work of tract distribution. Brethren, remember the Tract Fund if you would have this work go on.

A. O. HILLSTREAM, Manchester, Iowa, writes: We are glad to see the truth prosper. There are only about six families of us here who believe in Life only in Christ. The "orthodox" Adventists here are many, and their preachers are the only ones we have to listen to. We would try to do something for a man who believes in our Life views to come here for a time. It would be a great blessing to the public. The understanding mind cannot comprehend the millennium past, or the resurrection of the wicked dead. Some that I converse with, even of the "orthodox" Adventists, are uncertain as to the correctness of their views. What we now need is a strong defender of the Life views, and a good many would see the life-giving light. Their preachers would oppose; but their fables could not stand the light any more than the snow on a hot day. We take what we can from these orthodox advent preachers and let the rest pass. May God bless and speed the living truth. Pray for us. Yours in hope of eternal life when the LIFE-GIVER appears the second time.

OBITUARY.

HATTIE MAY, infant daughter of C. N. and MARY A. BUZZELL, fell asleep at Ridgeway, Pa., Feb. 18.

She is gone: that lovely form has fled,
And left us here in tears:
Early enrolled among the dead,
To sleep till Christ appears.

RUSSIA.

IN Middle and Southern Russia, the missionaries are greatly encouraged. Meetings are crowded, and some striking cases of conversion are reported. The "Macedonian and Mission Record" says—

"The word of God is preached, especially in Kurland, without molestation, and baptism is administered at noon-day in the presence of hundreds of spectators. Proclamation has been made that none who wish to do good, and particularly the Germans, shall be disturbed. At a recent religious festival many brethren came together from different colonies, some from a distance of nearly a hundred English miles. One was also present from Turkey. The Pentecostal feast was like a repetition of that in Jerusalem. The Spirit came like a mighty rushing wind. From Tiflis in Caucasia it is reported that seven have been baptized.

"Mr. Ondra, in Middle Russia, reports that during the last quarter he baptized fifty-six believers. Seven were baptized in a locality immediately between a Catholic and a Russian church."

ALIVE TWO THOUSAND YEARS.

IN the course of his wanderings among the pyramids of Egypt, Lord Lindsay, the celebrated English traveller, accidently came across a mummy, which the inscription upon it proved to be two thousand years old. In examining the mummy, after it was carefully unwrapped, he found in one of its enclosed hands a small round root. Wandering how long vegetable life could last, he took the little bulb from the mummy's hand, and planted it in a sunny soil, allowed the dews and rains of Heaven to descend upon it, and in the course of a few weeks, to his astonishment and joy, that root burst forth and bloomed into a beautiful flower. This interesting incident suggested to Mrs. S. H. Bradford, an American poetess, the following verses upon

"THE RESURRECTION."

Two thousand years ago a flower
  Bloom'd lightly in a far-off land;
Two thousand years ago its seed
  Was placed within a dead man's hand.

Before the Saviour come to earth,
  That man had lived, and loved and died,
And even in that far-off time,
  The flower had spread its perfume wide.

Suns sose and set, years came and went,
  The dead hand kept its treasure well;
Nations were born and turned to dust,
  While life was hidden in that shell.

The shrivelled hand is robbed at last,
  The seed is buried in the earth;
When, lo! the life—long hidden there—
  Into a glorious flower burst forth.

Just such a plant as that which grew,
  From such a seed when buried low;
Just such a flower in Egypt bloom'd
  And died two thousand years ago.

And will not He who watched the seed
  And kept the life within the shell,
When those He loves are laid to rest,
  Watch o'er their buried dust as well?

And will He not from 'neath the sod,
  Cause something glorious to arise?
Aye, though it sleep two thousand years,
  Yet all that buried dust shall rise.

Just such a face as greets you now,
  Just such a form as here we wear,
Only more glorious far, will rise
  To meet the Saviour in the air.

Then will I lay me down in peace,
  When called to leave this vale of tears,
For "in my flesh shall I see God,"
  E'en though I sleep two thousand years.

BESSIE BARTON'S TEST.

"I WISH I knew just what to do about it," were the words that again and again fell from Dr. Barton's lips; for the matter to be decided was a weighty one.

Each time they were uttered, the soft, dark eyes of a young girl, who sat sewing near by, were lifted wistfully toward the gentleman, till at last he noticed the earnest expression, and asked: "What is it, Pussy? What do you think about it?"

"I should go by papa's rule," she replied, the crimsom creeping into her fair cheek.

"And what may papa's rule be, little Besrie?" asked her uncle.

"Never to do anything, or say anything, or to go anywhere, when we cannot ask God's blessing to rest upon us. He says it saves a world of trouble, and is always a sure test."

Dr. Barton was a worldly man, who sometimes scoffed at the simple confidence of pious souls; but no such feeling tempted him now, and silently kissing the fair forehead of his niece, he left the room.

Uttered in weakness as it was, Bessie's lesson of trust proved the "word fitly spoken;" and not many months passed before he too claimed this test as his rule in life's duties and trials.

When our journey through life seems a tangled pathway, have we as sure a rule to guide our weak steps? Not all the wisdom of philosophy can yield so perfect a test. Do nothing but what you can ask God's blessing to rest upon. What a safeguard against the wiles of the tempter, be the lure ever so seductive! What a beacon in the darkest hour of doubt! To feel that God will bless our efforts, is a stronger staff to uphold our trembling steps than the most powerful of earthly helpers.

"Nothing but what God will bless." Write it on your heart; have it graven as a breastplate; it will never fail you. "I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." So He has promised, and He never fails to fulfil.—Christian Treasury.

HOW SHE DID IT.

A YOUNG mother surrounded by a group of restless, impatient spirits, was once the theme of admiring remark in the circle of her acquaintance, on account of her wonderful calmness and patience,

"How Mrs. Gale can get along with her five noisy boys, and her husband always absent, and yet never seems put out or worried, passes my comprehension," said one of her nearest neighbors.

"Does she govern them?" was the reply.

"Govern them! No! she hasn't the slightest faculty for that, and besides, they are all uncommonly strong-minded, while she is naturally timid and yielding. Her authority would have little weight with them, I fancy."

"How does she manage them?"

"That I cannot tell you. She doesn't seem to try to rule them much. But they all love her and appear sorry to grieve her; and though they are full of spirit, and naturally turbulent, she keeps them from any serious outbreaks. I confess I don't understand it."

Possibly had Mrs. Gale's neighbors put the same queries to her children, the mystery had been solved.

"Mamma," said little Edwin, one morning—the youngest and brightest of the busy group—"mamma, I ain't asleep always when you come to bed, though I keep my eyes shut and lie still. What do you whisper so long in your dressing-room for? And who is there with you? I got up last night and peeped through the door, but I couldn't see anybody."

His mother told her boy of the nightly errand to the mercy-seat, and he repeated the story to his brothers.

"I could have told you myself," was the reply of Jamie, the oldest of the boys. "Mother prays just so every morning before we are up; I found her doing it. And sometimes when we get very wild and out of sorts, you know she slips away for a few minutes and prays again. I followed her softly once or twice to see what she went up-stairs for, that's how I came to know about it."

"She's a dear, good mother, and I don't mean to trouble her any more," sobbed out the second son—usually more wilful and passionate than the rest. And to this statement and purpose they all gave a tearful and ready assent. It is not pretended that their promise of amendment was strictly kept; but their mother had gained a new hold on their hearts, and they learned to watch for the sweet and peaceful countenance which she brought from the place of prayer.—Ladies' Repository.

THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE.

IT belongs to the Protestant church to make great account of the Bible. For this it has been distinguished from the first days of the Reformation; and we hope the time may never come when it shall be less sacredly regarded or highly prized. As an inspired revelation from God, and as meeting us in a darkened and perverted world, surrounded as we are by sin, error and temptation, all calculated to lead us astray and involve us in utter ruin at last, it fully merits, and should always receive, our deepest veneration, and excite our profoundest study.

But it cannot be denied, that our professed regard for the Bible is not always illustrated in such a manner as best to prove its sincerity. The claims of the Bible are not to be put off with eulogies, however high-wrought and beautiful these may be. There are many who would be quite willing to fight for the Bible, who yet find it very difficult even to read it with any degree of concentration and care, to say nothing of shaping their lives by its precepts. Weeks and months, in the case of some, are allowed to pass away before they once turn to its sacred pages; and then, often, the only purpose that actuates them is an idle curiosity, or the desire to controvert the position taken by some one else in regard to its teachings.

With all the effort that has been made in its favor, the fact still remains and is patent—the Bible does not sustain that sacred relation to the heart that it ought to sustain—is not for the general Protestant mind that holy and sublime interest that it should be—does not carry in it that grand treasure which in words we attribute to it. Here and there an earnest, old-style Protestant Christian may be found, who, in the way of practical attention to the Bible, consistently illustrates and forcibly proves his profession. He has given his heart and mind to the work of poring over its pages. Not only his spare time, but the time, also, which he cannot so well spare, he seizes and devotes to this purpose. It is the man of his counsel, and the guide of his steps. His earnestness is seen in the biblical literature which he has gathered, by which he is aided in unlocking its meaning and coming to the possession of its lofty truths. Thus he honors the Bible truly. He seeks to enter it, not simply with his own narrow mind, uneducated or half educated, preoccupied and full of predilections and prejudices, nor yet with the best and most highly-developed intellect. It deserves, he says, more than this. It is worthy of the best thought, guided by the most ardent prayers of all the ages of the church. Into this he endeavors to live himself, so that he may be the better qualified properly to honor the sacred treasure, and from it derive those lessons which may guide him on his way through a perverted world to his Father's house.

But how seldom do we find such instances of Bible devotion at the present day! How seldom it is, that persons are found seeking aids, of the character indicated, to help them to a proper understainding of the Word of God! When it is read, it is for the most part in a perfectly disconnected way, without rule or system of any kind. The whole manner of Bible reading, as a general thing, shows plainly enough, that, however precious the Bible may be in itself, it is not for the readers what, by their professions, they say it is.

There is plainly a deception in regard to this subject. Our professions are ill sustained by our conduct. Love for the Bible, or attachment to it, is not, by any means, as great as we often suppose. How is this general carelessness to be accounted for? Not certainly on the ground of an insufficient effort to circulate the Holy Scriptures. No period has been more distinguished for work of this character than the present. Besides, men are exhorted to read and treasure it with an earnestness, which has certainly never been surpassed; and yet the fact is, that previous periods are far in advance of the present in earnest, deep, prayerful searchings of the Word of God.

We press the question—why are the Holy Scriptures so superficially skimmed over, so thoughtlessly read, or so generally neglected and dishonored? There is no fact but that has its producing cause somewhere, or in some thing; and certainly there is such a cause for this. It is important, that we should understand it. In no other way can it be removed. The Holy Scriptures demand a reverence, which, we must all confess, they do not now receive. To cultivate this, the cause producing the present irreverence must be ascertained and removed. This must be ascertained, not by one mind, nor by one hundred, but by the general Christian mind. All earnest spirits are interested in this question. What mind, zealous for the glory of God and the proper honor of His Word, can rest satisfied with the present status of professedly Christian communities in their relation to the Bible? And then even the present posture of the mind in relation to the Scriptures, bad as it is, is rapidly growing into one that is worse. The evil seems to be increasing day by day. What must the end be? We shall not now indicate our own view as to the cause of this growing evil. Our object is to start the question in other minds; Why is the Holy Bible thus neglected and dishonored, although so freely and generally circulated?—Reformed Church Messenger.

REMARKS BY EDITOR OF THE HERALD.—If the "Messenger" will allow us to suggest an answer to its inquiry, it would be, that one grand cause of this "neglect" is, the disposition to decide what is truth by Creeds and Confessions of Faith, instead of the Bible. This cause arise from the Creed Makers having practically informed all church members that in reading the Bible they are to find nothing that does not harmonize with the Creed of their church: if they do, they may expect to be expelled as heretics. Who among them wishes to run such a risk by searching the Bible for themselves? Add to this, the natural indolence of the mind as to Divine things, and the causes of the neglect of the study of the Bible are clear. Let every man know that he is personally responsible to God for his knowledge of what the Bible teaches, and that no creed will clear him before God, and we shall soon see a change in this matter.

THE FEARFUL UNCERTAINTY.

REFERRING to the enormous armaments of the European Powers, The Times describes preparations for war as without parallel in the world. The preparation is for the largest and quickest possible destruction of the human species, and never before was it so advanced, so complete, so scientific, and so ready for immediate use. Numbers have not now the value in military questions they once had, but they still count for something, and five Continential nations have five and a half millions of men either ready to march to morrow or to follow at short intervals. These are the most warlike races, and all have their special qualities for the work. Of one race we are told that they are born soldiers, and never so much at home as on the battle-field; of another, that they will endure everything, and go wherever they are commanded; of another, that a national appeal will unite them all as one man, differ as they may in their habits of warfare; of another, that they only want organization and leaders; of another, that they are only too vivacious, and difficult to restrain. These are the forces of the first-class Powers—that is, of the first-class Continental Powers, for we are not ourselves included, and, of course, not Spain, Portugal, Turkey, Greece, Belgium, Holland, or the Scandinavian nations. But what is all this for? Whom is it for? Who wishes it? Who has any purpose to be answered? Who holds this enormous avalanche suspended over our heads, waiting for the one fatal footfall or sound? There is the paradox. No nation wishes for war. Of the half-dozen Sovereigns who would have to give the word of command, not one desires war, or feels his interest to lie that way. Not one is naturally disposed to war, or now inclined to it by circumstances. Of the armies themselves, perhaps there are five men in a hundred, if so many, who do not wish for peace, for their discharge, and for their return to some peaceful employment. The statesmen all wish for peace. All nations are heavily in debt, and disabled from prosecuting numerous works long desired, by the dedication of the public money to the preparations for war. The cost of preparation, indeed, is felt to be almost as ruinous as the cost of actual war, and to be worse in having no legitimate conclusion. A war may come to an end one way or the other, but the preparation for war can only end in war. Of one Power it is said that now is the time for war, as it will never be better prepared; of another, that it would gain immensely by a respite for five years; of another, that it cannot be depended on a single day for either keeping out of war, or keeping steadily at it; of another, that it probably contemplates war at its own time, but may find its hand forced before its time; of another, that it cannot possibly wish to precipitate war, because time is wanting for it; and, of another, that since it is perishing and falling to pieces in peace, much more will it in war. The sum of this is that no one man wishes for war, no class of men wishes for war, and the public opinion of Europe would gladly see the way to pacification, disarmament, and a return to a peaceful policy. Why, then, is this not to be? Why is it even doubtful? The danger consists in the universal preparation. The Continent is one vast magazine which an incendiary may fire. One insignificant State, one man happening to be in power, may push the first cause that sets the mass in motion. They who would wait may find themselves not allowed to wait. They who wish to frighten may have to fufil their threats. They who are looking about for partners may have to enter the dance without them. When anything is more or less ready, the word of command is too easily given. It may be given even by mistake, but, once given, cannot be recalled. We ought to have something more than fortunate accidents or the absence of mistakes to depend upon. Europe is not safe for a day unless there be a common determination not to go war, and the consequent determination to regard as the enemies of Europe those who would force a war upon her. Without this security we are at war already in effect, and the actual outbreak is only a question of time.—Rock, London.

THOUGHTS ON THE PENALTY.

I AM satisfied that the doctrine of "life and death" is not fully understood; for if the subject was understood by all, then all would agree that the law against sin demanded the life of the guilty, and that it demanded it without limit. So far as the law was concerned it showed no mercy; it offered no pardon. in fact, there was no law that could give life to a dead Adam, or any other dead man: and if this be so, what must be the "consequence" of Adam's sin be to himself, and all his posterity, strictly as the result of law (aside from the atonement, and independent of it)? Would not the law by its penal claim hold the victim in death, "SLEEP," for a day, a year, a thousand years, a million years, yea, without limit? If not, why not? for the penalty was death, without limitation. Hence, as the law had power to take life, but no power to give or restore the life when once taken, and its claim to take the life of the offender was just, how long would a man "sleep," or remain dead, if there was no redemption? The only reasonable answer is, eternally.

But shall we therefore say that Jesus "is dead yet?" "and has not come up," or has not risen from the dead? By no means. But let us rather say that he gave, as a voluntary act, his mortal blood and human life which he received, not of Adam, but from God. Then "the Word was made flesh," and this human flesh-life he gave to the law to satisfy its claims on the life of guilty man, and thus give their life into his hands to be disposed of at his discretion and pleasure. But because he gave his mortal blood and flesh-life, that he received from his Father (as in conception the life came from the Father), to the law to satisfy its unlimited claim upon the mortal blood and flesh-life of the guilty, does it therefore follow that he is yet without life, and still dead? It would so follow if God had not raised him from the dead by the Holy Spirit, not to the possession of mortal life, but to immortol and Holy Spirit, or Divine life, and in this way made him perfect through suffering. Surely he was perfect before he suffered, except in the nature of his life. This imperfect life of his was as perfect as that that the sinner had forfeited to the law by his sins. And as he was sinless, the law had no claims upon it. But he gave it of choice to do his Father's will; God being pleased that he should give it to satisfy the law, gave him as a consequence an immortal or Divine life, which gave him pre-eminence above the human race, and qualified him as King to judge, restore, and rule the world.

The conclusion is, therefore, that Jesus is not still dead, although the penalty of the law was, and is, and will remain forever, in the abstract, eternal death.

As ever, yours, seeking for glory, honor, and immortality through the knowledge of the truth, and its saving power and sanctifying influences, through the practical obedience of the same. May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied unto all that love and fear God, through the knowledge of his purposes as revealed in that volume of infinite wisdom. Amen. C. F. SWEET.

ALBION, N. Y.—Voice of the West.

THE BURDEN LIFTED.

The burdened are everywhere; for disease and death, and woes nameless and numberless come to all circles. And while there are supports and consolations so ample in God, why do so few, even among professing Christians, know anything of the secrets of being happy under afflictions? Why does the idea of "rejoicing in the Lord always" appear strange to so many, while a Chloe Lankton, who is able to show the practicability of this in times of deep suffering and sorrow, or even one who suffers less with less ample supports, is accounted a great moral wonder? The grand difficulty is, the heart in its pride and selfishness will not exercise a cordial, unreserved submission to God, but is at variance with him. It says, "Let my will, not God's, be done." Hence the burden, with all its crushing weight, remains.

But let the sufferer feel, it is God's to rule, and mine to submit, and let the submission, based on a belief that God's providential government is perfect, embracing the minute, as well as great, be entire; and in this spirit let him go and tell Jesus of all his grief and his need, and humbly ask assistance from him, and beyond a doubt, the burden will be lifted, and peace, and consolation, and joy, fill his heart. Let the afflicted remember this, and those, too, who take on them to direct the afflicted. For it is impossible that God should comfort even those whose moral judgment only justifies him, but whose hearts are in rebellion against him; and on no point are sufferers more likely to be in error, and need assistance. G. L.

THE CHARACTER OF JESUS.

THE world is just beginning to appreciate the character of Jesus. It is wonderful that the four unlettered men who wrote the gospels could, in a few brief touches, give us a character such as poetry never attempted and fiction never attained. A few brief incidents have placed before us a life that has been the wonder of the world ever since. Believers and infidels have joined in its praise. Rousseau could turn from his infidelity to wonder at the character of Jesus. Theodore Parker, while denying the claims of Christ, brought all his wonderful powers of language to the task of weaving a panegyric on his character. There is no parallel to that wonderful life in the whole range of human history or of human fiction.

Men will never grow weary of looking at this character. The more they look the more they will love. We hear about religion growing old and out of date. But the character of Jesus will never be outgrown. The poetry of Homer delights us to-day as really as when the blind poet sang his numbers through the cities of Greece. St. Peter's at Rome awes men now as really as when Michael Angelo first projected its wonderful proportions. The stars above us will be as bright to-night as when they sang together at Creation's birth. But when the strains of human poetry and music have grown faint on the ear of the distant future, when the monuments of human genius have crumbled, when even the stars shall have faded from the night—the character of Jesus will shine out brighter than ever. Time will not dim the lustre of his life nor mar the perfections of his character. That life and that character are crowned with Eternal Truth. MINTA.

THE SUN AND MOON.

Galignani's Messenger (Paris) says that the sun's disk is at present riddled with holes or spots, one of which is of very considerable size. It is a deep cavity in the photosphere and so wide that the whole terrestial globe would find room in it without touching the edges. There is another spot which, though much smaller, still has one of its diameters as large as that of our earth.

The Public Ledger (Philadelphia) says: Professor Winloch, of Harvard University, reports that he has seen a volcano in active eruption in the moon during the nights of December 1st and 2d. During the past year, astronomers have differed in opinion, as to the disappearance of the crater Linnæus, marked on the best charts of the moon's surface till 1868. The destruction of this crater, if it should be the case, is stated to be the first evidence of actually observed changes going on at the surface of the moon. The observations of Professor Winloch would seem to confirm the conclusions of other astronomers on this subject. The foreign journals announce that Professer J. H. Madler, of Bonn, who is celebrated on account of the moon charts prepared by himself, has written a letter on this subject. Madler has been for many years nearly blind, but the disappearance of the crater Linnæus interests him as well as other eminent astronomers.

PRAYING AND GIVING.

"A MINISTER writes: In obtaining subscriptions for a benevolent purpose, I called upon a gentleman in one of our largest cities, who generously contributed to the object. Before leaving, I said to him, 'How much, think you, will will such an individual subscribe?' 'I don't know,' said he, 'but could you hear that man pray, you would think that he would give you all he is worth.' So I called upon him; but, to my surprise, he would not contribute. As I was about to take my leave, I said to him, 'As I came to your house, I asked an individual what you would probably give? "I don't know," said he, "but could you hear that man pray, you would think he would give you all he is worth.'" The man's head dropped, tears gushed from his eyes, he took out his pocket-book, and gave me seventy-five dollars."—Am. Presb.

THE TWO ROADS.

AN elder of a church in the State of New York, a few years ago, owned a distillery, and manufactured ardent spirits. The elder was an active Christian, and seemed quite awake to the benevolent efforts of the day. His pastor was grieved that so worthy a man should be engaged in a business which brought temporal and eternal ruin upon his fellow men, and resolved to give him faithful warning. While visiting the elder, at his house, the elder looked toward the graveyard, and said, "I love to look there; it seems to be the way to heaven." "Yes," said the pastor, "and that," pointing to the distillery, "is the way to hell." It was a word in season: and, in a few weeks, the distillery was levelled to the ground.

NOT THE RIGHTEOUS, BUT SINNERS.—In an English cathedral there is an exquisite stained window, which was made by an apprentice out of the pieces of glass rejected by his master, and it was so far superior to every other in the church, that according to tradition the envious artist killed himself with vexation.

All the builders of society had rejected the "sinners" and made the painted window of the "righteous." A new builder came; his plan was original, startling, revolutionary; his eye was upon the condemned material; he made the first last and the last first, and the stone which the builders rejected he made the head stone of the corner. He always specially cared for the rejected stone. Men had always cared for the righteous; it was left to Christ to care for sinners.

SIX SERMONS on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the LIFE-GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. BY GEO. STORRS. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death [illegible] Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEO. STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. POST D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. POST took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in thei order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the true teachings of the BIBLE is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY; by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: OR THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN; by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTERS TO A CLERGYMAN; or Life only through Christ not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburg, Pa. Price 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are 16 pages octavo. They will be sold at $3 per 100, or, fifty cents per dozen, free of postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price 7 cents.

Unless attention is paid to all these matters confusion and delay are inevitable.

LITERAL FULFILMENT OF PROPHECY.

EZEK. XXXVII., 15–28. CONCLUDING REMARKS.

SEVENTH. Will the one king be David? This is the only point of difficulty, if it be one, in this interpretation. It is less difficult, however, to admit that David will have a literal resurrection, and reign over this "one nation," than to harmonize the prophecy with any of the previous interpretations. We remark, however, as the posterity of Jacob is one, notwithstanding many generations of them have died, and as it is not the identical individuals to be gathered that were scattered and cast out, so the lineal heirs of David's throne are one; and it is in accordance with Scripture usage to denominate David's successor, David. See 1 Kings xii., 16. "So when all Israel saw the king, [Rehoboam, son of Solomon] hearkened not unto them, the people answered the king, saying, What portion have we in David? Neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse: to your tents, O Israel; now see to thine own house, David." This address was made to the king of Judah, the lineal heir to David's throne. It is authority, if we had no other, for the use of the name to the reigning king on David's throne. Jesus Christ is to have that throne, at the time that Judah and Israel are gathered. See Jer. xxiii., 5–8. "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely: and this is his name whereby he shall be called THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS. Therefore, behold the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say The Lord liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, The Lord liveth, which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all the countries whither I have driven them; and they shall dwell in their own land." Jesus Christ was "born Kings of the Jews;" Matth. ii., 2. He is a king in the direct and legal line of David; and he is alive to reign; and for any other to reign on the throne of David, Christ being alive, it would be usurpation.

EIGHTH. Can the literal posterity of Jacob be multiplied in the land spoken of? See Jer. xxiii., 3, "And I will gather the remnant of my flock out of all countries whither I have driven them, and will bring them again to their folds; and they shall be FRUITFUL and INCREASE." Also Jer. xxx., 18–20, "Thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents and have mercy on his dwelling-places; and the city shall be builded upon her own heap, and the palace shall remain after the manner thereof. And out of them shall proceed thanksgiving and the voice of them that make merry: and I will multiply them, and they shall not be few; I will also glorify them, and they shall not be small. Their children also shall be as aforetime, and their congregation shall be established before me, and I will punish all that oppress them." Zech. viii., 3–5, "Thus saith the Lord, I am returned unto Zion, and will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem, and Jerusalem shall be called, A city of truth; and the mountain of the Lord of hosts, The holy mountain. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, There shall yet old men and old women dwell in the streets of Jerusalem, and every man with his staff in his hand for very age. And the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof." Lastly, see again, Ezek. xxxvi., 8–11, "But ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit to my people of Israel; for they are at hand to come. For, behold I am for you, and I will turn unto you, and ye shall be tilled and sown: and I will multiply men upon you, all the house of Israel even all of it; and the cities shall be inhabited, and the wastes shall be builded: and I will multiply upon you man and beast; and they shall increase and bring fruit: and I will settle you after your old estates, and will do better unto you than at your beginnings: and ye shall know that I am the Lord."

NINTH. Will there be children among them? This question is answered by the previous, but we wish to compare here verse 25, "They shall dwell therein, they and their children, and their children's children," etc., with Isa. xi., 1–9, where under the reign of the "Branch out of Jesse's roots," it is said, verse 8, "The sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice's den." These texts, in connection with those under the previous head, are conclusive that there will increase by the propagation of children: of course, the "gathered" are men in the flesh, and not the subjects of the resurrection, for they "neither marry nor are given in marriage." Thus far then we find a harmony on this principle of interpretation.

TENTH. Will they no more be removed? That is—Will they be exempt from another captivity? Here we remark, the term "forever," etc., in scripture usage denotes the longest period of which the subject is capable, to which it is applied. The examples of this are clear and numerous in the Bible. The inquiry now before us is not affected, therefore, at all by their removal to immortality. We will now call attention to a portion of Scripture which is of little value on any other theory than the one we now advocate, viz., Ezek. 40–48. Under Messiah's reign, and by the restored "one nation" the city and temple described in these neglected chapters, are to be built. In chap. xliii., Ezekiel says: "Afterward he brought me to the gate, even the gate that looketh toward the east: and behold, the glory of the God of Israel came from the way of the east: and his voice was like a noise of many waters: and the earth shined with his glory. And it was according to the appearance of the vision which I saw, even according to the vision that I saw when I came to destroy the city: and the visions were like the vision that I saw by the river Chebar: and I fell upon my face. And the glory of the Lord came into the house by the way of the gate whose prospect is toward the east. So the spirit took me up, and brought me into the inner court; and behold, the glory of the Lord filled the house. And I heard him speaking unto me out of the house: and the man stood by me. And he said unto me, Son of man, the place of my throne, and the place of the soles of my feet, where I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel forever, and my holy names shall the house of Israel no more defile, neither they, nor their kings, by their whoredom, nor by the carcases of the kings in their high places." See also Jer. xxxi., 38–40, "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that the city shall be built to the Lord from the tower of Hananeel unto the gate of the corner. And the measuring line shall yet go forth over against it upon the hill Gareb, and shall compass about to Goath. And the whole valley of the dead bodies, and of the ashes, and all the fields unto the brook of Kidron, unto the corner of the horse-gate toward the east, shall be holy unto the Lord; it shall not be plucked up, nor thrown down any more forever." Ezek. xlviii., 30–35, "And these are the goings out of the city on the north side, four thousand and five hundred measures. And the gates of the city shall be after the names of the tribes of Israel: three gates northward; one gate of Reuben, one gate of Judah, one gate of Levi. And at the east side four thousand and five hundred: and three gates; one gate of Joseph, one gate of Benjamin, one gate of Dan. And at the south side four thousand and five hundred measures: and three gates; one gate of Simeon, one gate of Issachar, one gate of Zebulon. At the west side four thousand and five hundred, with their three gates; one gate of Gad, one gate of Asher, one gate of Naphtali. It was round about eighteen thousand measures: and the name of the city from that day shall be, The Lord is there;" or, "Jehovah Shamma," as the margin reads. A very different city from the one seen Rev. xxi., both in its dimensions and name.

We now appeal to all sober and candid minds, if the view here taken, of Ezek. xxxvii., 15–28, does not present a harmony that no other view ever has presented? If so, is it not evident the interpretation must be the true one?

It may be proper that we should add a few words on the expression, verse 16, "Judah, and the children of Israel his, companions." This expression does not denote the ten tribes, as such, nor the nation of Israel. It will be seen by an examination of 2 Chron. xi., 14–16, and xv., 9, that when the division took place into two nations, some individuals of the ten tribes went with Judah. Though they associated with Judah they were not Judah, but, "the children of Israel his companions:" these, of course, shared in the fortunes of Judah, and are here reckoned with them. A remark also may be necessary on the expression, "Ephraim, and all the house of Israel his companions." Ephraim was the principal tribe of the ten; and sometimes the whole were spoken of under this general name: here, as the expression in reference to Judah had been made emphatic, including the individuals that had consorted with it from Israel, it was necessary also, to prevent any mistake, to note not only the general name of Ephraim, but all the house of Israel associated with the tribe of Ephraim. In verse 19, God says "I will take the stick of Joseph—which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows," which were the other nine tribes, "and will put them with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they [not Christians, nor the resurrection elect] shall be one in my hand:" that is, "one nation," as after explained.

CONCLUSION. This prophecy, in all its parts, has never yet had a fulfilment. The ten tribes never have been gathered—Judah and Israel never have been made one nation—they never have been united under one king—they never have dwelt in the land without experiencing a removal out of it—therefore, we are to look for the fulfilment of these things as still future, and as certain in their accomplishment. Whether a portion of it will be accomplished before the advent, or all of it after, will be the subject of a future inquiry. The previous part of Ezekiel xxxvii., will have our attention next.

REPLY TO INQUIRER.

BY DR. FINLEY.

THERE is no evidence whatever to substantiate Inquirer's assertion that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul was among the Jews until after their captivity and dispersion among heathen nations. Josephus, their own learned historian, in writing to the Greeks, says, "You believe that the soul is created, and yet is made immortal by God according to the doctrine of Plato." Our readers should bear in mind that Plato lived nearly three hundred years before the advent of our Saviour, and his doctrines not only obtained among the surrounding heathen nations, and from them among the Jews, but Mosheim, in his church history, says, "What was worst of all, several tenets of a chimerical philosophy were imprudently incorporated into the Christian system. Its first promoters argued from that known doctrine of the Platonic School which was adopted by Origen and his disciples that the divine nature was diffused through all human souls." Kitto, and others of the orthodox authorities, tell us the same thing. Pausanias says, "Chaldean and Indian Magi have been the first who asserted the immortality of the soul." Of course, then, it did not originate with the Jews. Herodotus, Larcher, page 111, says: "It is indeed known that the immortality of the soul was not known to the Jews, but by the commerce which they had with the Assyrians during the time of their captivity."

We thus find that this fundamental doctrine, as it is called by orthodox writers, was unknown to the Jews until after their captivity. At the time of Christ's ministry among them their ideas of the soul were as crude as can well be imagined. For example: They asked our Saviour, "Did this man sin, or his parents, that he was born blind?" Did this man, in a previous state of existence, sin? showing that they believed in the heathen doctrine of the transmigration of souls. The doctrines of the Pharisees and Sadducees were both of them opposed to the doctrines of the Bible, and Christ repeatedly cautioned his disciples against both sects.

The remaining texts referred to by Inquirer, some five or six, have no bearing at all on the question of the soul's existence or immortality, but only upon the question of the resurrection. The conversation of our Lord with the Sadducees, Luke xx., 27, is wholly with reference to this subject. Christ said to them, "That the dead are raised." This is the only question before them. There are some important points involved in this conversation, which are unanswerably in favor of our views. Let us look at them for a few moments. "Then came unto him certain of the Sadducees which say there is no resurrection, and they asked him saying, Master, Moses wrote unto us, if any man's brother die, having a wife, and he die without children, that his brother shall take his wife and raise up seed unto his brother. There were, therefore, seven brethren, and the first took a wife and died without children. And the second took her to wife and he died childless. And the third took her, and in like manner the seven also, and they left no children and died. Last of all the woman died also. Therefore, in the resurrection, whose wife of them is she, for seven had her to wife? And Jesus answering, said unto them, The children of this world marry and are given in marriage. But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more, for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. For he is not God of the dead, but of the living, for all live unto him."

If the Sadducees supposed that Christ taught that their souls were then in heaven, the question would not have been, whose wife shall she be in the resurrection, but whose wife is she now? "Now that the dead are raised." Our Saviour admits that the patriarchs are dead, but God still calls himself their God. Why? Because they are his children, being the children of the resurrection, evidently because they all live unto him, or in his purpose to raise them to life at some future time.

Orthodoxy claims that because it is said, "For all live unto him," therefore their souls are alive now in heaven. But this would not prove that their bodies would be raised; it would, in fact, obviate any necessity for raising them at all. There are large numbers of Swedenborgians, Spiritists, and even some orthodox, who believe the only resurrection we have is that of the soul passing into some future state of existence, and deny entirely the resurrection of the body. Paul explains the meaning, and it is the only explanation that gives any point to the Saviour's argument. Romans iv., 17, speaking of Abraham, he says, "As it is written, I have made thee the father of many nations, like unto him whom he believed, even God, who quickeneth (or maketh alive) the dead, and calleth those things which be not (alive) as though they were (alive.") He was the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, because of his purpose to raise them up to life who were now dead.

There is another important point taught in this conversation with the Sadducees, viz., that it is only the righteous who will be raised up to life again. "They that are accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead," and "are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." He is not the God of the wicked dead, who are not worthy to obtain that world, and therefore are not the children of the resurrection.

4th, Inquirer says, "The Biblical account of miraculous reunions of soul and body imply the separate existence and endurance of the former." When he gives us an instance of this kind, it will be time enough to reply to this section. I have never seen one, and am sure no such case can be found in the Bible, or reliably anywhere else. Ghost stories are at a discount with destructionists as proof of any proposition.

4th, "Argument from Theology." This might pass for a weak argument in favor of universalism, but certainly not in proof of the immortality of the soul.

5th, "Argument from History. It is a significant fact that everywhere, man, in all tribes and nations, in savage or enlightened life, has two instincts peculiar to himself, that of an invisible power separate from earth, and that of a life beyond the grave." Let us see how this assertion is sustained by Inquirer's particular friends, Cicero, Plato, Socrates, etc. In the work on "The Advantages and Necessity of a Christian Revelation," Professor Leland says, "What that great man, Cicero, says of the philosophers of his time, is remarkable. In that celebrated treatise, where he sets himself to prove the immortality of the soul, he represents the contrary as the prevailing opinion. That there were crowds of opponents, not the Epicureans only (who all disbelieved it), but what he could not account for, those who were most learned, held the doctrine in contempt." Socrates says, "Can the soul which goes to the presence of a good and wise God (whither my soul shall shortly go), can this soul of ours, when separate from the body, be immediately dispersed and destroyed, as most men assert? Prof. Stuart says, "Cicero very ingenuously confesses that after all the arguments he had adduced in order to confirm the doctrine in question, it so fell out that his own mind was satisfied of it only when directly employed in contemplating the arguments in its favor; at all other times he fell unconsciously into a state of doubt and darkness." Doctor Morrison, who translated the Bible into the Chinese language, and who was a life-long missionary in China, says of the followers of Confucius, who are numbered by hundreds of millions, "and this sect of the learned, so miserably deficient respecting the Deity, is also entirely silent respecting the immortality of the soul, as well as a future state of reward and punishment. Of a separate state of existence they do not speak."

And Bishop Whately shows that "even Plato himself and all the esoteric philosophers of his own and subsequent times, among themselves denied its truth, and treated the doctrine as a fable, so notoriously and completely disbelieved by all enlightened people as not to be worth denying, much less refuting, any more than tales of fairies are by modern writers. They taught it, thinking only of the expediency of inculcating this belief on the vulgar." Just as nurses frighten children with bugaboo stories to keep them from misbehaving.

Having thus shown that the doctrine, so far from being universally received among all nations, was almost universally rejected, I feel constrained, by the necessity of the case, to leave our friend Inquirer with only "The poor Indian and his faithful dog" to bear him company in the happy hunting ground of the spirit world. "Requiescat in pace."

As to the Parthian arrow let fly at us in his inglorious retreat, we hope that he will rejoice with us when we assure him it flew wide of the mark, without doing the slightest injury to any one. So long as we have, not only Moses and the prophets, but also the words of our Lord Jesus Christ and his holy apostles to instruct us, we are free to acknowledge we "would not believe though one rose from the dead" to tell us that all men have immortal souls, and for the very good reason that the Bible informs us the dead know nothing about it. That in the day of death "all their thoughts perish." "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, in the grave." "In death there is no remembrance of thee, in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" "The living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything."

I now take leave of Inquirer, having replied to him on all the points of his argument which are intelligible. A large proportion of this rejoinder is so made up of big words and sophomoric sentences as to convey no definite ideas to the mind.

It may exhibit some classical learning to talk of "Socrates and Cicero, Seneca and Plato, Adrian the Emperor," etc., and even proper enough to express satisfaction at erring with such "great, good, and wise men of all recorded time." Inquirer will find but few, however, who will feel flattered by all of his associations. We have never before heard of a Christian who classed the Emperor Adrian with the good of all "recorded time." Unfortunately the record teaches that it was during the reign and by authority of the good Adrian that the fourth general persecution of Christians took place, when this good friend of Inquirer displayed a character almost as mean, cruel and bloodthirsty as the hateful Nero himself. When Inquirer talks of physiology bringing into the region of physical demonstration the existence and immortality of the soul, it is simply talking nonsense. When he quotes approvingly from Addison, "'Tis the divinity that stirs within us," he shows that he is at least "immensely indebted to the pagan ages," for Doctor Whately has shown that the most general belief of pagans was, that the soul is a part of God, and at death is reabsorbed into the Deity, and of course not the subject of either rewards or punishments. This is a pagan notion extensively believed among orthodox Christians. One of the most intelligent young ladies in Niles, said, not long since, that the soul was a part of the Deity breathed into man. The gentleman to whom the remark was made replied, Then a part of God, as in the case of the wicked, goes to hell, and suffers everlasting torments. Oh, said she, I never thought of that. Poor thing; her theology received quite a shock. There are many others who would do well to think. It might do them good.

And now, Mr. Editor, I cannot close these articles without expressing my sincere thanks to you for permitting us the use of your columns for our defence from a good deal of misrepresentation and injurious aspersions and insinuations in this community. It is well known that I was, twelve years ago, as orthodox as the most orthodox in any of our churches, and it was only upon a full conviction that the Bible taught the views I have now advocated that I embraced them. Some years ago I received a note, on a Sabbath morning, from an Episcopal minister, eminent for his Christian excellence, and pastor of a large and influential congregation in the city where I then resided, requesting me to come and hear him preach that morning. I accordingly went to his church and heard him preach these doctrines as plainly and forcibly as they could be presented. At my request he afterward arranged his sermon in the form of an essay, under the title of "The Wages of Sin, or the First Penalty Explained and Confirmed by Scripture." I forwarded it to the Editor of the Bible Examiner, published monthly, in New York, and it was published in that journal. It was also published in tract form, and has had a wide circulation. The author commences as follows: "The writer of this assumed and believed for many years that endless suffering was the wages of sin: he assumed that this was the teaching of the Bible, because such had been his early training, and he had never called it in question. His attention was at length directed to the subject by an intelligent friend, who suggested that if he would lay aside his early prejudices long enough to search the Scripture for himself, as the Saviour admonishes all men to do, he would find that no such doctrine was taught in the sacred volume. The suggestion was prayerfully and deliberately followed," and resulted in the full conviction of the truth as held by the destructionists. I may just add that the friend who gave him the advice was, and is, for he is yet living, one of the most prominent ministers in the Presbyterian church; and the high estimation in which he was held is shown by the fact that he was once elected to preside as Moderator of the General Assembly, the highest position in the Presbyterian church. Let me ask my Christian brethren and friends if it is not proper that we should all follow the example of this minister, laying aside prejudice, and search the Scriptures for ourselves, and see if they do not teach these doctrines? And above all things, let us follow the advice of Archbishop Whately, not to let our differences of views interfere with the exercise of Christian charity. I remain, very truly, your friend,

J. K. FINLEY.

"AN ARGUMENT ON BOTH SIDES."

MORE than once have we heard this from those who have strenuously opposed the doctrine of "Life only in Christ:" in other words, no living of those who die in their sins. This is a sign of a slight advance: it is like seeing men as trees walking. But is it true that there are arguments on both sides? There may be, but one of the two must be based on a false premise. If so, the superstructure will some time tumble and fall.

Does the Bible tell one story in one place, and in another directly contradicting it? If so, shall we not be led to say with the infidel, that "it is like an old fiddle, on which you can play any tune you please?" Who can have any confidence in such a teacher? This word which purports to come from God to instruct his creatures the way of life, can it be possible that it teaches thus? We may think it does, but in reality it cannot be. Is not the real trouble in ourselves? Would not a little closer application, and a little enlargement of our ideas regulate the matter? Are we not drawn up too close in our little self, so that we cannot see afar off? Does not our early education, our preconceived opinion, our reverence for the teachings of the Christian church and pious men in days past, help to blind our eyes? Is not a little bigotry at the bottom? Galileo, no longer ago than the fore part of the 16th century, taught the Copernican system of the earth's motion round the sun, and this the ignorant bigotry of the time condemned as heresy, and he was summoned to appear before the inquisitors at Rome, and by them was condemned to abjuration and imprisonment, and confined in the dungeons. Whether he actually suffered torture from their hands is not certain, but for all this it did not retard the earth's motion, and old earth jogs on, and not a few believe it.

Let us look at the hole of the pit whence some of us were dug. But a few years ago we believed man had an immortal, never dying soul, and what a heresy to doubt it! "Infidel, infidel," was the cry, and it has not ceased yet.

But does the Bible really teach the immortality of the soul? We read nothing in its pages about an immortal soul. True, says one, neither do we read anything about a mortal soul. But we do read about a "mortal man," and about "the soul that sinneth it shall die."

Now how did we think the Bible taught it? Why, in the fact that it taught the everlasting punishment of the wicked. Well, what is this punishment? Does it say everlasting suffering and misery? No. What does it say? It says "the wages of sin is death;" "sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." Now, a little common sense told us that death, in its primary meaning, was not life, neither is it the pain which so often attends persons while going down into death. It is being cut off from life; ceasing to live; to be in a state of death. Now, attach the word everlasting to death, and we have everlasting punishment. Thus all is plain; we have no two arguments to present on this question. "Man is mortal; he is but flesh, and all flesh is as grass;" and immortality is what is to be sought for; the great boon which our Lord purposes to bestow on "those who are accounted worthy, at his appearing and his kingdom.

Again, one step further, will some one explain this text in Job vii., 9, "As a cloud is consumed and vanisheth away, so he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more?"

Is there anything in the Scriptures that conflicts with this? Yes, says one; our Lord says, in John v., 28, 29, "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth." Now, truly, here seems to be a conflict; an argument on both sides. But he says, "I'll believe what the Lord says, rather than Job." Let us not be too hasty: was Job inspired when he wrote this? Did not the prophets write as they were moved by the Holy Ghost? Did not Jesus say, The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself, but the Father which sent me? Then these two texts, we must admit, come from the same source; from God himself.

Another thought: the Bible was first written in Hebrew and Greek, now styled the dead languages. It comes to us through translators. None claim that they were inspired; and King James' version has been convicted, by learned and pious men, of at least 20,000 errors. Now I do not say there is an error in either of these texts; but as they stand in this translation, they seem to be in perfect conflict, presenting an argument on both sides. Can both arguments be true?

Once more. The word grave in Job is translated from the Hebrew word sheol; the corresponding word to sheol in the Greek is hades. Now the word graves, in John v., 28, is not hades, therefore it is not in direct conflict with Job. The Greek word is mnemiosis, having another signification. It is not all the dead in hades; it uses no such language, and we say, as Judge Halsted has truly remarked, "This verse cannot, and was not intended by Christ to show that the wicked will be raised; it would overturn the uniform and unbroken testimony of Scripture to the contrary. The word mnemiosis used by him disproves any such intention."

Whatever this text may teach, is not my purpose in this article to explain. I am well satisfied that it does not teach the resurrection of all the dead. I am also satisfied the whole of man by nature is mortal, and that the Scriptures present one "uniform and unbroken" argument that the wicked who have died in their sins will never live again. "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise;" "they shall "be no more remembered;" "they shall not see life;" "like sheep they are laid in the grave," and "shall utterly perish in their own corruption." Not that after this they are raised incorruptible (as H. Munger admitted they were in a discussion in the Bethel Church last fall), and then perish in their own corruption. "No," said he, "they don't go back to corruption, they are burned up." Then the text does not read correctly; it should read, "But these as natural brute beasts made to be taken up incorruptible and burned in fire till they utterly perish in their own incorruption." Well, now, I must confess I am so blind and ignorant that I do not understand how a man who has been made incorruptible can utterly perish! Will some one give me light? I have examined Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, and can find no ray of light in this direction whatever. But "to the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

Now, I believe the Scriptures present one sound and truthful argument on one side, and not on both. I believe it to be God's eternal truth that "the man who wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead." On this ground I can see how the Scriptures can be made beautifully to harmonize, and on no other.

Now, my brethren, may all these glorious truths of the Scriptures have such a sanctifying influence upon each and every heart, that when the Master comes we may hear him say, Well done; through faith in my atoning blood thy sins are pardoned; thou art free. "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Dr. J. K. Finley's Articles:

ON THE NON-IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

These articles have now appeared in twelve numbers of our paper. They have been read with much interest by many. They are well adapted to convey instruction to inquiring minds, especially to those who are just commencing to feel an interest on the question of immortality.

Several have spoken to us or written desiring to have these articles put in a Tract and added to our "Campaign Documents." We would be pleased to have it done; but we have no funds to do it, and hardly dare to expect it possible to raise them. The whole series would make a pamphlet near the size of "Life from the Dead," or from seventy-five to ninety-six pages. The cost of getting stereotype plates would not be less than $100; perhaps more. Paper, printing, folding and stitching, fifty dollars more per 1,000. Hence the first 1,000 will cost in the vicinity of $150. After that fifty dollars per 1,000.

These are not pretended to be exact estimates: but will not vary, we think, much from the actual cost. We make this statement that our friends may know how the matter stands, and that they may understand what is to be done if the articles are to be issued in a pamphlet.

We are determined not to go in debt for any of these matters; or to go forward in the printing business any faster than the funds are supplied to meet the demands for printing materials.

The sum, then, necessary to do the work on this one enterprise is $150 for the first thousand. Are there friends who are willing to donate that amount for this one object? You can have back all you donate in the work at fifteen cents per copy, for the first thousand. After those are thus disposed of, you can have any amount you desire at five dollars per 100.

T. R. Crocker, Brooklyn, N. Y., pledges ten dollars.

"The Theology of the Bible."

The above work, by ex-Chancellor Halsted, has been widely purchased by our subscribers on the Judge's most generous offer. The retail price of it is three dollars; but the Author puts it at two dollars to any subscriber of the Herald of Life, free of postage, on the receipt of the money. No one should send to us for the work, but directly to the Author. Direct your letter, plainly, as follows,

"Hon. O. S. Halsted,

"Box 91, Newark, N. J."

Give him exact information of your address, writing your own name plain, and the name of your Post office. If you do not do this, you may, as you deserve, meet with disappointment.

We have now an order for our works, on hand, without the name of the person that sent for them. We can't help such persons, much as we may desire to do it.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MARCH 10, 1869.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

An Honorable Act.

In 1824 we united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and immediately commenced preaching; the year following we were received into the "Travelling Connection" of that church. We were a member of their General Conference in 1832, at Philadelphia; also a member of their next Gen. Conf., which was held in Cincinnati, in 1836. At the last-named Conference Samuel Norris (now a resident of Brooklyn, N. Y.,) and ourself, attended, one evening, an anti-slavery prayer-meeting. We were both members of the Gen. Conf. from the New Hampshire Annual Conference. Our whole delegation (nine in number), were known anti-slavery men, and we had not held our peace on the subject. This was well understood by every member of the Gen. Conf. Our attendance at the prayer-meeting spoken of was the occasion of arousing the pro-slavery element in the Conf., and the next morning a "Resolution," with a "Preamble," was introduced to censure the "two brethren" who had dared to go to said prayer-meeting. After much debating it was passed by that large body with only sixteen dissenting votes.

This act did but convince us more thoroughly of the wickedness of slave-holding, and its utter irreconcilableness with the principles of Christianity. One of the largest and most respectable ecclesiastical bodies in the United States had pronounced a censure on two members of its body for attending and taking part in a meeting among those who met to pray over the subject of slavery. From that hour we resolved that no ecclesiastical body or Conference should decide for us as to our duty to God and our fellow men. Here was laid the foundation (unknown to ourself then), of our course since, unto this day. We counted the authority of God to be above all other, and resolved that no man or body of men should ever dictate to us again, in matters of faith or practice, and that our responsibility was to God alone. True we had no thought at the time, where it would lead us.

At our next Annual Conf., after the Gen. Conf. of 1836, our character was passed, with the usual statement, made when a member's name is called, "Nothing against Br. Storrs;" thus virtually setting aside the censure of the Gen. Conf. After this action by the Annual Conf., in our case, we asked and received a "Location," as it is called; that is, though still holding the ministerial relation to the church, we no longer receive appointments from the bishops of said church, but locate and travel where and when we please. We travelled many thousands of miles, preaching and lecturing, during the next four years, or till 1840. At that time we had become settled that inherent immortality was an error, and that we could not consistently hold any relation to the M. E. Church, and hence withdrew our connection and stood alone; holding that to be a member of the "body of Christ" it was not necessary to be connected with any sect or party, but receive and love all who manifested that they had chosen Christ as their Lord and Master and were accepted of him. That position we have maintained for twenty-nine years, and expect to hold it till our Lord shall return from heaven, or we "sleep in him."

We never had a church censure passed on us except the one by the Gen. Conf. of the M. E. Church in 1836, which now leads us to introduce this article with the heading, "An Honorable Act," because the Gen. Conf. of the same church, in 1868, with much honor to itself, "rescinded" the action of 1836, after thirty-two years, and after slavery is dead; and if it were not that we are about thirty or forty years in advance of it on the Life views, we would be strongly tempted to return to their body; but we think we will wait for those good brethren to come up in this matter, also, as they have on the other. We may have passed away before that day comes; but come it will, if the Lord himself does not come from heaven before another forty years shall pass.

Be that as it may, we heartily thank the Gen. Conf. of the Methodist E. Church for the noble and praiseworthy act, the official information of which has just reached us, and which we herewith lay before our readers. It is as follows:

"Mission Rooms, 200 Mulberry St.,
"New York, March 1, 1869.

"Rev. George Storrs,
"Brooklyn, New York.

"Dear Sir: Having been informed that you were a member of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1836, and that you are one of the two members censured by that body for lecturing on and in favor of modern abolitionism, I take pleasure in transmitting to you, in obedience to the order of the General Conference of 1868, the action of that body, rescinding and annulling the action of the General Conference of 1836.

"Yours truly,
"W. L. Harris, Sec. Gen. Conf."

"This is to certify, that on the 28th day of May, A. D., 1868, the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, then in session in the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois, did adopt the following preamble and resolutions, brought before that body in a report from the Committee on the State of the Church, namely:

Whereas, The memorial from Elkton, Maryland, signed by Rev. L. C. Matlack and fifteen of his official members, asking the General Conference to rescind the preamble and resolutions of the General Conference of 1836, censuring Certain of its members—said to be still living—for lecturing on and in favor of modern abolitionism, has also had our careful consideration; and believing that the object sought by the memorialists is just and desirable, we recommend to this body the adoption of the following resolutions:

"Resolved, 1. That this Conference does not approve the action of the General Conference of 1836 in censuring Certain of its members for publicly speaking against the great evil of slavery; and we hereby rescind and pronounce void the aforesaid preamble and resolutions.

"Resolved, 2. That the preceding preamble and resolution be placed on the journal of the General Conference."

"And this is further to Certify that on the same day—

"On motion of Gilbert Haven, the Secretary was instructed to transmit to the parties concerned, if still living, and if not, to their families, Certified Copies of the preamble and resolutions adopted by the General Conference, rescinding the action of the General Conference of 1836."

"Attest,
"William L. Harris,
Secretary of the General Conference.
"New York, March 1, 1869."

A Concluding Remark by the Editor.—Long as we have been separated from the M. E. Church, we have never felt any hostility to it, and have ever felt more affection for its ministry, with whom we have so long been associated, than for that of any other body of ministers. Of course, our attachment to any organized body, with a peculiar name, indicating a party in the body of Christ, has long since ceased. We believe that Christians should meet together without knowing each other except as friends and lovers of Jesus, the one and only Head of the church of God: that in their meetings all should be free to compare thoughts, and be allowed to express them in a kind and plain manner, and not be liable to censure for so doing. How else can we "grow in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ," which we are commanded to do?

Zion's Herald: "Caught."

The above-named Methodist paper, on "Inauguration Day," March 4th, appears with an editorial headed "Caught." Who do you think was caught, kind reader? Was it Gen. Grant? No, indeed; it was "Rev. George Storrs!" Well now, how was that done? We will tell you how "Rev." Gilbert Haven, editor of the aforesaid paper, says it was accomplished. He speaks as follows:

We threw out this bit of bait to our Annihilation brethren a week or two since:

A Nut shell Argument for Annihilationists.—If all men sleep at death, then the man Christ Jesus was unconscious between His death and resurrection. If unconscious then, how could He take his life again, as He declares He has power to do, and did do?

Rev. George Storrs, who left our Church twenty-five years ago, and has never joined any other since, jumped at this bait and swallowed it whole. In The Herald of Life he denies the conscious life of Christ Jesus between His death and resurrection. He explains himself thus:

"He voluntarily lays down His life; but before He does it, He chooses to take His life again, and His Father pledges to raise Him from the dead. Christ recognizes His Father's promise, and He voluntarily lays down His life so trustingly in that promise as to enable Him to say, 'I have authority to take it again. What was that 'authority, liberty or right, founded upon? Was it not on the promise of the Father that, He would not leave 'the man Christ Jesus' in 'sheol nor suffer Him to see corruption?' Our salvation, then, may depend on our faith as to who raised up Christ from the dead. Let us beware of attributing this event to the wrong person."

Such is the statement of Br. Haven as to the manner in which Geo. Storrs was "caught." We shall see presently whether our friend's hook holds, even as well as the fish held Jonah. At any rate, we assure our respected brother, we are not conscious that his hook had either point or brad, and if we "jumped at this bait and swallowed it whole," as he says, we think the fisherman, in his anxiety to draw out the fish, fell into the watery element, and mistook his fall for a success. Be that as it may, we shall see who is most tangled in a net.

Br. Haven says of the paragraph he quotes from our article, "This confession practically denies the divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Let us ask our Br., who was the subject of his "bait," and to what did we reply? We believe he will confess the "divinity of our Lord" did not enter into his "Nut shell Argument," nor into our reply at all. His argument states, expressly, it is "the man Christ Jesus;" and we responded accordingly. If we "practically denied the divinity of our Lord" by our remarks, he equally "denied" it in his nut shell argument. He made "the man Christ Jesus" the ground of argument. Does our esteemed Br. Haven hold to the "Article of Faith" which says, that our Lord "Possesses two whole and perfect natures: the Godhead and Manhood?" We suppose he does; and hence very properly, in his nutshell argument, spoke of His Manhood; especially has he said "the man Christ Jesus," and says "His death and resurrection." He surely did not include "the Godhead" in such an expression. Orthodox as he may be he would not have said the Godhead had a "death and resurrection!" If he had, we certainly should have disputed so preposterous an assumption. But our Br. could not be guilty of such a thought. He spoke as a wise man when he said "the man Christ Jesus." We accepted that expression, and argued from it; and there was no "denial of the divinity of our Lord" expressed or implied in our remarks. We trust our Br. will on reflection, see that such is the fact. But he goes on to prove he has "caught" us, and speaks as follows in proof that "the man Christ Jesus" raised himself from the dead:

"All power," He says, "is committed unto Me of the Father." And this is the basis of His declaration as to His resurrection, for He immediately adds as if He would say, "because of this," "I have power to lay down my life, and I have power to take it again." He confirms this more by continuing "This commandment have I received of My Father." Here is a voluntary act of sovereignty, not of submission. "I have received a commandment to take up My life, not to have it given Me."

Our Br. has fallen into a little confusion in this statement, or else we have in reading it. He has not quoted the first text accurately; but that we do not find fault with, because we are all liable to such accidents. However we will put the text referred to before our readers just as the Bible has it. "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth." Matth. xxviii., 18. Our Br. says, "This is the basis of His declaration as to His resurrection."

How can that be the basis of what He says John x., 18, about laying down His life and taking it again, seeing the statement of "all power given unto" him is made after his resurrection was an accomplished fact? In this matter our Br. has certainly "caught" himself, and not us. But he goes on to say, that our Lord (after his statement that "all power is committed," etc.) "immediately adds as if He would say, 'because of this,'" etc. "Immediately" after what? Why immediately after He had told his disciples "All power," etc. The whole translation is thus placed after our Lord's resurrection from the dead; and yet it is brought forward by our respected Br. to prove that "the man Christ Jesus" could raise himself from the dead: that is, after He was raised from the dead, and "all power in heaven and earth" was "given unto" him. He tells his followers, "I have power to lay down my life, and I have power to take it again." Truly a man must be exceeding hungry to "swallow" such a "bait whole." The author of such a theory may have "caught" the fishes that hang about his net, but we are not in that pool, and therefore not "caught" But our Br. goes on to say, our Lord "confirms this more by continuing, 'This commandment have I received of my Father.'" All this, be it remembered, has for its "basis" the declaration, "All power is given unto me," etc., which was made after His death and resurrection were accomplished facts. Br. Haven, that "bait" is altogether larger than we can possibly "swallow whole:" we are obliged to dissect it first; and then we find it wholly unsuitable for food, so we are not yet "caught."

We now come to our Br's conclusion from the aforesaid argument; it is this,

"Here is a voluntary act of Sovereignty, not of submission. 'I have received a commandment to take up My life, not to have it given Me.'"

An "act of Sovereignty," and yet done by the "commandment" of another. Is that Boston logic? If "the man Christ Jesus" was "commanded" to do a thing, a superior power issued that command; and no logic or Bible can prove the contrary. That He had "all power given unto" him "in heaven and in earth" at or after his resurrection, proves that He did not possess it before; and that he, as "the man Christ Jesus," received it from another "person." That person our Br. has admitted was "the Father:" and "orthodoxy" itself will hardly dare call "the Father" and "the man Christ Jesus" one person: their creed maintains there are "three persons in the Godhead." But we are not in controversy about the Godhead, at all; it is "the man Christ Jesus" that our Br. Haven and ourself are talking about. Will he please keep this in mind should he see fit to notice us further. He goes on to say,

But it seems from our good brother's argument, that all the power He had was that which Stephen had, the power to say, "Into thy hands I commit my spirit." This is a great falling off from all power, and a commandment to use that power Himself in His own person.

Our brother still overlooks the fact that this "all power" was what "the man Christ Jesus" said, after his resurrection, He had given him. From that power, thus given him, there was no "falling off" according to our "argument." Besides, Stephen had no promise of a resurrection in "three days" to rely on, as "the man Christ Jesus" had. Will our respected Br. H. tell us where He had "a commandment to use all power in His own person" before his resurrection from the dead?

Our brother thinks our view, "Disagrees with Peter's declaration that He ("the man Christ Jesus") 'preached' between His death and resurrection." Our view disagrees with the construction put on Peter's declaration, but not with the declaration itself. Does our Br. really believe that "the man Christ Jesus" descended into the theological hell and preached to "the spirits in prison" there? That would suit the Universalist's idea; and Spiritists would not very much oppose the notion.

We proceed to notice Br. H.'s concluding remarks. He says:

To such absurdities do we run when we abandon the Church of God, and the simple teachings of His Word.

Here are two insinuations: 1. That George Storrs has "abandoned the Church of God." 2. That we have abandoned "the simple teachings of His Word." To both charges we plead "Not guilty." We never were more firmly attached to either. We have abandoned self-organized churches, who have taken some other name than the name of Christ; and we have "abandoned" the traditions of men and accepted the pure word of God instead. These are our two grand offences against the self-styled churches, who make their creeds the rule of discipline, instead of the word of God alone. But we have not quite done with this point. Rev. Gilbert Haven, in his opening remarks, said, "Rev. George Storrs left our Church twenty-five years ago and has never joined any other since." Then, after criticising some of our positions, he says, "To such absurdities do we run when we abandon the Church of God." etc.

Will our good brother tell us if he believes the Methodist Episcopal Church is "The Church of God," and to be out of that, is to be out of the Church of God? His language seems to imply it. If such is the fact, it is highly important that all men should understand it; for all persons who are of the church of God are of "the body of Christ," and will, if they keep in it, infallibly be saved into eternal life. Hence if the Methodist E. Church is "the Church of God," the way and the only way to be saved is to belong to that church, and no member of that church can be lost, for the Church of God, being "the body of Christ," can no more be lost than the Head of that body can be lost.

Is Br. Haven willing to take such a position? We might say of it, "To such absurdities do we run when we abandon the church of God, and the simple teachings of his word," to unite with self-made bodies and take some other name than the name of Christ upon us. We leave others to judge who is "caught" now. Do not struggle too hard to break this net, seeing you are "practically" in it.

Br. Haven next attempts to establish the idea that "the man Christ Jesus" raised himself from the dead; for it was "the man Christ Jesus" that both he and ourself were talking about in our previous articles, as will be seen by reference to the extracts at the head of this response. How does our Br. now proceed. He says,

"God raised him ['the man Christ Jesus,'] from the dead," but it was God in Christ that worked this mighty work and brought his own temple of the body from the grave where he had laid it.

Then it was not "the man Christ Jesus" that raised himself after all; "it was God in Christ that worked this mighty work." That is right, Br. H. That is exactly what we believe; you could not express our view better. But our friend makes an omission in the last member of this sentence: he fails to tell us what was done with the soul of "the man Christ Jesus;" for he says "God . . . brought his own temple of the body from the grave where he had laid it." Thus "the man Christ Jesus" is entirely overlooked, and nothing but "the body" has a resurrection. Will our brother be kind enough to inform us what became of "the soul" of "the man Christ Jesus?" Was that "left in hell," or did God bring it out of hell, and nothing said about it? Was the body of so much more importance than the soul, that nothing is said of it, while the body is magnified and extolled so mightily? Do not forget, brother, that "the man Christ Jesus" said "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." Matth. xxvi., 38; and please do not forget that it was "His soul" that was "made an offering for sin," and that "He poured out his soul unto death." Isa. liii., 10, 12. Remember, also, that Paul saith, "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures," and that "If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain; yea, and we are found false witnesses of God, because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ, whom he raised not up, if so be the dead rise not." 1 Cor. xv., 3, 14, 15.

Will our brother tell us if "the body" was Christ, or whether it took body and soul to make "the Christ?" Please keep in mind, "according to the Scriptures" Christ's "soul was made an offering for sin"—and that "He poured out his soul unto death." His soul, then, was dead. But your resurrection theory does not recognize its resurrection at all—it was only his "body" that you get raised. Did his soul remain "in hell?" and is it to remain there "vicariously" to keep us "poor, miserable sinners," from having to go there? Pray tell us if such is your view of the subject? You certainly have overlooked "the man Christ Jesus'" soul in your resurrection process; at least, it does not appear in your programme of the matter. How is that to be accounted for, only that your theory denies "the simple" and positive "teaching of his word," that Jesus' soul was made "an offering for sin," and that "He hath poured out his soul unto death?" Are "such absurdities," as your theory involves, to be accepted as "the simple teachings" of God's word? Our brother Haven goes on to say:

Whoever accepts this doctrine of annihilation, or a material soul, will find himself caught in the error of denying the immortality of the Lord that bought him.

Let us have plain talk, and not speak like heathen oracles. We both commenced our talk about "the man Christ Jesus." The Editor of the Herald of Life has "kept to the text." Whether Br. H. has done the same, let our readers judge. What does he mean by "the Lord," in this last item? Does he, or does he not, mean the same as "the man Christ Jesus?" If he does mean the man then he is "caught in the error of denying the" Scripture fact that "the man Christ Jesus poured out his soul unto death:" and, of course, he denies that we have been "bought" at all; for then Christ did not "die for our sins according to the Scriptures," and Paul's testimony was a mistake. If "the man Christ Jesus" did "pour out his soul unto death," then his soul was not "immortal" till he was raised from the dead; because if immortal he could not die. But he did die "according" to "the simple teachings of God's word." Paul saith, "Knowing that Christ being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him." Rom. vi., 9. Then the Christ was once dead, and death had dominion over him. Then he ("the man Christ Jesus,") was not immortal; and his immortality depended on his resurrection from the dead, and "God in Christ," and not Christ's soul, raised him from the dead, and by that transaction he "put on immortality," and so he "dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him"—he is immortal, and has the "power of an endless life." Heb. vii., 16.

To this view agree the words of our risen Lord, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold I am alive forevermore, Amen: and have the keys of hades and of death." Rev. i., 18. Will Br. Haven tell us who the "I" and the "He" represent in this text? Does not your theory maintain the personality is in the soul? Very well; then the soul-Christ "was dead;" himself being witness; and "The God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory . . . according to the working of his mighty power . . . wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand," etc. Eph. i., 17-20.

No class of men more firmly believe in "the immortality of the Lord that bought" us than those who our Br. says "accept this doctrine of annihilation." But we do not accept "this doctrine of" the immortality of "the man Christ Jesus" before "he was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father." Rom. vi., 4. Then indeed he became permanently and eternally immortal, and had "given unto him all power, in heaven and in earth." Matth. xxviii., 18. Then he became, by that gift, the communicator of immortality to all the members of his body—the church: that is, all who by "one Spirit are baptized into one body"—"the body of Christ." 1 Cor. xii., 13, 27. That baptism constitutes the person a true member of "the church of God," and is the pledge of their resurrection from the dead "at the last day;" for "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. viii., 11. That is the way into immortality, and the Bible speaks of no other.

As the Head ("the man Christ Jesus") was dependent upon the Spirit of God for his resurrection and immortality; so are all the members of His body—the church. Only a union with the Head, and receiving of his fulness, can secure any one's resurrection; and without a resurrection from the dead, or a change equivalent to it, no one can ever attain to immortality. Paul saith, "Behold I show you a mystery: We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed: for this corruptible must put on" [not put in] "incorruption, and this mortal must put on" [not put in an immortal soul, as "orthodoxy" has it: no; but put on] "immortality" etc. 1 Corth. xv., 51–53. No fancy soul is seen in all this transaction: an important omission if such a soul exists as "orthodoxy" claims. Br. Haven says.

The Herald of Life is logical and consistent, and sees where it comes out.

Thank you, brother, for this compliment; and sincerely wish we could return it; but we are sorry to say, we cannot; for we do not think "Zion's Herald" is either logical or consistent on this question.

We come now to the concluding remarks of our excellent brother Haven. The following are his words:

May God deliver all bewildered brethren from a dogma that compels them, if consistent, to make Christ Himself a victim of the grave, body, soul, and spirit. No such sentiment can make its believer shout over his own death, "Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

We take it for granted our brother is talking of "the man Christ Jesus." "A victim" is something "destroyed or sacrificed in order to effect some purpose." In one sense, the Christ was not the "victim of the grave;" that is, the grave could not retain him, or continue its dominion over him. But that He went into the grave, without reservation, Paul affirms when he says, "I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures:" [we have seen how that was: "He poured out His soul unto death;"] "and that He was buried," etc. 1 Corth. xv., 3, 4. Does not this language show that Paul was ignorant of the idea that His soul was exempt from death and burial? The Apostle never makes such an exception, nor does the Bible anywhere make it; therefore it is unfounded in the word of God, and is a tradition by which the atonement is "practically" set at nought, and no man's "soul or spirit" is redeemed by it. "The man Christ Jesus" died, was buried, and God raised him up from death, made Him immortal, so that He "cannot die any more." In the same way will Christ's body—the Church—be raised up from the dead and made immortal, by the administration of the risen and immortal Jesus, now clothed with all power in heaven and earth. He has, by the gift of his Father, immortality, eternal life, now to bestow. He had it not till himself was crowned with it at his resurrection from the dead. It is now in his hands, and He has told us over and over again when he will bestow it, and on whom, viz., on those who believed on him, and "at the last day."

We do not wonder that our excellent brother says, "No such sentiment can make its believer shout over his own death, 'Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ;'" for a greater perversion of truth cannot well be imagined than to apply that language to a believer's death. We cannot believe Br. Haven will stake his theological knowledge on such an application of Paul's words. Will he please turn to 1 Corth. xv., 57, and connection, and tell us if he is satisfied those words have truly any other application than to the song of the redeemed after and for their deliverance from death by the resurrection at the last trump?

Hear the apostle "So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall come to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." It seems to us undeniable that the victory is not at the saint's death, but at his resurrection at the last trump. It is then the song of triumph comes of "Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Then, and not till then, is the truth of this statement to be realized. The saints meet their reward and have their triumph "at the resurrection of the just." Luke xiv., 14. Then "death, the last enemy," is to be "destroyed," as "it is written," Hosea xiii., 14, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction." And again, Isa. xxvi., 19, "Thy dead men shall live." . . . "Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust," etc. Also Isa. xxv., 8, "He shall swallow up death in victory," etc. Then comes the song "Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory," etc.; but the victory is not obtained till the resurrection; though the dying believer may "rejoice in hope" of that victory, which will indeed be the next event of which he will be conscious, because time is annihilated to the dead, for they "know not anything," and "there is no work, nor knowledge in sheol [the state of death] whither thou goest." Eccl. ix., 5, 10.

Our readers can now judge for themselves who is "caught." Sure we are that we feel no bands but those of love, and hope that bond may ever bind Br. Haven and ourself together, however we may differ in the exposition of the "only rule both of our faith and practice"—the Bible.

THE WATERS TROUBLED.

It appears the "Boston Preachers' Meeting"—Methodist Episcopal—has had quite a discussion on the "duality" of man, "which has elicited much attention," it seems. We are glad to hear it is agitated—the more the better. The time was, and not many years since, when orthodoxy considered it a settled question, not admitting of discussion; but they are obliged to discuss it now, and the more they discuss it the more they will lose ground.

The Report of this Boston Preachers' Meeting—for which we are indebted to "The Methodist"—says

Rev. William McDonald presented a very able Bible argument on the affirmative—able in two respects: first, because biblical; second, the Scriptures were so arranged as to make them all tell in this one direction. His principal points were:
1st. That the Bible makes a clear distinction between the spirit and the body.
2d. The spirit does not depend on the body for its existence.
3d. The Bible teaches that the righteous, at death, go where Christ is.

We are glad to learn they had a "Bible argument." That is just where we like to meet the dualists, and where we seldom find them. How the preacher so "arranged the Scriptures as to make them all tell in this one direction" we are not told. We would be glad to know that he did not do it, as report said a Universalist did in our native town, when we were a boy. It was this—He erased all the texts containing anything unfavorable to his views, and then when an opponent quoted such texts, his reply was "that is not in my Bible."

Some such "arranging of the Scriptures', is essential to teach "man's duality." One of our opposers, twenty years ago, undertook to "arrange the Scriptures to make them all tell" that man was a "trinity;" so he talked of "the soul man—the body man, and the spirit man," and no "Philadelphia Lawyer," (for it was in that city) could tell which of the three men was the sinner, or transgressor of law. Our "Dualists" are in a like predicament. If man is dual (that is double) pray tell us which is the sinner? If the body, all right; it does die and ought to die. If it is the spirit—which the Boston Dualists say "does not depend on the body for its existence"—then the spirit is the sinner; and why kill the body for the sin of the spirit, and let the spirit escape death? If it was both the spirit and body that sinned, then the body must have intelligence; for without that it could not be a subject of law or yield obedience: then what becomes of the assumption that "matter cannot think?"

If "the Bible makes a clear distinction between the spirit and the body," it never speaks of man's spirit being alive when the man is dead. If "the Bible teaches that the righteous at death go where Christ is," it never teaches that it is his soul or spirit that goes there; no, not one such utterance in the Bible. We do not say that Dualists cannot infer it; but we challenge the production of a single text that plainly says it. For this we wait the proof.

The report of this "Boston Preachers' Meeting" goes on to say:

The following absurdities were then considered as necessarily belonging to the system of materialism:
1s. It makes no distinction between the state of the sinner before and after the resurrection.
2d. It makes no distinction in the degrees of punishment in a future state, so clearly set forth in the word of God.
3d. The absurdity of making the righteous liable to the same punishment, from death to the resurrection, that is inflicted on the wicked after the judgment—namely, death.
4th. The absurdity of making death the extreme penalty of the law, when the Bible speaks of a much "sorer punishment" than death visited upon those who "do despite unto the spirit of grace."
5th. The absurdity of making the punishment of the wicked to consent in simply non-existence, in opposition to the Bible, which represents it to be conscious suffering.
6th. The absurdity of making the conscious suffering of the wicked terminate at death, whereas the Scriptures represent it to be eternal.
7th. The doctrine stamps as a deception all the beautiful hopes of the righteous inspired by the Almighty at death. Reference was here made to the experience of Fisk, Grimshaw, Evans, and Payson, all of whom died with the prospect of being immediately with the Lord.

We take up the foregoing imaginary "absurdities," as numbered by the report.

("1.") This is doubtful in its meaning, and may apply to a certain class of materialists, but not to us. We believe there is a mighty "distinction between the state of the sinner before and after the resurrection." In the first place, the sinner who dies in his sins has no part in the resurrection: he is eternally held "by the cords of his sins" in the "congregation of the dead. Prov. xxi., 16.

("2.") As to "degrees of punishment in a future state," we challenge the evidence "in the word of God" of any such thing. It is purely a human speculation.

("3.") The statement of this paragraph is an entire misconception of the subject. The righteous die, it is true, but they "die in the Lord," and will have a resurrection into life eternal "at the last day." Death is inflicted on the wicked, and that death holds them in its eternal dominion: never shall they live again—"They shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on them." Do our "Boston Preachers" see no distinction? Dying is not the punishment; it is an unbroken death state that is the punishment: that is eternal to the wicked. But it is neither eternal nor unbroken to the righteous; and hence is not "the same," in any sense.

("4.") This imaginary "absurdity" is founded on one solitary text, and that misconstrued. The Syriac version, translated by Prof. Murdock, formerly of the "Andover Theological Institute," reads, "How much more, think ye, will he receive capital punishment," etc., instead of sorer: marking the greater certainty of the death punishment, and not of a worse punishment.

("5.") All we need to say on the statement of this paragraph is, "the Bible" affirms "the wages of sin is death," and nowhere represents "the punishment of the wicked," in a future life, "to be conscious suffering." Prove it if you can.

("6.") This paragraph is a mere assumption; for nowhere is there an assertion in the Bible that "represents the conscious suffering of the wicked to be eternal." Let us see your proof, if you have any.

("7.") On this paragraph we would ask, Where in the Bible is there any testimony to inspire what is called "the beautiful hopes of the righteous, at death" of "going to heaven immediately?" For that is what is meant by this language, though the report takes a roundabout way to express it. We hesitate not to say, not one promise or declaration of "the Almighty" can be found in the Bible that "the righteous shall go to heaven at death." Such an idea is "a deception," founded in ignorance or something worse. The ignorance may not be a sin, unless it is wilful; and hence, will not prevent Christ, their Lord, from raising them "up at the last day."

The "hope" the pure Gospel inspires is that Christ—who is "the resurrection and the life"—will raise "His body—the Church—up at the last day," when "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven." This hope is that "inspired by the Almighty," and "is set at nought by you builders" who would have an "immortal soul go to heaven at death." Theoretically you "make void the counsel of God to establish your own traditions:" and thus have you made the resurrection of the dead a useless matter, and virtually dropped it out of your preaching; so that your ministrations no more resemble Christ's and his apostles,' as to a future life, than darkness resembles light. In this matter you follow not the light which "the Almighty" has given, but the traditions of men.

We are not saying that such men will not enter into life, in the future; but we do say, they will not enter into it in the way they have supposed; nor will one of them who dies, or has died—however long since—enter into the future life till "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God," then shall "the dead in Christ, rise first," and "we who are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thess. iv., 16, 17. That is "the Almighty's" method for "the righteous" to be "with the Lord."

All appeals "to the experience" of such good and pious men as Fish, Payson, and others, is of no avail so long as we "have a more sure word" of "the Almighty" in the matter; and besides, you know nothing as to whether they were "immediately with the Lord at death." Who has ever returned to testify that such is the fact? Is "Spiritism" of more authority with you than the testimony of "the Almighty?"

That those good and pious men, of whom you speak, will be "with the Lord" the next moment of consciousness, after death, we have no doubt; and, to them, that will be "immediately," because their total unconsciousness till the resurrection annihilates time and space to them. They died with the idea of an immediate entrance into the joy of their Lord. Such an idea was the result of error, but not such an error as will exclude them from the promised resurrection; and how rejoiced—not to say surprised—will they be to find "this mortal" has "put on immortality," and the whole body of Christ—the church—are with them glorified together, instead of their having to wait as "disembodied spirits" for thousands of years, perhaps, for other members of the body of Christ to be ready, before the resurrection of "their bodies," as they say, could take place.

Let us have the gospel hope, and not the fancies and traditions of men. Life from the dead, at the last day, is the hope the pure gospel inspires. Let us not barter it for the fancies of men.

WARSAW, N. Y.

THE following letter was received last week too late for insertion. It is from J. W. MCCAGG, written at the close of Br. Burbank's labors in Warsaw, and will be read with interest. Br. McCagg has been alone in that place in our Life views.—ED.

WARSAW, N. Y., 10 o'clock Sunday eve., Feb. 28, 1869.

BR. STORRS: I can hardly express to you the apparent success of our glorious truth, "Jesus the only LIFE-GIVER. We have had very bad weather all the time Br. Burbank has been here. I do not mean to complain on account of bad weather, but it seems to have hindered many from coming to our meetings, until last Thursday night we had a very cold house, and could not on account of the extreme cold make it comfortable. Since that we have had the Court House, and a glorious good time we have had. But just as the interest has commenced and people are very anxious to hear, our dear Br. B. has to leave us. If you could see the interest that has been manifested this day and hear the desires of many for Br. B. to stay another week, you would rejoice with us in what God has been doing for us. The greatest interest seems to be with the Skeptics and what are sometimes called "infidels." God has wonderfully blessed these precious truths; and we, to-night, give Him all the praise and honor, and bless His great and holy name for His wonderful goodness to this place. In the commencement of our lectures there seemed to be much opposition to us, and our prospects for getting the Court House looked dull. Br. B. and myself made it a subject of prayer, and God answered beyond my expectation. Oh what an interest was manifested this evening, and how many cheeks the tears trickled down as Br. B. spake to all a kind farewell, hoping to meet them all at the resurrection from the dead. Dear Br., many hearts have been made very tender since Br. B. came. I took a collection at the close of this evening's lecture and was able to hand Br. B. $9 20; this will pay his expenses back to New York. Do not be discouraged, Br. Storrs, as regards the money. I am poor myself in this world's goods and would have done more, but I have paid out for our meeting twenty dollars for the various expences.

All this I have done cheerfully, and am willing to do all I am able. Love to have a privilege of hearing and having others hear these glorious truths. I am very tired to-night from the labors of the day, and cannot write you all the good news. A committee from an adjoining town came to me to-night begging for Br. B. to lecture at their place all this week. And one of the singular things was, that three of that committee were what would be called "infidels." Br. B. has won all the hearts of his hearers. All admit he is a child of God. How much I shall miss him. Just as I have learned to love him he must go, and it seems as if I must go with him. Oh, how much my faith has been increased since he came! It is meat and drink to be with him. Trusting in our Lord Jesus for a resurrection from the dead, I remain your Br. in Christ.

J. W. MCCAGG.

P. S. Br. B. has been the means in God's hands of vanquishing the main Universalist in our town, and the congregation all saw it. He asked Br. B. questions two evenings, and found that Br. B., with the Bible, was all against his doctrine.

BR. BURBANK'S REPORT
OF HIS VISIT TO WARSAW, N. Y.

ON Thursday evening, Feb. 18th, took the half-past six o'clock train on the New York and Erie Railroad for Warsaw, arriving there at about half-past ten on Friday morning. Warsaw is a pretty village of some fifteen hundred inhabitants, situated in a fertile valley, the hills rising on either side to the height of two or three hundred feet. It is on the Hornellsville branch of the Erie Railroad, about midway between that place and Buffalo. On this branch road is a remarkable bridge which spans the Genesee River at Portage. Directly over the river it is 234 feet high, and the length from bank to bank is 800 feet.

The upper Genesee Falls just below the bridge, are sixty-eight feet; half a mile below, the Middle Falls, 110 feet; one mile further the Lower Falls of ninety feet. The scenery at this point is among the finest on this Continent.

On my arrival at Warsaw I found a severe snow storm raging, and there was but little else than snow storms during my ten days stay in the place, which hindered many from attending our meetings. At first we met in the "old Congregational Church," and gave seven lectures. Our audiences numbered from fourteen to fifty persons. The County Court House was secured for the last five lectures, and our audiences there numbered from eighty to one hundred and fifty. Our meetings were advertised by Posters and Circulars and by the Newspapers.

Tracts and Circulars were carried to every house in the village, and the result of all is, that several persons have renounced skepticism, a number of others have given up the popular errors of the day, and some are deeply interested for their personal salvation.

The entire place seemed to be stirred, and the Life views are taking hold on the hearts of many of the people. Some opposition was manifested, but the blessing of the Lord caused the truth to triumph. Men and women there are reading their Bibles more than ever before, and they declare that it seems like a new book to them. The Bible is easily understood when the popular interpretation is thrown aside.

At the close of each lecture many questions were asked by persons of various persuasions, and of no persuasion.

Br. McCagg has been alone in the Life views in this place, but the Lord is raising up others, to the joy of his heart. The pecuniary burden fell on him, which included printing, fuel, lights, meeting-places, etc., in all nearly $25. A collection was taken up on the last evening, which was sufficient to pay my fare from Warsaw to New York. I was obliged to leave at the height of the interest. The people are hungering for the word of Life, and the success, considering the difficulties in the way, was quite surprising. Br. McCagg is an intelligent Life believer, and he will continue in his earnest endeavors to scatter the light of God's word. May the Lord reward his efforts with abundant success.

From my experience in Warsaw I am satisfied that great success may follow the preaching of the Life views, in hundreds of places that have not yet heard them. Kind words, unwavering faith in God, and patience, will accomplish wonders. The masses are in darkness. They are in need of light. We have it—let them have it to.

I found that we stood greatly in need of tracts on The Soul, The Spirit, and Hell. They should be added to the Campaign Documents, together with the tract on the Devil. May the Lord open the hearts of those who have the means, that they may give liberally to the Tract Department, so that all these may be supplied right early.

Br. McCagg will give further particulars of our work in his village. Yours in Christ,

F. H. BURBANK.

NEW YORK, March 5, 1869.

FROM E. A. POOLE.

LINCKLAEN, N. Y., Feb. 27, 1869.

BR. STORRS: I am thankful that the success of truth does not depend upon the will of man. I am thankful that it has an inherent energy—a Divine power—a force—that is not exhausted in doing its work, but presses on to its object; and if delayed by opposition, accumulates, like the flowing waters, which rise higher and higher till they burst the barriers that obstruct their progress and go free, carrying all before them. If the doctrine of "No future life out of Christ" be true, it must prevail; if it be not true, the agitation of it has at least done this good—it has shown the weakness of the opposition, and the muddle the subject has been in, and thus led on to further investigation.

In the light of the subject, as presented in the HERALD OF LIFE, there is manifested a beauty and loveliness in the Divine character, that I had never before discovered. With what painful recollections I recur to the experiences of my youthful days, when I sought in vain for pardon and peace, made up my mind that I was a "reprobate" and my destiny fixed, and deliberated whether I could not by suicide, lessen the aggregate amount of suffering which I must endure, by thus shortening my course of sin. But thanks to God for the light he has thrown around my pathway, I can now see that He is not vindictive: that He has prepared the way and the means for the salvation of all who will accept it; and if any refuse or neglect to lay hold on eternal life when proffered to them, they must of necessity perish with the things that perish. All right. God is good. If they will not accept of eternal life, they can only enjoy the present, and like the other creatures which God has made of dust, when their race is run, and the life principle exhausted, they must return to the dust from whence they were taken. Justice could do no less—mercy could do no more.

Will you allow me to make a suggestion? It seems to me that the times, as indicated by recent developments, imperatively demand a work on Church Organization. And I know of no other public man who has the light on that subject. There is nothing clearer to my mind than that Christ organized his own church, and has left nothing for us to do but to carry out His rules. "There is one body and one Spirit . . . one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." "God hath set the members in the body as it hath pleased Him." "Knit together in love." Those that love holds in union are the church—those that love ceases to hold, go "out from us because not of us." No man has a right to surrender his liberty to do whatever he may think duty requires, or to submit to the dictation or control of any body of men in matters pertaining to conscience. And this control is the vital point—the thing sought in all these human church organizations. "Let us have a King." I believe there are thousands who would be ready to assert, and "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ made them free," if the subject could be placed clearly before them.

Now brother, could you do a greater service to the cause, or render a more welcome aid to the seeking ones, than to write a tract on the subject, to be circulated as a Campaign Document. Is not this subject an essential element in the work in which you are engaged? Not only the older churches, but Adventists are endeavoring to settle questions of faith by the vote of councils, and to prevent a hearing of those who differ from them. How important that Christians should maintain their direct relation to God, and not allow any human authority to come between. But I have already taxed your patience too long.

Inclosed find ten dollars to assist in publishing. Send me one copy of "Life only in Christ;" one Man's Destiny; a few of Man's Nature and Destiny; the Atonement and Campaign Documents, and use the balance at your discretion. Praying that God will give you life and health to battle for the right, I remain, yours, for the truth that can stand on its own bottom.

OBITUARIES.

GREIVERSON.—FELL asleep in Jesus, on the 27th of February, Sr. SUSAN GREIVERSON, in the 74th year of her age. She was one of our oldest sisters, and has been a believer in the Life views for many years. She assembled with us only a short time since. But she has fallen asleep in Jesus with a full hope of the resurrection at the last day. We are sorry to say that the Methodist Minister, contrary to her firm belief, sent her off immediately to heaven without a resurrection. If friends will have their ministers to attend relatives' funerals, we could wish that the Ministers would be honest enough to tell the multitude what they believe. Could our sister have spoken her own sentiments they would have been, "I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of glory, which the righteous judge will give me at that day."

JACOB GRIM.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., March, 1899.

JOHNSON.—DIED in Plainville, Conn., Feb. 21st, our beloved Brother HIRAM L. JOHNSON, aged thirty-four years and six months.

He formerly resided in New Britain. For seven years he had been a humble, devoted follower of Jesus. A self-sacrificing zeal had characterized his whole Christian life, and that hope which had been his stay in health became his comfort in sickness, and lit up his countenance with a heavenly smile of joy and resignation. His death was that of "the righteous," leaving behind the most positive evidence of future life and blessedness. He "sleeps in Jesus" to "awake in his likeness." An afflicted wife and little son are left to mourn the loss of a loving husband and father; but not to sorrow as "those which have no hope." Funeral attended by the writer.

"CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT."

WE regret that we have had to disappoint the children. Their Department has been crowded out this week, but we have not forgotten them. They are on our mind every day. Please read 1 Samuel iii., about the child Samuel this week; and may the LORD speak to all your hearts and help you to be good.

Times of Restitution.

How dark the day, how full of woe
No mortal tongue or pen can show,
When our first parents disobeyed
The sacred law their Maker gave,
And eat of that forbidden tree
That lost them immortality.
The king of terrors reigns supreme,
O'er all the earth his power is seen.
Long has he reigned, and captive led
The untold millions of the dead.
But soon a brighter age shall rise;
When Christ, descending from the skies,
Shall come to renovate the earth,
And bring to light the second birth;
Born from the dead, to die no more,
All who in life his image bore;
As kings and priests, with him to reign,
When all his enemies are slain;
And only those who own his sway,
And all his righteous laws obey,
Shall, like the mustard seed, increase,
And fill the earth with joy and peace,
The first dominion be restored,
And David's Son and Lord adored
As Israel's long expected King,
Whose praise all saints and angels sing;
Loud Hallelujahs and Amen,
All peace on earth, good will to men.
All the first Adam lost, and more
The second Adam will restore;
The tree of life once more shall rise
Within the gates of Paradise;
And on life's river's banks shall grow
An antidote for every woe.
Maternal pains and anguish cease,
And all creation rest in peace;
O'er dreary wastes the river flows,
The desert blossoms as the rose;
The lion and the lamb shall feed
Together on the dewy mead;
The infant and the crested snake
A covenant of peace shall make;
And, without fear or danger, play
Together on the new mown hay.
None then shall hurt and none destroy
In God's most holy mount of joy.
And then the Prince of Peace shall reign,
O'er all the earth his power maintain;
Angels and saints shall join to sing,
All glory to their God and King.

"The Dead"—Rev. xx., 12.

IS IT PROOF OF THE RE-LIVING OF THE WICKED DEAD?

"And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books according to their works."—Rev. xx., 12.

The advocates of a mortal resurrection for saint and sinner appropriate this passage as their stronghold in the defence of this new-born theory. Upon this portion of Revelation is based the theory that "the resurrection of the dead is pre-requisite to judgment;" that "after they are re-organized and waked up" the "judgment decision" will "be made in favor of saints, or against the sinner." This unscriptural notion makes three stages through which the dead will pass prior to receiving their reward or punishment. (1.) The "re-organization;" (2.) the "waking up;" (3.) the rendering of "the judgment decision" in "favor of saints or against the sinner." This can imply nothing else than a "simultaneous" resurrection of both classes; though the author of the language just quoted affirms that he believes in the doctrine of "two resurrections."

Can any consistent interpretation of this passage possibly make it favor the doctrine of two resurrections? We think all will readily see the absurdity of making such an application. If it has any reference to the wicked, (which we question), it either proves a simultaneous resurrection of both classes, or refers simply to one class. We believe the latter position to be the truth. Those who affirm that mortal men—the just and the unjust, embracing all who have ever lived—shall stand before God in judgment, and still avow their belief in two resurrections, will find difficulty to evade the dilemma of making two such scenes as are described by the Revelation. Neither the "sea," nor "death," nor "hades" are represented as twice delivering up the dead. He makes no intimation that he understood the scene would be enacted twice.

The first point to be decided in regard to this passage, in order to correctly understand it, would properly be, "Does 'the dead' in this passage embrace both classes?" If it can be proved that the phrase is applied to one class—the righteous—then what follows must apply to them: and vice versa.

It will not do to assume, in the absence of proof, that the phrase "the dead" means both classes of the dead; for the phrase is often used in the Scriptures with reference to the righteous alone. Especially is this the case with Paul in his great argument on the resurrection in 1 Corth. xv. He does not once in that argument, as I understand it, use the phrase in a sense which embraces the wicked. For example he says: "Since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead." He is not talking of the wicked dead, but of "those who have fallen asleep in Christ." Again, he says: "The dead shall be raised incorruptible." There is no dispute but that this refers to the righteous. Christ confirms the same limited use of the phrase in Luke xx., 35-37, where he declares that those who "shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and a resurrection from the dead" are "equal to the angels," and "are the children of God being the children of the resurrection." Speaking of the same class—the saints—whose resurrection He was endeavoring to prove to the Sadducees, He adds: "Now that the dead are raised even Moses showed at the bush when he called the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob; for he is not a God of the dead, but of the living; for all live unto him." That is, all who shall live again live unto him; and therefore He is not a God of those who will live no more. To make a universal application of the phrase "the dead" would establish universal salvation; for the conclusion cannot be avoided if the dead, spoken of as living again, embrace the wicked, that they will be "the children of the resurrection," and therefore, can die no more, being "equal unto the angels." If the same phrase in Rev. xx., 12, includes the wicked, it involves the same difficulty. There are many interesting and important facts connected with this subject, which form strong reasons for believing that the whole transaction has reference solely to the righteous.

1. "The dead" are represented as standing "before God." In this vision "death" and "hades" are personified as delivering up the dead. John's attention was directed to this fact, and he also beheld them "before God;" therefore, we may understand these facts to be different features in the vision, for it is manifest that the delivering up of the dead must precede their standing in the presence of God. But we wish here to introduce a very interesting fact which greatly strengthens our positions.

In our English version the words "before God," Greek critics inform us should read "before the throne," according to old Greek manuscripts. Samuel Treggelles, LL. D., informs us that this reading is guaranteed by manuscript authority of at least twelve hundred years old. The Emphatic Diaglott and American Bible Union give the same rendering. Therefore, we understand John to mean that he beheld the dead standing "before the throne" of God. But where is the throne of God? Is there any proof that wicked men will ever stand in the immortal glory of His presence? The Psalmist declares that the wicked "are like the chaff which the wind driveth away; therefore the ungodly shall not stand in judgment nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous."—Psa. i., 4, 5. But the dead that John prophetically beheld will "stand in judgment," and are a "congregation of the righteous." Do not the Psalmist's words, therefore, exclude the wicked?

In Rev. iv., 2, 6, John says: "I was in the Spirit; and behold a throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne . . . And before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal." John locates the throne "in heaven." In this vision of the throne he was favored with a view of the future reception place of the church, unoccupied, and represented as a broad, pellucid-like expanse "before the throne," in the presence of God and the angelic hosts. After tracing the strange and dark history of the church by the fearful symbols which the Head of the church presented to him—had heard, as it were, the blood of slaughtered millions cry with a loud voice for the vengeance of God—his eyes were drawn away from the heart sickening-sight to another and glorious scene in the presence of God. In vision he again beheld "the sea of glass," "before the throne" occupied by the immortal and triumphant church. He says: "I beheld, and lo, a great multitude which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands."—Rev. vii., 9. In glorious robes of righteousness and bearing triumphantly the palms of victory over the grave, God, in gracious tenderness, wipes all tears away; and the holy Lamb of God, once slain for man's redemption, is still an active agent in promoting the happiness of His loving Bride, being a union which eternity alone can measure. At different times the Revelator beheld the redeemed church in vision; and at this time he doubtless beheld her introduction into the presence of God immediately after the resurrection. But where were the wicked? Alas! when the Lord's children, as an immortal multitude, were caught up to meet Him in the air, they were "left" behind.

Again, in Rev. xv., 2, he beholds the redeemed church on "the sea of glass," having "the harps of God," and they sing the song of Moses and the Lamb—a song of deliverance. They can now look back upon the grave and exclaim: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" But it is manifest if the wicked are in that multitude which shall stand before God, that they can sing that song with as much truthfulness as the other class. If hades delivers up the wicked dead it would destroy the force of Christ's blessed promise to the church that "the gates of hades should not PREVAIL against" it.—(Matth. xvi., 18). Thus most positively implying that it would "prevail" against all others.

Rev. xx., 12, presents the same class—the redeemed church—standing "before the throne" that he had previously seen in vision. The throne is located in heaven, and the wicked could not stand before this throne without getting to heaven; but the Scriptures teach that none but the righteous will be "caught up to meet the Lord in the air." "Before the throne of God" they will remain in blessed communion with the heavenly beings till "the indignation be overpast," and then the "New Heavens and New Earth" will receive its immortal inhabitants, and God shall "dwell with them." (Rev. xxi., 3).

2. "They were judged every man according to their works." Let us bear in mind that this judgment scene is in heaven before the throne of God. The books that they were judged out of do not embrace the "book of Life," as this book must contain the names of all who are represented as standing before God. When Jesus comes to judge the world "at the last day," (i.e., the end of this age), it is evident that the destiny of the whole human family is at once decided from the "book of Life," and the execution of this decision brings "the dead," (which embrace the righteous,) forth from the grave "in incorruption." "It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body:" (1 Cor. xv., 42-44). And nowhere is it said that it is raised a natural body, which many advocate by the mortal resurrection theory. The opening of the book of Life makes known whose names are written therein—who shall be caught up "to meet the Lord in the air;" and all others will meet an ignoble fate in "the lake of fire." As the eternal destiny of the race is decided from the "Book of Life," therefore, "the books" mentioned distinctly from this, must contain a record of deeds for another purpose, as the dead, the righteous only, are judged out of these books.

In 1 Cor. xv., 41, Paul says. "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another of the stars; for one star differeth from another star in glory." Now I do not understand this as teaching a gradation of happiness, but a gradation of position, or glory, in the kingdom of God. Hence, the Revelation speaks of the immortal multitude who stood before God as composed of "small and great"—a distinction which is even now recognized in the mortal church.

Again, 2 Cor. v., 10, Paul speaking of the righteous, says: "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that we may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." This, doubtless, has reference to the same judgment recorded in Rev. xx., 12. The works of the saints are brought to view, which Paul in another place is careful to explain. As an illustration, one who has been laborious and successful in turning many to righteousness would occupy a position in the kingdom in distinction from another Christian who has with equal energy, though honestly, promulgated false doctrines, and, like one in the primitive church, may have overthrown the faith of some. The works of one would be "GOOD" and the other would be "bad;" and yet, both by faith in Jesus and obedience to his laws, have been "accounted worthy to obtain that world and a resurrection from the dead." In accordance with this idea, Paul says, "Every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor; for we are laborers together with God.... For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's works shall be made manifest.... If any man's work abide which he hath builded there, upon he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall SUFFER LOSS but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire." Paul compares the good works of the saints to gold, silver, precious stones, and those whose works are of this abiding character shall "receive a reward;" and those whose works are compared to perishable material, like wood, hay, stubble, shall "suffer loss," though they shall be saved.

We think the judgment in Rev. xx., 12, refers simply to the saints, for the purpose explained by Paul. Space will not now permit us to bring out many other facts which prove that this passage has no reference whatever to the resurrection of the wicked. Perhaps it will be wise to keep a little ammunition in store to defend the facts that we have already brought out.

In vision, John first beheld the triumphant church when introduced into the immortal glory of God's presence; in another vision he beholds the redeemed multitude celebrating their deliverance, and after the marriage of the Lamb he beholds in Rev. xx., 12, their judgment scene for the purpose of assigning them their various positions in the kingdom of God, and "he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God."

Oh, what a glorious future awaits the church of Christ! May each one of us seek to be more fully endowed with the Holy Spirit, and labor earnestly to have our works of that imperishable character that in the day when our works shall be made manifest we may not suffer loss. Let us faithfully continue to hold up before perishing men the only hope of the gospel—life eternal through Jesus Christ—and that the "just by faith shall live again."

What Does it Mean?

"There shall be earthquakes in divers places."—Matt. xxiv., 7.

"The sea and the waves thereof roaring."—Luke xxi., 25.

"Fearful sights and great signs shall there be from heaven."—Luke xxi., 11.

The attention of the world is being forced to the contemplation of very startling phenomena, of late, in the shape of earthquakes, tidal waves, etc. Disturbances of the earth, and of the tides of the sea, and of the course of nature, on an unprecedented scale, have been the subject of excited tidings from all quarters of the globe. Editors and scientific men have been led to pronounce upon them as among the most remarkable and extensive of which there is any written record. They have been experienced at short intervals during the past two years, and especially the last four or five months. It is also believed, by those most knowing on the subject, that the last of this cluster of gigantic commotions have not yet been felt. Later and fuller details are continually increasing, and commanding an unusual degree of interest among scientific men.

A secular paper remarks:

"In both hemispheres, but especially on this continent, and among the adjacent islands, these visitations of tornadoes, floods, and earthquakes, with their tidal waves, and fissures emitting gas, fire, smoke, steam, and boiling water, are becoming alarmingly frequent. Last autumn they had them all in high revelry at St. Thomas and the neighboring islands, and such terrific hurricanes of rattling hail along the southern frontier of Texas as was never known there before, back to the first occupation of the country by the Spaniards. This year the line of operations of these celestial and subterranean phenomena appears to be (with the recurrence of the meteors) along the Pacific side of the continent, and may be traced to the late disastrous convulsions of the dry land and the sea along the western coast of South America. Violent storms follow in the track of earthquakes, and such storms doubtless result from the derangement of the atmospheric equilibrium by the disturbing gases and electrical forces arising from these subterranean outbreaks."

The first of this great, and more recent, series of convulsions, so far as our intelligence now extends, occurred in the Sandwich Islands, eleven days before the terrible disaster in Peru. Violent shocks were felt in different parts of the group from the 2d to the 9th of August, accompanied with heavy storms of thunder and lightning. The western coast of South America was devastated by awful earthquakes from the 13th to the 15th of August, and at the same time the shocks were felt again in the Sandwich Islands, though less severely than before. On the 17th there were shocks in New Zealand. About the middle of September shocks were felt by vessels in the Eastern Pacific. On or about the 1st of October they were experienced again in the Sandwich Islands. In California they were felt from the 21st to the 25th, with considerable severity, and were repeated slightly up to the 6th of November. On the 23d of October we hear of earthquakes in Ireland. On the 4th of November there was one at Vancouver's Island.

The shocks have followed no particular direction, and been confined to no particular quarter of the earth. Beginning in the middle of the Pacific Ocean, they seem to have affected all its eastern shores and its southern and western islands, and, skipping the whole breadth of the North American Continent and the Atlantic Ocean, to have broken out in Ireland. We may yet learn that the remoter countries of Asia have likewise been shaken.

The tidal waves, which have accompanied all the most serious of these convulsions, are peculiarly interesting subjects of study. It has been remarked, as an evidence of the rapidity with which they travel, that they reached the California coast as early as the morning of the 14th of August, having moved over a distance of four thousand miles in a little more than fourteen hours. But it now appears that their speed is even greater than this, for they were felt in the Sandwich Islands, nearly an equal distance, on the evening of the 13th, only four hours after the earthquake in Peru, lasting through the night, and obtaining their greatest force the next morning, almost simultaneously with their appearance on the opposite California coast. This would give them a velocity of about a thousand miles an hour.

A great tidal wave fell upon Hawaii, one of the Sandwich Islands, on the 15th of of October, destroying a great many houses and other property.

Something of the terribleness of these tidal disturbances may be better understood from the letters of eye-witnesses and sufferers. The British Vice-Consul at Arica, exclaims:

"Gracious God, what a sight! I saw all the vessels in the bay carried out irresistibly to sea (anchors and chains were as packthread), probably with a speed of ten miles an hour. In a few minutes the great outward current stopped, stemmed by a mighty rising wave, I should judge about fifty feet high, which came in with an awful rush, carrying all before it in its terrible majesty, bringing the whole of the shipping with it, sometimes turning in circles, as if striving to elude their fate."

A writer from Lima, says:

"I saw the whole surface of the sea rise, as if a mountain side, actually standing up. Another shock, accompanied with a fearful roar, now took place. I called to my companions to run for their lives on to the Pampa. Too late! With a horrid crash the sea was on us, and at one sweep—one terrible sweep—dashed what was Iquique on to the Pampa. I lost my companions, and in an instant was fighting with the dark water. The mighty wave surged, and roared, and leaped. The cries of human beings and animals were dreadful."

The New York Sun, of November 19th, expressed itself thus:

"Such a universal pother in the bowels of the planet was never known before in human experience. Wicked men of science have, it is true, been profane enough to say that the primeval hell beneath earth's ribs was fast cooling, when it wasn't; and this may have led to the late demonstrations, although one is sorry to attribute vindictive feeling to so august, wise, and venerable a body astronomic.

"Certain it is that a great rebellion has taken place for some cause or other, and that the earth has been shaken from centre to circumference. So far from there being any decrease of vigor in the igneous energies, they are more active than ever. Etna, and Vesuvius, and Hecla—that pretty toy of the Icelanders—are henceforth to be set down as among the prettiest fireworks of the creation, and have been completely shorn of what used to be considered their grandeur and sublimity, by the tremendous rock-rendings and oceanic fires, which have made the Pacific islands so famous and so terrible. All over the globe, as by a general conspiracy and premeditated simultaneous movement, there has been a regular Walpurgis hellabaloo, and fiery dance of destruction and death. Vesuvius and the Tahitian volcanoes roared to each other at the same moment in voices of primeval thunder, across the immeasurable brine, which writhed with a new and unheard-of agony, wrecking great ships in its wrath, and swallowing their ruins like so many grains of sand."

On the 8th of December a fresh eruption of Etna broke out. The mountain became enveloped in smoke, and exploded at times with deafening detonations. The streams of lava swept over the surrounding country, and the ashes from the crater were blown into the streets of Messina.

On the 12th of December, the ship Isaac Jans, from Port Townsend, when a few days out from Acapulco, encountered three fearful tidal waves, filling all aboard with consternation. If the ship had not been with her head on, she would undoubtedly have foundered. Like accounts are multiplying upon us with almost every foreign mail.

Now, it is but natural, right, and wise, for intelligent and thinking men to inquire into the meaning of all these commotions in earth, air, and sea. They furnish a vast subject for science, and also for the theologian and Christian. There is particularly one relation of these things which no man, with the Bible in his hand, should overlook; and that is, that they have been predicted by the inspired writers, and by the Lord Jesus himself, again and again, as the forerunners of the day of judgment. People may laugh and sneer as they please, but God hath spoken on the subject; spoken plainly, spoken repeatedly, and given the assurance that these are the signs by which we are to know that the end of this age is near at hand.

"Earthquakes in divers places," "the sea and the waves thereof roaring," along with other marvellous coincidences, are unmistakably described in the Scriptures as God's warnings of the nearing day of his coming to judge the earth. Nothing can well be more positive and definite than that fearful irregularities in the realm of nature are to herald the "day of the Lord;" and that Christ's coming will transpire in a time specially marked by startling occurrences. Nor does it alter the nature of the case, to allege, that there have been earthquakes, storms and commotions of the sea and sky in other ages, or that they may be accounted for on natural principles. God knew what nature is, and by what laws she is governed, when He pointed to manifestations in her economy for indications of the fulfilment of his purposes. And when, as now, the most intelligent investigators and observers, by figures and dates of history, prove to us that "these upheavings of the earth are greatly increasing in number and violence," and assuming a character of universality and terribleness never known to have been heretofore, there certainly is just reason to begin to conclude, that He who made these predictions knew something about them, and that the great events with which He has connected them as the harbingers, are really not far off.

The day, the month, the year, we may not know; but the signs we may know, and see, and feel. And "when these things begin to come to pass," the command of the Saviour to His people is, that they draw from them certain conclusions, and "know that the Kingdom of God is nigh at hand." Luke xxi., 31.

"And yet," writes one of our correspondents, "the great mass of mankind are utterly regardless of all the solemn warnings which these upheavings of the earth are thundering into our ears. There are scoffers who mockingly exclaim, 'Where is the promise of His coming, for all things continue as they were from the beginning.'" The Church abounds with evil servants, who say in their hearts, My Lord delayeth his coming, and are smiting their fellow-servants, and are eating and drinking with the drunken. Learned doctors, acknowledging the frequency and terribleness of these visitations of God, yet refer to them as capital jokes, and fit subjects for witticism. Many mockingly allude to 'the shaky condition of the globe,' and make light of these awfully solemn things. Though the Almighty has given it as a sign of His Advent, that "there shall be earthquakes in divers places," and even secular men, caring but little for what Christ in his word has said, are being moved by what is occurring, yet there are those who call themselves Christians, who can close their eyes, and pass it all as a matter of unmeaning merriment. Alas! alas!

"But whatever careless and worldly-minded Christians may say and do, in regard to these mysterious doings of God, if we love the Lord Jesus Christ, and desire his coming, and believe that He has given us any sign by which to know that his coming is near, these late terrible 'earthquakes in divers places,' must be viewed as signs that the day is at hand. Blessed also, is he that will regard them as the noise of the chariot wheels of the coming King. Our duty is, to watch and pray, knowing that soon He that has promised to come, will come and will not tarry. For He will surely come. He has promised to come. God has said that He will come. Angels had come from heaven to give assurance that He will come. The Holy Ghost in the hearts of Prophets and Apostles has taught that He will come. And everything in and around us augurs that His coming is near. Let men take warning, and be prepared to meet their God."—Prophetic Times.

A New York journal says, it is a fact, though the particulars are not yet all ripe for the public eye, that a secret organization, composed of Greeks, Russians, Germans, Frenchmen, and others, including Hebrews, has recently been formed in that city, whose avowed object is to unite with any power that may make war upon Turkey to drive her back to her Mohammedan home. "The Grand Army of Palestine," as the organization is pleased to call itself, will insist upon clearing Asia Minor as well as Southern Europe of the hated Turk.—Boston Journal.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they arose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—" the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in thei order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 17, 1869. VOLUME VI.—NUMBER 23. WHOLE NUMBER 261.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658, NEW YORK

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to GUESS them out. Also in ordering, the name of the POST OFFICE, COUNTY, AND STATE must be given, and written plainly; and if a CHANGE is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters confusion and delay are inevitable.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

TEXT.—"For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us: therefore let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice or wickedness; but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth." 1 Corth. v., 7, 8.

IN this text a distinct recognition of the passover institution is set before us, and the fact stated that Christ is our passover, who has been sacrificed for us: then we are called to "keep the feast." What feast? Is it not clearly the passover feast? Let us first notice that institution.

We turn to Exodus xi. to xiii. At the conclusion of the plagues the Lord inflicted on the Egyptians, one was to be visited on them in which all the first-born of Egypt should die. Moses was directed to instruct the children of Israel how they should conduct themselves to escape that calamity of death on their first-born. In the tenth day of the first month they were to take a lamb without blemish, and keep it up till the fourteenth day of the same month, and the whole assembly of Israel were to kill it in the evening; and they were to take the blood and strike it on the two side-posts and on the upper-door posts of the houses where they should eat it. They were to eat, with their loins girded, their shoes on their feet, and their staff in their hands; and to eat it in haste; it was the LORD's passover. "For I will pass through the land of Egypt this night," said the LORD, "and will smite all the first-born in the land of Egypt, both man and beast: and against all the gods" (or princes) "of Egypt I will execute judgment: I am the LORD. And the blood shall be to you for a token upon the houses where ye are: and when I see the blood, I will pass over you, and the plague shall not be on you to destroy you, when I smite the land of Egypt. And this day shall be to you for a memorial; and ye shall keep it a feast to the LORD throughout your generations: ye shall keep it a feast and an ordinance forever." It then goes on to describe what they should do in keeping the feast, and in putting away all leaven out of their houses, and saith, "Ye shall eat nothing leavened; in all your habitations shall ye eat unleavened bread;" i. e., for the "seven days" of the feast.

The children of Israel went and did as they were commanded, and that night the destroying angel slew all the first-born of Egypt, but passed over the Israelites. The passover lamb was not to have a bone broken; which points directly to the Lamb of God, a bone of whom was not broken, and thus a prophecy in type was fulfilled in the person of Jesus. Israel was commanded to keep this feast when they should come into the land of Canaan in the first month: "Thou shalt keep this ordinance in his season from year to year."

Thus it is seen to be an annual celebration of their deliverance from their bondage in Egypt, and of the LORD's passing over them when He destroyed the first-born of Egypt. To this last event the apostle distinctly refers in our text, in saying, "Christ our passover is sacrificed for us."

We will now examine the institution of the Lord's supper, and see if it is not a continuation of the same feast, though changed in some of its observances, and altered or adapted to a more spiritual dispensation, in which the true Lamb—typified by the lamb under the law—is presented as sacrificed for us, and thus become our passover. Matthew, Mark, and Luke, each give us the particulars of the Lord's supper-passover. But as Luke's account is the most full we will examine that first. Luke xxii., 7–21.

"Then came the day of unleavened bread when the passover must be killed: and He sent Peter and John, saying, Go and prepare us the passover, that we may eat. And they said unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare? And he said unto them, Behold when ye are entered into the city, there shall a man meet you bearing a pitcher of water; follow him into the house where he entereth in: and ye shall say unto the good man of the house, The Master saith unto thee, where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples? and he shall show you a large upper room furnished: there make ready. And they went, and found as he had said unto them: and they made ready the passover. And when the hour was come, he sat down, and the twelve apostles with him. And he said unto them, With DESIRE" [importing great earnestness] "I have desired to eat THIS passover with you before I suffer: for I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it is fulfilled in the kingdom of God. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, Take this, and divide it among yourselves: for I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come. And he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, THIS is my body which is given for you; this do in remembrance of me. Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, This cup is the new testament" [or, covenant] "in my blood which is shed for you."

Several things are observable in this account. First: the earnest desire of Jesus to eat this passover with His disciples before his death: showing an intention to make some use of it of importance to his church. Second: the use He actually did make of it. It was "after supper"—that is, after the principal meal; after the lamb had been eaten, and they now came to the use of that bread and wine which was always reserved for the conclusion of the service; it was at this point of time He took the bread, etc., and said "This is my body"—the body of the anti-typical lamb, which is hereafter to supersede the type lamb: that lamb is no more to be offered or its flesh and blood used; for the true Lamb has come and is now to be "sacrificed for us." This broken bread, therefore, is all you are to use in the future, to represent my body given for you: and the cup, after or at the close of the supper, is all they are henceforth to use to represent His blood, which is shed for us. Thus, while He retains the passover institution, He so far changes it as to leave only that part which should represent Himself as the "passover for us:" the true Lamb of God has come and suffered death, or shed His blood for us, and by the use of this bread and wine, used in the concluding service of the passover, they were ever after to show His death, and manifest their faith in it till He come again.

We come now to the inquiry, How often shall we "eat this bread and drink this cup?" Some say, once in three months, or once in two months; others, monthly; and still others, weekly. This want of unity shows a lack of clear understanding in the matter. If it is to be celebrated oftener than yearly—as was the passover—the weekly is the most plausible period. But on what is this practice founded? So far as the Bible is concerned, it is based on the expression "break bread." If that does not mean the Lord's supper, then the assumption of its being a weekly institution has no foundation in the word of God. The advocates of the weekly communion appeal specially to Acts ii., 42, and xx., 7.

The first text states, the converts of the day of Pentecost, "continued steadfastly in the apostle's doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread," etc. If this expression proves it was the Lord's supper, then the communion was daily, for verse 46 says, "They, continued daily with one accord in the temple, and in breaking bread from house to house," etc. That this phrase proves nothing in favor of a weekly, or any other period for the Lord's supper, is evident from the fact, it is a phrase used of common meals, both by our Saviour and his apostles. Thus it is said, then Jesus fed the multitudes, in Matt. xiv., 19; Mark vi., 41, and viii., 6; and Luke ix., 16, "He blessed and brake, and gave the loaves to disciples, and the disciples to the multitude."

If it be urged, Jesus was made known to two of His disciples, at Emmaus, "in breaking of bread," because, while He sat at meat with them, "He took bread, and blessed it, and break and gave to them," that this must have been the Lord's supper; and being on the first day of the week confirms that as the time of its celebration; we reply, First: Jesus himself declared to his disciples, at the time of his instituting the ordinance, "I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom." Matth. xxvi., 29. Hence the breaking of bread at Emmaus was not the Lord's Supper. The disciples had been accustomed to see their Lord break bread at their ordinary meals, before his death, and now, when he performs the same service, after his resurrection, they at once recognize him. To suppose that the language imports any more, is to assume a point against proof, and in opposition to Jesus' own declaration, that he would drink no more of the fruit of the vine till he should do so with them in his Father's kingdom.

But, say the advocates of a weekly communion, "The disciples came together on the first day of the week to break bread," Acts xx., 7, "and that was certainly the Lord's Supper." How is that evident? "Why, it was not an ordinary meal." What if it was not, that does not prove anything in this matter. Paul "took bread and gave thanks," on board the ship, after a long fast, "and when he had broken it, he began to eat," and all the "two hundred threescore and sixteen souls" on board the vessel eat with him. Acts xxvii., 34–37. Was that the Lord's Supper?

The disciples coming together on the first day of the week to break bread, we have said, is no proof it was the Communion called the Lord's Supper. In the first place, in not a single instance is the use of wine mentioned as forming a part of the meal. That it was not an ordinary meal, may be admitted. What then? Was there no other convivial meal than the Lord's Supper? It is a clearly settled fact, in the primitive church there was what has been called "love-feasts," at which the wealthy members of the church made provision for the poor ones, and all sat down together as one family to this extra entertainment, thus keeping up the idea of brotherhood. Of this practice Jude distinctly speaks, in noticing some professors who were exceeding wicked, he says, "These are spots in your feasts of charity, when they feast with you, feeding themselves without fear," etc. Jude 12. Peter also speaks of the same, and says, "Spots they are, and blemishes, sporting themselves with their own deceivings while they feast with you." 2 Pet. ii., 13.

Thus it is evident, the feast of charity was kept by the early Christians; and the most likely time for that feast was "on the first day of the week"—then they came together to break bread in the feast. That such was the fact, Acts xx., 7, is quite certain; no wine is mentioned as used on the occasion, and the account indicates clearly the fact, that they were in the feast after "midnight," for the young man who had fallen down from an upper loft and was taken up dead, had been restored, and Paul continued his speech and broke bread and ate after that time of night. Thus this text fails to support the weekly communionists.

"Well," says another, "we may have it as often as we please, for Paul says, as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup," etc. That is, according to these persons, it is left to each one to do as he pleases in the matter; God has given no certain time for it! This surely is loose enough to suit anybody. Those who take this ground entirely overlook the apostle's argument or teaching. Paul condemns the church at Corinth for their disorderly conduct in the matter of the Lord's Supper, and says, "For I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, that the Lord Jesus, the same night in which he was betrayed, took bread: and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat; this is my body which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me. After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped" [the passover supper], "saying, this cup is the new testament in my blood: this do ye, as oft as ye drink" [this passover cup hereafter] "in remembrance of me: for as often" [hereafter], "as ye eat this [passover] "bread, and drink this" [passover] "cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come." 1 Corth. xi., 23–26.

Here we see the grand design of the institution of the Lord's Supper: it is to show the Lord's death. As the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt and the saving of their first-born was to be celebrated at the recurrence of its anniversary—"from year to year"—so Jesus would have us celebrate the anniversary of his death, who has become "our passover, sacrificed for us." A memorial day is always the anniversary of the event. Jesus adapted the passover feast to be a memorial of his death; so that as often as the friends of our Redeemer should come to the passover feast they should eat this bread and drink this wine in remembrance of his death for our redemption.

The ordinance itself has lost its significance by the haphazard manner in which it has been kept, and, by its so frequent use, fails to make that impression it would if observed at the anniversary of "our Lord's death," which it was designed to show forth. What would be thought of celebrating any other event as often as men should take a fancy to do so? Say, our national independence? Instead of having it at the anniversary, on the fourth of July, have it a dozen times a year! What would be the effect? Would it not lose its importance by its commonness and inappropriateness? Of all days in the year, the first day of the week is the most unsuitable and out of place. That day reminds us of our Lord's re-living from the dead. To turn it into a day to show forth his death, is to pervert the very idea intended in the institution. The annual passover, to our mind, is the time, and the only time, appropriate, to celebrate our Lord's death. That anniversary may possibly happen on the first day of the week. We would not postpone it on that account, but keep it on whatever day it may come; keep it as the anniversary, or memorial, of Jesus' death for our redemption; thus showing our faith in his death as our DELIVERER—as "our PASSOVER who was sacrificed for us."

As to the time of the passover, or the time of Jesus' death, though there may be some difficulty in fixing it with exactness, yet there can be no doubt it occurred at the full moon near the spring equinox. The Rabbinical Jews keep their passover at the first full moon after, and the Caraite Jews at the second. It is most likely the Caraite passover is the true time, as in connection with the passover, "ye shall bring a sheaf of the first-fruits of your harvest unto the priest, and he shall wave it before the LORD to be accepted for you." See Lev. xxiii. This could not probably be done at an earlier period than the second full moon after the spring equinox: and this sheaf was typical of the resurrection of Christ, to which Paul makes special reference, 1 Corth. xv., 20–23, "Now is Christ risen and become the first fruits of them that slept:" . . . "Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." He as the first ripe fruit from the dead, has been waved before the LORD for us, and is the pledge of the harvest of all his followers at his coming. Blessed association: we commemorate his death, and then immediately recognize him in his revival as the first fruits and pledge of the revival of all of which he is the sample, viz., of all in him and who are partakers of the Divine life by which he rose from the dead.

As to the manner of keeping the feast, we suggest that all conveniently situated meet in one place, and that, first a frugal meal be participated in by all the believers present, and suitable portions of Scripture be read, and such conversation be entered into as shall tend to promote love to each other and to Jesus our DELIVERER, employing the time in this manner to a suitable hour of the night, and then bring forward the bread and wine which had been prepared and set aside for this purpose, and after giving thanks for the same, as a memorial of Christ's body broken and his blood shed for us, break the bread and distribute both the bread and wine to all present, and let it be received in remembrance of Christ, and an acknowledgment of our faith in his death for our redemption, or as "our passover, who was sacrificed for us." After this, sing a hymn, and separate to our several homes. Such a keeping of the Lord's Supper, it seems to us, exactly meets its design, and it is well calculated to promote holiness and consecration to him who died for us and rose again. Against such a "Communion of saints" we see no good or valid objection. "May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with all" who "love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity." Amen.

In addition to what we have said on the Lord's Supper, we give the following extracts from an article by ELD. A. Guthrie:

The passover feast was always kept in the night, and called Supper. "The Jews concluded their passover by giving to every person a piece of bread and a cup of wine; so Christ, though he set aside, as the nature of his office required, the rite enjoined by Moses in that ordinance which he had been commemorating, yet retained the bread and cup added by the Jews." Dr. Eadie's Biblical Cy., p. 355.

"This cup is the New Testament in my blood." As there was to be no more shedding of blood for the remission of sins, therefore this cup will perpetuate a yearly memorial that Christ was the last great sacrifice, and that his blood was shed in his death.

In Horne's Introduction, p. 185, vol. 2, it is stated, that the concluding service of the passover was a cup of wine over which the Jews sung the great Hallel, or hymn of praise. So Christ and the apostles sang a hymn and went out. Some have supposed that our Saviour gave liberty to choose their own time, from the language used by Paul, "For as oft as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death." It would seem there need not be any misapprehension of this subject were it not for the will of the flesh and human creeds.

1. It was instituted to keep in memory his death and shed blood. When did he die? At the passover.

2. What were the symbols chosen to show forth his death? Unleavened bread, and wine. When were they used together? At no other time than at the passover, for it was the concluding service and no testimony can be produced from the word of God that our Saviour ever changed this time.

In Alford's "Prolegomena" to his Commentary, he says, "In the dispute about the time of keeping Easter, between Polycarp and Anicitus, Bishop of Rome, about the year 160, the former defended the practice of the Asiatic churches, which was to keep their Christian passover at the time of the Jewish passover, the evening of the fourteenth of Nisan, by what he had learned from John and the other apostles.

HOW IT COULD HAVE BEEN:

AND HOW IT WILL BE.—BY E. W.

THE purpose of this article is to develop a principle by which the Scriptures may be harmonized upon the vexed question of the "age to come." The key to it is found in this: That man is a free agent: free to refuse or lay hold upon the good set before him by God; and that it requires his (man's) acceptance and adhesion to any covenant in order to make it valid and bring upon him the proffered good from God, who is the other party to the contract or covenant.

God made a man and privileged him to live forever upon conditions: but he sinned, which brought death into the world. Rom. v., 12. We dare not say it was God's plan to have such a state of things as has existed since; we think it impeaches his character; but how, or at what time he would have brought in immortality, had man remained innocent, the record does not tell, because He was necessitated to start a new plan. . . .

Sixteen hundred and fifty-six years passed away and He finds a hopeless state of apostacy and iniquity, with bare one family that feared him. He swept that generation away, with a flood, and commenced a new era with Noah.

In a short time his offspring had so corrupted God's ways that but one family was left in which Abraham was prominent, whom He called "from his kindred and from his father's house;" (Gen. xii., 1,) if by any means He might have one family, one people to serve and honor him, seeing all the rest had gone away to worship gods of their own invention, and plant kingdoms and build cities to their own glory. God was shut up to this course by man's iniquity.

To this man (Abraham) God made promises: He promised him and his seed (Christ) the law of Canaan for an everlasting inheritance, and to make this seed a blessing unto all peoples. He also promised to make his natural seed a great people, inhabiting this land in their generations, which was to be finally possessed through a resurrection, which the promise implied; hence by faith. This nation he called Israel, upon whom He bestowed peculiar care.

He spake to them by Moses after this manner: "Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine; and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation." Ex. ix., 5, 6. "Wherefore it shall come to pass, if ye harken to these judgments, and keep and do them, that the Lord thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant and the mercy which he sware unto thy fathers: (not without) and he will love thee, and bless thee, and multiply thee: He will also bless the fruit of thy womb, and the fruit of thy land, thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep in the land which he sware unto thy fathers to give thee. Thou shalt be blessed above all people: there shall not be male or female barren among you, or among your cattle. And the Lord will take away from thee all sickness . . . and thou shalt consume all the people which the Lord thy God shall deliver thee," etc. Deut. vii., 12–16. "And it shall come to pass, if thou shalt hearken diligently unto the voice of the Lord God, to observe and do all his commandments which I command thee this day, that the Lord thy God will set thee on high above all the nations of the earth: and all these blessings shall come on thee, and overtake thee, if thou shalt hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God. Blessed shalt thou be in the city, and blessed shalt thou be in the field . . . . The Lord shall cause thine enemies that rise up against thee to be smitten before thy face: they shall come out against thee one way, and flee before thee seven ways . . . The Lord shall establish thee an holy people unto himself, as he hath sworn unto thee, if thou shalt keep the commandments of the Lord thy God, and walk in his ways, and all the people of the earth shall see that thou art called by the name of the Lord and they shall be afraid of thee. . . . And thou shalt lend unto many nations, and thou shalt not borrow. And the Lord shall make thee the head, and not the tail; and thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath. Deut. xxviii., 1–13.

Then follows a rehearsal of the evils that should come upon them in case of disobedience; and adds, "And it shall come to pass, when all these things are come upon thee, the blessing and the curse, which I have set before thee, and thou shalt call them to mind among all the nations, whither the Lord thy God hath driven thee, and shalt return unto the Lord thy God, and shalt obey his voice, according to all that I command thee this day, thou and thy children, with all thine heart, and with all thy soul; that then the Lord thy God will turn thy captivity, (will he without?) and have compassion upon thee, and will return and gather thee from all the nations, whither the Lord thy God hath scattered thee. If any of thine be driven out into the utmost parts of heaven, from thence will the Lord thy God gather thee and from thence will he fetch thee . . . I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing: therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live." Deut. xxx., 1–19.

Here is the "text book" of the prophets. Here are the conditions and the principle by which the Lord has dealt with that people; and we see no warrant to say that He will ever change it with any of his creatures. God may and does create facilities that men may serve and obey him, but when He overrules their free agency they at once become a mere machine. So in the foregoing, He does not propose to do any such thing; but that every one "work out (their) your own salvation" and "give diligence to make (their) your calling and election sure."

Now, God made these proposals to Israel in good faith, or not in good faith. If not in good faith, who could draw an ounce of consolation from his promise and oath? But if in good faith, then it was the privilege of that people to have been then blessed of God, and we at once must come to this conclusion, there would have been no division of the tribes in the days of Rehoboam; there would have been no Babylonian Captivity, hence no prophecies concerning their return and subsequent union and prosperity; neither would the prophet have written, "Remove the diadem, and take off the crown: this shall not be the same; exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more, until he comes whose right it is; and I will give it him." (Ezek. xxi., 26, 27); for the kingdom of God over Israel, (2 Chron. xxix., 23) would have continued with the sons of David, as it it written: "If thy children will keep my covenant and my testimony that I shall teach them, their children shall also sit upon thy throne for forevermore." Psa. cxxxii., 12. Jerusalem would never have been trodden down of the Gentile, hence there would have been no Gentile kingdoms with universal empire, nor the chains of prophecy which so faithfully delineate their cruel supremacy through 2,300 years; "but their time should have endured forever." Psa. lxxxi., 15. With this view we can see how this nation would have been high above all nations, and all nations would have feared it; how that in due time the Messiah would have been born according to Moses: "I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not harken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him;" or as Peter cites it, "shall be destroyed from among the people" (of Israel). Deut. xviii., 18, 19; Acts iii., 22, 23.

At this juncture we can see the place for a prophecy which by some is located in a future age: "And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots, and the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord; and shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord: and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears: but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth: and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked," etc. Isa. xi., 1–10.

This "rod" was the promised Messiah. At his first advent he would have been a King. This was the time that Abraham rejoiced to see, "and he saw it, and was glad." John viii., 56, also Luke x., 24. Israel would have been purged of evil, as we have seen. See also Matth. iii., 12. And all nations would have submitted themselves unto him or else have been smitten with the rod of his mouth; to which agrees, Psalms xlv. and lxxii., and like Scriptures which are abundant.

Here also to our mind is the place for another prophecy oft put in a future age: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David. and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." Isa. ix., 6, 7. Then would have commenced the restitution, according to the Voice crying in the wilderness: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God. (Israel's Messiah.) Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall [be made straight, and the rough places plain: (literally, in Judea). And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." Isa. xl., 3–5; Luke iii., 4–6.

But, it is objected, this state of things could not be till the root of Jesse stands for an ensign of the people, to whom the Gentiles shall seek: when his rest shall be glorious; See Isa. xi., 10. True: and, to this Simeon agrees, when speaking by the holy Spirit, with the child Jesus in his arms: "For my eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of my people Israel." Luke ii., 30–32.

From the foregoing, we can see, had Israel been obedient, or even after they had committed wickedness, had they repented and done the good under Messiah, that the power, the riches, the glory, and increase of their kingdom would have gone on till the whole earth would have been under his mild sway. Isa. lx., portrays some of the glory. All the heathen round about would have come bending unto this people, for they would have been afraid of them, and would have worshipped before the Lord in Jerusalem. In our next we will cite some prophecies in further support of this position.

Will there War in Europe?

A prominent German statesman and most distinguished jurist wrote, in the month of January, a letter to a citizen in New York, from which we translate literally (and, therefore, not elegantly) the following passage. Whatever the sympathies of our readers, or our own views may be, the authorship of the letter gives it sufficient interest to be communicated to our readers. Nor is the allusion to General Grant without its significance, and without our justification in giving it publicity at this very time. Our President's "Let us have peace," will require a wider application than that for which his words were intended, should there be war in Europe—which needs must be a general war—and our own Congress continue to show from time to time a desire to commingle with European affairs, and to appear in some way in the strife. Should the flame burst forth beyond the Atlantic, the noblest part to be performed by America would be calmly, fairly and grandly to guard, and further to develop the law of nations, as she has done before:

"In the meantime the war with France is steadily preparing. Napoleon III. labors most unequivocally toward it, and it seems that he is going to make the King of Italy his ally, despite the opposite sympathies and interests of the Italian people, who from France can only expect the rule of foreigners; from Germany, however, natural friendship. As a third ally, in the background, is Austria, bidding her time. The Emperor and Premier are bent on vengeance against Prussia. It is to be hoped that the Hungarians will exact a stop in that quarter. At the bottom it is the clergy who stir the fire. The great question is Priestcraft and Cæsarism on the one hand, and Germanic independence and liberty on the other. It will be bad indeed if we must make concessions to the Russians, who are still barbarians, in order to defend ourselves against the united Latin (Romanic) States, and the traitorous priests and princes in South Germany. As to the future, I am calm. It is impossible that Rome, rotten and absurd, shall again rule Europe, even if Pope and French Emperor are allied; but it will cost much blood, much wealth, and the graves of many high-souled men. It is fortunate that Grant will have entered the White House before the war, which will scarcely begin before the French elections in May. Grant's bearing will have great influence. If the Germanic world were as closely allied, but at the same time for liberty and unity, it would be a child's play to chastise the Latin people so that all their lust to rule the world again would be driven out forever. The Germanic element is not the ruling power of the world's situation, for the simple reason that, consistent with the principle of liberty, it divides in different directions and unites with more difficulty. The Latin people and the Celts easily subordinate themselves to centralism. Poor, intelligent centralism may be far more powerful in war than wealthy nations who enjoy liberty and representative government."—Evening Post, Mar. 4th.

Index to O. S. Halsted's "Theology of the Bible."

We have received a manuscript copy of the above, prepared by Br. Charles A. Hastings, Springfield, Mass., which is arranged alphabetically. It must have cost him much labor. It ought to be attached to every copy of the work. It is an invaluable help in finding the various topics, texts, and remarks quoted in the work from other authors. No one who has Judge Halsted's work should be without such an index.

For Sale.—Two bound volumes of the Herald of Life, Vol. V. Price $5 each, if applied for soon.

W. I. Warner, Factoryville, Nebraska, writes: I send $1, for which please send me pamphlets strictly suitable for new beginners in the belief of the true teachings of the Bible and the non-resurrection of the wicked dead, as there are only four of this belief in this vicinity. We are of course have much to contend with. We are entirely surrounded with all kinds of people; and many different denominations of which are bitterly opposed to your doctrine; yet I think this an all-healing medicine, where administered properly; and even in small doses it seems to have a desirable effect. I shall soon send for your paper.

Note by the Editor. We have sent you the works called for, and the paper also. Fear not: keep the words of Life in Christ alone before the people. God will take care of His work, let men oppose as they will.

James H. Jacobs, Freetown, N.Y., writes: I send herewith $2 for Br. A. Douglass for the Herald, which proclaims life in Jesus' name in harmony with Jesus' mission, which was to give life. He said of some, "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life:" the life which He was to give to man through faith and repentance. The life He has to give is called a "more excellent life:" (Syriac) John x., 10. The more excellent life is contrasted with this present life, which cannot be continued, but ends forever at death. The life Jesus gives is eternal: they die no more, but are equal unto the angels of God in heaven. "They are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." The Lord help us who believe these glorious truths to manifest by our lives how highly we prize them.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MARCH 17, 1869.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not; he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"The Lord's Supper."

We have been urged to republish our sermon on this subject, for several months past, but have delayed it by a pressure of other matter. As it is drawing near the anniversary of its institution we have thought best to give the sermon this week. No one doubts but that the Lord's Supper was first celebrated at the passover feast, and that it was thereafter to be observed as a memorial of His death: hence we take the ground, like all other memorials of events, it was designed to be an annual celebration or commemoration of the event of Christ's death till He comes again from heaven.

We have stated in our sermon the fact that the Rabbinical and the Caraite Jews differ as to the time of the Passover, whether it was kept at the first or second full moon after the Spring equinox. While we do not deem this point material, yet we incline to the opinion that the second full moon is most likely to be the true time, from the fact, the wave sheaf, or "first-fruits of the harvest," was to be waved before the Lord near the close of this feast. It seems unlikely this could take place earlier than the latter part of our month April, even in Palestine.

For this reason we prefer the second to the first full moon after the Spring equinox, and intend practising accordingly. This will happen on Monday the twenty-sixth day of April this year. If others prefer the earlier season, that will happen Saturday, March twenty-seventh, this year.

The place where the friends will meet, for this city and Brooklyn, is not yet fixed upon. It will be announced in due time.

Long Articles, Etc.

We confess to the offence of such articles, and have been laboring to get room for them from correspondents. If any one could see the pile of such, lying before us, that we have not yet had time even to examine, they would pity our taxed eyes and strength. However, we will do the best we can and as fast as we can to dispose of such communications. If our readers wish short articles, please send us such; and write plain, and give space between your lines to interline, as it is often necessary to do before giving them out to the compositor. If these things are not attended to, we have to re-write the manuscript, and perhaps make it wait till a more favorable time to prepare it. Sometimes it is delayed longer than the writer thinks it should be; but we always have what seems to us a good reason for such delay. We may misjudge, but we use the best judgment we have. We love our work, and are glad to serve our brethren and friends, and our common Lord, to the extent of our power and ability. "Brethren, pray for us," said Paul. If he needed the aid of his brethren's prayers, how much more do we. We are persuaded you do pray for us, and the thought often encourages us to struggle on in our work.

The Wicked Dead and The Resurrection.

As John v., 28, 29, is the stumbling stone to sincere inquirers on this subject, we will speak once more to such; not to say anything new, but to repeat what we have spoken before. Any one must be struck with the fact that our Lord's language, John v., 29, seems to have been based on Ezek. xxxvii., as his language Mark ix., 44, is based on Isa. lxvi., 24. In John v., our Lord had been speaking of himself as God's appointed Messenger to give life and to execute judgment; and affirmed that he had power to quicken whom he would; and he tells his hearers, "The hour now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; for the Father hath given to the Son to have life in himself: hence He can make alive whom He will: and the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son. The works Christ wrought in quickening many dead in sins and, raising to life literally dead persons, during his personal ministry, would be evidence that his claim of having power to quicken whom He would, and of executing judgment on all, was a true claim. As He was addressing the Jews, who were seeking to kill him (verse 18), He goes on to tell them, it was himself the Father had given power to do what is plainly declared in Ezk. xxxvii., God would do, viz., "Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel: and ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and I will put My Spirit in you, and ye shall live," etc.

Whatever this resurrection is—whether national, spiritual, or literal—it is perfectly clear, it is the very same Jesus speaks of, John v., 28, 29. If one is national, so is the other; if one is spiritual, so is the other; if one is literal, so is the other. If any choose to say it is literal, then none but God's "people" are made alive: none others are embraced in Ezekiel's prophecy; and none others received life in our Lord's enunciation in John v. We repeat, the two scenes are evidently identical. The Jews certainly understood the fulfilment of Ezekiel's prophecy to be future when Jesus spoke in their hearing. John v., 28, 29. To us, it is evident, it was Ezekiel's vision he referred to, and claimed that He would fulfil it. He tells them not to marvel at his statements that God had given him life in himself, authority to execute judgment, and to quicken whom he will, etc., for the hour was coming in which that still more wonderful prophecy of Ezekiel should be fulfilled, and He would open the graves of God's "people" and bring them "to the resurrection of life;" while at the same time the doers of evil (like themselves, who sought to kill him) at this resurrection should be noticed only to condemn them. Condemn them to what? Not to see life. John iii., 36. Thus our Lord and Ezekiel harmonize; one throws light on the other, and neither says a word of any life to the wicked, but both make the life bestowed as the portion of God's people only. The text, John v., 28, 29, when compared with other Scripture, and explained in harmony with it, gives no support to the idea of any life from the dead, except to such as God emphatically calls, "O my people." If we would live again, after death, we must have that characteristic; then—and not without—shall we be children of the resurrection, and thereby be constituted permanently and eternally the children of God, and be as the angels of God in heaven.

Hasten, O sinner, to Christ the Life-giver; and rest not till the Spirit of him who raised up Christ from the dead dwell in you, and you are under its sanctifying power evermore; so shall you come to the resurrection of life, or be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, and mortality be swallowed up of life. Let none of us rest in a mere doctrinal acceptance of the truth, but earnestly seek for the experience and power of the truth on our hearts and lives.

The Resurrection: Anastasis.

We have often in times past referred to Dr. Bloomfield's Critical Notes on the Greek New Testament, edited by Prof. Stuart. In looking at his remarks on the question of the Sadducees and our Lord's reply, relating to the resurrection, we observe some important statements, or admissions. On Matth. xxii., 23, he says:

"There is little doubt but that the phrase anastasis ton nekron, or anastasis denoted, in common parlance, and agreeably to the general doctrines of the Pharisees, the resurrection of the soul as well as the body, and the reunion of both in a future state. Though, at the same time, the ideas of the Pharisees themselves (and still more the people at large) as to the nature of that future life were very vague, and occasionally founded on the notions of the heathens. So that our Lord's reply was, in wisdom, so framed as not only to refute the Sadducean doctrines, but remove the misconceptions of the Pharisees; and thus to benefit not only the unbelievers of the doctrine of the resurrection, but the misbelievers."

On the foregoing statement of Dr. Bloomfield, we remark, first—The resurrection of the dead—anastasis ton nekron—"denoted in common parlance," or discourse, even with the "Pharisees," not a resurrection of "the body," merely, but "of the soul." In other words, it embraced whatever constituted the man—the entire manhood. Let this fact be remembered; and it follows, that when Christ and his apostles speak of the resurrection of the dead, "in common parlance," the soul is included, whatever that soul is. No matter what the Pharisees meant by the immortality of the soul, so long as they maintained it must have a resurrection in order to a future life; they clearly had no idea of a future life to disembodied human souls.

Second: The Pharisees, it seems, held to a "re-union" of souls and bodies in a future state; hence it was that they taught the transmigration of souls; i. e., the passing of their fancied immortal souls into other bodies at death; without which those souls would have no resurrection, and could not live, in their estimation. Their notions "as to the nature of that life were very vague, and occasionally founded on the notions of the heathens," says Dr. Bloomfield. It is evident from all this, that the Pharisees were ignorant of the true nature of the resurrection, though in words they held to a resurrection. This Dr. Bloomfield admits by saying, "Our Lord's reply [to the Sadducees] was so framed as" . . . . "to remove the misconceptions of the Pharisees," who were "the misbelievers." They professedly believed in "the resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust;" but their views were false and erroneous in several particulars. First: The resurrection they advocated was a necessary result of the supposed immortality of the soul, which, leaving its present tenement behind at death, must have another body to enter, in order to its continued life; such was their resurrection of body and soul, and "re-union in another life."

Another error of the Pharisees' doctrine of resurrection was, that it embraced "both the just and the unjust." The unjust, however, with them, included only the Jews, and not men of other nations. If a man was a literal child of Abraham, through Isaac, he would be saved, or have a resurrection, though he had been unjust; such was Pharisaic pride and error. Dr. Bloomfield says—"Our Lord's reply was, in wisdom, so framed as not only to refute the Sadducean doctrines, but to remove the misconceptions of the Pharisees; and thus to benefit not only the unbelievers of the doctrine of the resurrection, but the misbelievers;" that is, those who did not believe aright on the subject. The Sadducees denied that there is to be "any resurrection of the dead," either of the good or bad. Jesus refutes them by showing that there is to be a resurrection of the good, and at the same time refutes the Pharisaic notion of the resurrection of the wicked dead; for he teaches distinctly that the resurrected ones "are as the angels of God in heaven;" which could not be said of the wicked dead if revived into life. And Jesus gives "Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob," as the samples of those "which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world" [the future life] "even the resurrection from the dead;" Luke xx.

With the two-edged sword of truth our Lord hews in pieces the Pharisees' false notion of the transmigration of souls and the resurrection of the wicked dead, while he demonstrates to the Sadducees the resurrection of the righteous dead. Thus, truly, did he "refute the Sadducean doctrines," and "remove the misconceptions of the Pharisees," and correct their misbelief. But they were "fools and blind," and did not profit by his teaching. Bound up in their "own traditions," like thousands in these days, they still adhered to their errors, as we learn from Paul's testimony, Acts xxiv., 15, where he states that his Jewish accusers "allow there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust," while they found fault with him for maintaining the resurrection of Jesus, and of those who "fall asleep in him."

Paul's doctrine of the resurrection was one which was an object of "hope;" not of fear or dread. He never speaks of any other resurrection of the dead, to be looked for, but that of such as fall "asleep in Christ." For preaching this he was accused of the Pharisaic Jews; yet they themselves allowed there would be a more extensive resurrection than Paul contended for; even of "both the just and unjust;" for such an extensive resurrection Paul never said one word in all his preaching or epistles; but, on the other hand, he proclaimed the resurrection from the dead as an object of "hope," to be sought for most diligently, and to be bestowed only on those in Christ; hence he saith, he labored and suffered "if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Phil. iii., 11.

Inquiries.

I should like your opinion on the following questions:

1. Does the Apostle teach, 1 Thess. iv., 17, and 1 Corth. xv., 51, that every believer that may be alive, however short the time he may be such previous to the time of Christ's coming and the sounding of the trumpet of God, shall be changed?
2. If so, does Rom. viii., 17, Phil. iii., 10, 11, and Rev. xx., 4, harmonize and teach they all will be changed at the same time?
3. May not "alive and remaineth" teach maturity of age and faith, or why add to alive "remaineth?"
4. Does not "last trump" imply previous ones? and are the Jubilee trumps referred to here?

C.

Our brother has asked our "opinion." We will give that freely, if it will not lead to a long discussion, which, in our "opinion," would not be profitable. To these several questions we answer:

"1." The apostle teaches in the two texts referred to and their contexts that "the dead in Christ shall rise," and that the living (in Christ) shall be changed at the same time. His language is too explicit, in our "opinion," to admit of any other construction. He says: "Behold I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep [be dead], but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead [in Christ] shall be raised incorruptible, and we [who are not asleep] shall be changed."

Now, if all the believers alive are not changed, by the same rule all the dead in Christ will not have a resurrection; for it is manifest that many believers have died in a very short time after embracing Christ; and we must keep in mind, "the reward is of grace:" for, "the gift of God is eternal life," etc. The reward being a free gift of God, in Christ, it is bestowed on all in him, whether they have "borne the heat and burden of the day," or have only "wrought one hour." See Matth. xx., 8–16.

"2." The first two texts in this question, it is our "opinion," do not conflict with the view we have taken on the previous question. "God looketh on the heart." 1 Sam'l xvi., 7. The design, the purpose, the intention, the Lord judges by, and not the length of time or the amount done or suffered. The widow who cast two mites into the treasury did more than all the rich, who cast in of their abundance: "She did what she could," and would have done more if possible. If we have time, opportunity, and ability to do or suffer, then it is required of us "according to that we have;" but if time, opportunity, and ability are not in our possession, "the willing mind is accepted" for the deed. 2 Corth. viii., 12; Mark xiv., 8. As to Rev. xx., 4, we have nothing now to say on this symbolical representation.

"3." We do not think that the word "remain" has any other signficance than to give force to the fact that all the living saints will be subjects of the change spoken of, for the apostle expressly says, "we which are alive [or] remain unto the coming of the Lord . . . shall be caught up together with them [the risen, who were asleep in Jesus] . . . to meet the Lord," etc. You will see we have inserted or instead of and in the text; the latter not being in the original.

"4." If the "last trump implies previous ones," there is no other after the last, and that must bring us to "the last day," when Christ has promised to "raise up him" who "believeth on the Son of God." That surely embraces all believers, however short the time they had to show their faith by their works or sufferings. Whether the apostle referred to the Jubilee trumps, we have no means even to form an "opinion."

This will be issued in a short time. Let those who have made pledges redeem them as soon as possible; and others who are disposed to help in this matter send us what you can at once.

Ignis-Fatuus Prophecy.

Do not start, beloved reader. You probably never heard of prophecy by this name before; but the thing is of some years' standing. It was inaugurated under the mild name of "conditional prophecy," and much in use in 1842, 1843, and 1844; and is always in use when people are in a hurry to have some favorite theory accomplished, and unfulfilled prophecy stands in their way.

These thoughts have been suggested by reading an article in the Voice of the West on the subject, by O. D. Gibson. He opens his "Conditional Prophecy" scheme as follows:

There is evidently a great mistake somewhere among Bible students in regard to prophecy, in supposing all prophecy must and will be fulfilled; if not in the past, then it must have a place somewhere in the future; so where shall we fit it in? Either the Lord's coming must be somewhat deferred, or we must find a place for it in that copious reservoir, the "thousand years," which is become a pack-horse for everything unfulfilled in the past. Now this is a bad way of doing, and does the revealed will and word of God an egregious wrong.

We are not of the number, if there be such, who have a "reservoir" of a "thousand years" for unfulfilled prophecy to be accomplished; but we see very clearly where G.'s trouble is; better that the whole prophetic word be considered an ignis-fatuus than that the "Lord's coming be somewhat deferred," etc. He seems to understand the use of "a pack-horse;" and no wonder that thought should have been suggested to his mind, seeing he has such a multitude of prophecies that he wishes to carry into the land of forgetfulness. If he has not done "the revealed will and word of God an egregious wrong" we do not understand how it could be done. But he could spare some prophecy from his bottomless pit. He says:

It may be true of some prophecy that it is unconditional, but it is not true of all. When we come to such as the second and seventh of Daniel, where the great outlines of earthly kingdoms are marked out, it may be unconditional; for the nature of the prophecy is such that no condition is required; for by it no especial good could be obtained, or evil avoided. But when the nature of the prophecy is such that good or evil is promised to any people, then there is always a condition, whether specified in the text or context, or not: for God has made a rule to that effect, recorded in Jer. xviii., which covers the whole ground.

If this "rule covers the whole ground," then it covers Dan. ii. and vii. That prophecy was clearly a subjection of God's ancient people to Gentile rule down to the "feet and toes" of the image. Was that subjection conditional or not? If you say it was not conditional, then we have one important concession which destroys G.'s main argument. He takes as "a sample" Isa. lx., in proof of his conditional prophecy notion. We invite our readers to read that chapter. Of it G. says:

Here is one of the most glowing descriptions of prosperity ever spoken of any people: and yet it is all conditional. . . . .

Now all this, and much more, is promised, but is conditional, and hangs on the obeying or disobeying the commandment in the verse of the chapter, "Arise, shine, [why?] for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." Now this command, "Arise, shine," must be obeyed when "thy light is come," or the blessings promised will not follow; for it is on the supposition of obedience that the prosperity promised is to come. For it says (v. 3): "And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising." So if they did not arise and shine, no one could come to it.

This prophecy "is all conditional;" that is, it is an ignis-fatuus prophecy—"a luminous meteor to mislead travellers." G. goes on to tell us:

Their light did come, and the glory of the Lord did arise upon them, when the Redeemer (did come) to Zion" (Isa. lix., 20) eighteen hundred and more years ago. In proof of this see John i., 4–9: "In him was life, and the life was the light of men; and the light shineth in darkness. . . . He (John) was not that light, but was sent to bear witness of that light. That was the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

Now, according to G.'s reasoning, if the Jews had accepted the light eighteen hundred years ago, and embraced Jesus as their King, then all the glories of Isa. lx., would have been immediately realized by that people. Then what becomes of his "unconditional" prophecy of Dan. ii. and vii.? For let it be remembered, when Jesus, "the true light," came, the Jews were not within eighteen hundred years of "the toes" of the Image of Dan. ii., nor within several hundred years of the "ten horns" of Dan. vii. If the Jews had accepted Jesus and he had become their King, then the glories of Isa. lx. would have been realized: but if this had been realized, then Dan. ii. and vii. would not have been realized, hence would now be among the "conditional prophecies."

Thus the prophecies become a mere ignis-fatuus, a perfect bewilderment to the traveller; for he has no assurance that he is right, turn which way he will. The oracles of God, by this manipulation, have become as unreliable and uncertain as the pagan oracles; it may prove true sometimes, but if not, it was "conditional," that is all! We reject all such trifling with the oracles of God. It is well-calculated to destroy all confidence in the Bible itself; and it seems to us to turn the counsel of God into foolishness, and make the largest portion of prophecy like an old almanac which is out of use, and only guessed at the weather; if it was not wet it would be dry; and if it did not snow it would or possibly be fair weather.

Such a system of construing the Scriptures unsettles everything in the future; even the personal advent of Christ the second time may be a conditional event! Who, of "conditional prophecy" men, can affirm it is not? If God can give us detailed prophecy to guide us in this state, and to be a light to his church to the final consummation, and we are at liberty to convert such into "conditional" announcements—that may and may not occur—then is our "light become darkness, and how great is that darkness?"

Promises of good or blessings may be conditional, but even this admission must be taken with some limitation. God has promised seed time and harvest, etc., to the end of the world. The benefit to be derived from this promise may be conditional, but the promise itself has no condition. We might say the same of some promises of spiritual blessings; say the promise of the Messiah, the Christ, etc., while the ultimate blessing of eternal life is conditional.

But no such conditional idea is attached to prophecy. Our excellent Br., Jacob Grim, in his Dialogues on the Covenants, has set this matter in its true light. He says:

"I understand a prophecy to be an event that takes place, or is to take place, in which there can be no change or condition. . . . In prophecy God makes the history of the world as it will be; or, in other words, he takes the prophet and sets him down at the end of the age and shows him the world's history in advance. Now, there are no ifs or ands in the matter, for the prophet sees the thing done . . . nothing can change the programme."

That is the true idea of prophecy. A "conditional prophecy" is a contradiction in terms: it is an ignis-fatuus, by which idea men bewilder themselves and others. As such, let it be regarded by all who would know the truth.

Life and Immortality.

In writing to Timothy, Paul asserted that "Jesus Christ hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel," 1 Tim. i., 10. . It is too much to say that under the Old Testament dispensation nothing was known of a future life, that the people to whom were committed the oracles of God were left altogether in darkness respecting the future. The above declaration of Paul, that "Jesus Christ hath brought life and immortality to light" does not necessarily imply that all light upon that subject had previously been withheld, as some have been inclined to believe. We deem it not, however, too much to say that while the writings of Moses contain plenteous promises of temporal blessings as reward of obedience, and threatenings of temporal punishment in case of disobedience, they contain nothing more definite than a few obscure references, or hints, if, indeed, so much can be found in them, respecting a future state.

If any are surprised that this is so, they have only to remember that it was not the Gospel, but the law, that Moses was commissioned to promulgate. We of the present day run through the writings of the prophets, and find so many declarations respecting a future conscious existence, that we wonder the hope of a future life was not better and more generally understood by the Jews; but interpreting these passages, as we do, in the light of what has since transpired, in the light of revelations which they could not anticipate, we see clearness and force where the prophets themselves, much more the common people, must have labored under no little dimness and doubt. We cannot fairly presume that the masses of the people had any very definite conceptions of the reality of a future life, for without the light of subsequent developments, even the faithful student of Scripture could scarcely have been rewarded with anything brighter than faint glimmerings of immortality. Especially will this be seen to have been the case when we consider how natural it was under circumstances that so often befell them, to adopt such interpretation of certain passages as would make them applicable to temporal deliverances. While, therefore, the great truth of life and immortality was not wholly withheld from the children of Israel, it is no less true that Jesus Christ illustrated, and spread abroad the light of an incorruptible life. The prophet's all-important query, "If a man die, shall he live again?" was so answered by the Saviour as to be understood not alone by the learned and great, but by all people. The glad tidings of life from the dead was publicly proclaimed, and the poor, and the unlearned rejoiced in it, for it is written "the common people heard him gladly." A future life was to be made attainable by all, Gentile as well as Jew. It was offered as a gift to be imposed on none, but men were invited to an acceptance of it upon the simple terms proposed. "Every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day." John vi., 40. No ambiguity here. Every one which believeth on the Son will have everlasting life; and that life will be bestowed by raising "him up at the last day." The great question of life is settled, in promise, beyond cavil. Though mankind go down into the dark valley of the shadow of death, the Shepherd will call "His own sheep by name, and lead them out."

Wakefield, and others, render Paul's language above quoted, "who hath abolished death, and spread abroad (by demonstrating it) the light of an incorruptible life."

Though it is not in an absolute sense true that Jesus has abolished death, seeing that men are yet subject to it, but in a no-wise contracted sense it is true, for he has made it ineffectual, so far as his people are concerned, by depriving it of its power to continue any of them in the state of death. He has circumscribed and limited the march of the universal conqueror. The Gospel glad tidings of life in the future diffuses a delightful and most cheering radiance over the darkness of the grave, and affirms in the clearest language the precious truth, which was before the object of comparatively dim conjecture and anxious surmise, that the saints shall experience a resurrection to a glorious inheritance, an existence which shall never be subject to dissipation or decay. Having in God's appointed way obtained the right to confer a new light by a new principle, Jesus has, in the case of believers, drawn death's "sting," which is sin, and has thus counterworked death. "Christ died for our (us believers,) sins according to the scriptures." Did death hold him? "Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept;" i. e., have been sleeping, or are sleeping, (Lange) 1 Cor. xv., 21. It cannot, we think, be justly claimed that the language of the apostle means merely that the resurrection of Christ has preceded a universal resurrection, or that a universal resurrection is even intimated in Paul's argument. As the first sheaf of the harvest presented to God as a thank-offering was the pledge and sample of the ingathering so the resurrection of Christ is the pledge that others also will be raised to life; and his being the "first fruits," or sample, determines the character of the resurrection harvest. Men did not bring, as the "first fruits," a thank-offering of wheat and then go and gather a harvest consisting mainly of tares. Whom, too, are we to understand as being meant by "them that slept?" Believers only, or all the dead? That the former are meant is evident not merely from the expression "first fruits," but also from the designation "sleep," a term which is used in the New Testament to denote the death of believers only.

Under the law, the question, "will there be a future life?" and "who will attain unto it?" must have been frequently asked; and though the prophets, as we have seen, afforded a reply, yet a dark shadow of doubt and uncertainty must have veiled the subject. Our Saviour proclaimed the promise of eternal life, plainly stating the conditions, and then, by dying, by passing under the empire of death, and rising again from the dead, thus illustrating the doctrine of the resurrection, he removed all doubt and darkness, and brought "life and immortality" so thoroughly to light that among all the bright and glorious truths of revelation, eternal life from the dead for all "who by patient continuance in well doing seek for it," stands the central figure. "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore." "Because I live ye shall live also." "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life:" for the sting of death, that which enables it to kill beyond the possibility of recovery—remains in him; but "thanks be to God, which giveth us (believers) the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Life in the future is a fixed fact, but to secure it a living union must be formed with him who has become its author.

A True Criterion.

We extract the following from an editorial in "The Advance," every word of which we fully indorse. Christ is the Head of all true religion, or the religion from God. Whoever rejects Him in his Heaven appointed office as Prophet, Priest, or King, has no more claim to be called a Christian than the darkest pagan.

Christ the Test.

Is there anything in the New Testament clearer than this: that Christ is made the test of men and systems? Whatever may have been true before he came, and whatever may yet be true where the Gospel has not been preached, the case is plain with regard to those who have had the claims of Christ presented to them. They must accept him as their Lord and Saviour, or perish: their systems of religion must inculcate his redemption, or be counted folly and impiety. No one has the right to call himself a Christian, or to give that sacred name to another, be it to a philosopher, or a philanthropist, or any other man—except upon evidence of a distinct acceptance of Christ as offered in the Gospel. Does this seem rigid and harsh? We did not make the test. Christ himself made it, and who shall claim to be wiser or more loving than He? Does any one doubt whether Christ has prescribed such a test? Let him consult the New Testament. We find that Jesus uttered such words as these:

"I am the way, and the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me." "I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved." "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." "Neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him." "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him; the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."

Other equally decisive passages we cited two weeks since, when treating of a kindred point. The apostles thus instructed, unshrinkingly made Christ the test, offering Him to men and saying, "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." No doubt they often met with learned men, moral men, philosophers and philanthrophists, whose attainments and general character they respected; but they did not hesitate to put them to the test, by presenting Christ, and then to judge them by their acceptance or rejection of his claims.

This is no trifling and subordinate matter; no question of forms and ceremonies; no dispute over the non-essential differences of evangelical creeds; no effervescence of sectarian jealousy; no exhibition of narrow-minded bigotry. It is simply a question of fidelity to fundamental Christian truth, of loyalty to Christ as the only rightful King. Truth is always exclusive of error. Christ must be everything or nothing; for his claims are so exalted and imperative, that there can be no half way acceptance or rejection of them. He deliberately makes himself the test of men and of systems, as old Simeon prophesied: "Behold this child is set for the fall and rising of many in Israel, and for a sign which shall be spoken against, .... that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed." He is "the stone" which we may use as we will, but must use in some way; either as the foundation of all our hopes, or as "a stone of stumbling and rock of offence." Nor is the result at all uncertain; for Christ himself declared it: "Whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder." Yes, "whomsoever;" be he king or peasant; philosopher or fool; reformer or conservative; author or reader: moralist or outcast.

Is the Church of God Divided?

We noticed that a Western Editor deplores the divided state of the church; as though "the body of Christ,"—"the church of God," is really divided. For he says, "There are some good and honest hearts, who are misled by the reasoning of false teachers." Now if we follow false teachers, have we not left off following Christ? Does not Jesus say, "Ye cannot serve two masters?" And if the blind lead the blind, will they not all go into the ditch together? Now let us look at this subject a little. "The Church of God" is composed of individuals that are doing the commandments of God. They all believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God; such have been begotten by God. They have all been baptized into Jesus Christ; and have all been made to drink into one spirit. And Jesus says, "I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman . . . and ye (each individual member) are the branches. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye (bear the fruit of the Spirit) except ye abide in me. He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit. If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a withered branch fit only to be burned."

Now Jesus is the head of the Church, and each individual member, whether eye, ear, hand, or foot, is subject to the will of the head. And all who are subject to God, in Jesus Christ, constitute "the church of God," or the "one body," although they may be scattered over different portions of the earth; they are all working in accordance with the one will. But if an individual is led off from the path of truth, and follows after some false teacher, then they become his disciple, and not a disciple of Christ: so they cease immediately to be members of the "one body."

To talk of a man being a member of the church of God who is following after a false teacher, looks as absurd as to talk of a branch bearing fruit that is not connected with the vine. O how important it is, then, to be connected with Jesus our Life-giver, the true vine, that we may bear much fruit.

The Mortal Resurrection of Saints.

A theory advocating the mortal resurrection of the whole human family, now pressing itself upon the attention of the people, and especially the Advent people, seems to me to merit a word of criticism, which will enable the public to "see both sides." With no purpose, in the remarks we shall adduce, of exhausting the subject, or of casting any unjust reflections upon its advocates, we desire to see the subject properly brought before the public for investigation. We earnestly desire the truth.

The theory in question, to which we wish to call attention, we consider a most vital error—though we believe it to be honestly held by its advocates. This is not a hasty conclusion, but is drawn from a careful examination of the subject in the light of the Scriptures.

1. The whole human race will not be raised to life at the same time.

If we understand the argument, it is assumed that both classes, the "just and the unjust," are "awakened" to "mortal life" at the same time, viz.; at the coming of Christ. By this position the doctrine (held by the majority of Adventists) of the "two resurrections" is completely lost sight of, or is purposely thrown aside. It is not our design now to discuss the resurrection of the wicked, as the importance of the argument relates to the righteous.

If all the dead come forth to life at the same time, the conclusion cannot be honestly avoided that all shall be immortalized. What a retrogression! This is stepping back upon the platform which we claim to have abandoned when we left the thraldom of tradition. Paul very plainly teaches that all who shall have part in the resurrection at Christ's coming, shall be caught up, as an immortal multitude, "to meet the Lord in the air." (1 Thess. iv., 15, 16.) Paul is wisely positive; and, to clinch the argument on the resurrection, says, "The dead in Christ shall rise first." What is implied by the word "rise?" In order to sustain a cherished theory, one writer tells us that to "rise" means "to leave the earth as Elijah and Christ did." If to "rise" means to "leave" the earth, in what sense do the righteous dead "rise first?" Are the wicked to rise second in order? or are the righteous dead to rise and leave the righteous living behind? In this case it would be an advantage to be dead, as we should meet our Lord first; thus having unjust advantage over the living saints. But Paul does not leave this point unsettled. He says: "We which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them [the resurrected dead] in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air." This shows conclusively that the sleeping saints are to "rise from the dead," in the same sense that Christ "rose from the dead." The righteous living will not "prevent them which are asleep," for "the dead" are to "rise first," and, as one immortal multitude are "caught up" to meet the Lord Jesus.

Are the wicked caught up to meet the Lord in the air? If this be false, then they have no part in this resurrection, for Paul says: "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed." Paul nowhere intimates, in all his profound reasoning on the resurrection, that the wicked are raised from the dead at the same time with the righteous. And thus he disproves universal salvation.

Again. Rev. xx., 12, 13, is cited as proof of the universal resurrection of the dead at Christ's coming, as follows: "The dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books; . . . death and hades delivered up the dead that were in them, and they were judged." Space will not now permit me to give a critical exposition of this portion of the symbolic Scriptures. The theory, which appropriates this passage in its defence, assumes that "the dead" referred to comprehends both classes of the dead. It is hard to see by what strategy of reasoning this can be made to prove that both classes of the dead shall be made alive at the same time, when a passage in the same chapter declares that "the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. . . . Blessed and holy is he that hath a part in the first resurrection." A theory that takes Rev. xx., for its stronghold must, in order to present anything like a harmonious interpretation of the chapter, apply vs. 12, 13, to one or the other of the two classes previously brought to view. But is there any evidence within the Scriptures that the phrase "the dead" includes the wicked. We are prepared to show that is does not.

The critical Greek reading of the most ancient manuscripts, and also the American Bible Union, render v. 12: "And I saw the dead, great and small, standing before the throne." Now with all candor I ask, Will the wicked ever stand before the throne of God? If so, then they will get to heaven, at Christ's coming, as well as the righteous. Christ tells us that "heaven is God's throne." (Matth. v., 34.) John the Revelator, in Spirit, was caught up to heaven, and in vision saw a throne set in heaven," and "before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal." (Rev. iv., 1, 2, 6.) In Rev. vii., 9-17, he describes the multitude that "stand before the throne." This is without doubt the same multitude that he describes in Rev. xv., 21, and xx., 12. What is their character? Is it the whole human family? They are a multitude gathered out "of all nations, and kindred, and people, and tongues, . . . clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple, and he that sitteth upon the throne shall dwell among them." In Rev. xx., 12, John sees their condition prior to this, and his vision personifies "death and hades" as delivering them up.

Another evidence that Rev. xx., 12, 13, does not include the wicked, is the fact that after "the dead" are said to be delivered up, "death and hades" still exist, and are "cast into the lake of fire." If both classes of the dead were delivered at the same time from hades (the state of the dead), there would be no hades to cast into the "lake of fire," for it is inconsistent to speak of the place of the dead when no one is dead. The same principle equally applies to the term death. When all the race are alive there is no death in the sense which the Revelator uses it. This view of Rev. xx., 12, we think harmonizes with Paul, who refers to a chosen class, brought forth in immortality at the executive judgment, when Christ comes to be glorified in his saints.

2. The Scriptures deny that the dead, at Christ's coming, are brought forth to mortal life.

We have already disproved that the whole race are resurrected at the same time. It now remains for us to show that those who are raised at Christ's coming are not raised in mortal life. The theory assumes that the dead come up in mortal life simply to have the decision rendered by the Judge, after which the saints are to "put on immortality." This implies a continuation of this mortal life beyond the grave, though the theory claims that it will be of short duration. But have the Scriptures anywhere intimated that a moment of this mortal life will be continued beyond the tomb? Does not the sanctified heart shudder at the thought of coming from the tomb arrayed in the robes of mortality—still under the effects of the curse? Though it be claimed that mortal life be of but a moment's duration, yet this does not alter the fact. Is there any proof that mortal life beyond the grave may not last one hundred years as well as one moment? As proof it may be claimed that "they shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." But this language has no reference to the rendering of the "decision," but solely to the "execution" of the judgment; therefore, as the "change" is the result of judgment, it can have no reference to any time prior. But we must not follow this argument further now, for we wish to adduce a few passages bearing against the whole theory, which are in every way worthy of our consideration.

Was Christ raised from the dead to mortal life? If so, for what purpose? It is claimed that man is raised to mortal life for the purpose of being judged. Was Christ judged? He "was without sin;" and this fact was sufficient knowledge in the mind of God to base the execution of the decision which delivered him from death. If Christ was raised in immortality then must the mortal resurrection theory collapse; for Christ was the "first-fruits" of the harvest; and the harvest must correspond with the sample. It is impossible to have the "first-fruits" immortal, and the remainder of the harvest mortal. The first-fruits and the harvest must be of one character. A sheaf of wheat cannot be a part of a barley harvest. The immortal resurrection of Christ involves the immortal resurrection of the saints; for the same "spirit" that raised Christ from the dead shall "quicken" the "mortal bodies" of the saints—bring them from the dead in immortality and glory.

Again. Paul says: "It is sown in corruption"—it [the body] goes down into the grave as a corruptible, decaying, mortal body —"it is raised in incorruption." It is assumed the dead saints will be changed from mortal to immortality so soon after they "wake up," that Paul's declaration may be considered not far from the truth! that the change "may be regarded as an appendage." But we fail to find in the Scriptures that immortality is an "appendage" which is added to the resurrected saints.

"It is sown a natural body"—but do the Scriptures anywhere affirm that it is raised a natural body?—it is raised a spiritual body; it is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power." In all the sacred writings we are unable to find that this life is continued for one moment beyond the grave.

A decision must be rendered prior to the resurrection.

We admit that a decision must be rendered before it can be executed. Justice demands it. A decision is based upon evidence, which implies a previous investigation on the part of the Judge. But in order for God to obtain the requisite knowledge of each indivdual upon which to base a decision, is it necessary for him to defer the investigation till after the resurrection? But the fact that a chosen number—the "elect"—are gathered at his coming, and the unrighteous left, proves conclusively that the investigation has taken place, and the decision rendered prior to the resurrection. The execution of the decision confers immortality upon the saints, and the fact that they are raised "in incorruption" and "glory" proves this. Therefore, the judgment at Christ's coming is an executive one.

But I need not now multiply argument on this subject. In conclusion, reader, let me exhort, you to cling to the Scriptures. Too many at the present time are building "on the sand." Let us build on the Rock, for the storm is soon coming that will try every man's work, and we shall be "saved as by fire."

From Eben Hester.

Suffield, Conn., March 10, 1869.

To God's dear children of like precious faith, scattered abroad.

Br. Storrs: As strangers and pilgrims, a brother tenders his sympathies, as it has pleased our heavenly Father to grant me his saving grace, through the Lord Jesus, to enable me to hold everything here with a loose hand, also I trust a love that passeth expression, and to fill my heart with joy and gladness, that even my bones may rejoice and my tongue be loosed to sing his praise for his great love wherewith He loved even a poor sinner like me, also that I might exemplify all the christian graces, such as love, joy, etc.

In my life may I be ever ready to lend a helping hand to my fellow creatures wherever it is in my power so to do.

The poor we have with us alway. When Jesus comes we shall be rich. Bless the Lord, he addeth no sorrow therewith. There are few of you that have seen my face, yet I bless God I can rejoice with you in the spirit.

The breathings wafted in your organ of Life, I found to be contagious, nor with all my educational antidotes could I keep back the infection. I trust this sickness will not be unto death, unless it be to kill the old man. Brother pilgrims have to fight manfully every day; at least, I find it so. We must put on the harness every morning.

But I am digressing from particulars; so now I confess I received a stunning blow which knocked all the props away, (may be refuge of lies); no matter, my house had to come down. Still I can sing,

"O, my house is builded upon the Rock,
Jesus Christ my Saviour:
Not the billows roar, nor the tempest's shock,
Can shake my foundation ever."

Well, as I said, I saw new light. Were I to tell all my experience, it would take too long, so I will not be tedious. A little pamphlet was handed me entitled, "Bible Truth;" but this was not the thing for me. I told the sister I would read any good book with an unbiased mind. Either she or me provoked a discussion. As I have studied God's word a good deal, she would not, I think, have convinced me in an argument. The sister perceived this, as she attacked me another way, by placing in my hand a work, "Bible vs. Tradition." This work, and the spirit of the sister, I could not withstand. "If we have not the spirit of Christ we are none of his." The work referred to must have cost the author a good deal of time and labor, and he desires our hearty thanks. The Lord bless him, and grant that we all may meet where we shall see eye to eye, and know as we are known. Yours in the hope of the Gospel.

John B. Lovejoy, West Milan, Coos Co., N. H., writes: Perhaps you are not aware that there are some people in this place that rejoice in the doctrine of No life out of Christ; but so it is. There are a few that feel it to be their duty to proclaim what they think is Bible truth, though opposed by the professed church in a spirit far different from that manifested by our Saviour.

Enclosed find one dollar, for which please send me the Herald of Life. Yours, in hope of a part in the kingdom to come.

Remarks by the Editor.—We are glad to learn that the Life views are getting into the upper part of our native State. We feel a special interest in New Hampshire, and hope the light of heavenly truth may yet illuminate all parts of the old Granite State. We know there is good material there, and trust it may yet be hewn out and take its place in the palace of Truth.

Stewart Carlisle, Wilmington, Del., sends for books, and writes: The Lord be praised, truth is slowly, but we trust surely advancing, and skepticism in regard to the slanderous doctrine of endless torments is becoming more and more apparent. May the Lord give boldness to all who believe His truth, that without fear they may be able to bear their testimony in favor of the precious truth of no future life out of Christ. How glad I am that this truth was ever presented to my faith; and when thus presented, I had both eyes to see and ears to hear; and now all the cunning craftiness of men whereby they lie in wait to deceive, and all their handling of the word of God deceitfully, cannot move me from this glorious hope of the gospel, eternal life through and by Him who is the author of that life to all those who obey Him. My heart's desire and prayer to God is, that the labors of our dear Editor and Brethren may be more abundantly blessed in turning men away from the popular errors of the present day and bringing them to the simplicity of the truth. Yours, in hope of eternal life.

On the subject of the increase or decrease of Romanism in this country, on which we published an article in the Observer a few weeks since, the American Churchman (Protestant Episcopal) says: "We hold it capable of clearest proof that this country has received—take the existing United States together, at least two Romish emigrants to one Protestant, and that consequently at this day the population of this country should be two-thirds Romish, instead of being as it is, one-eighth Romish. A delusion has been put upon us by this Anglo-Saxon 'common origin' theory. The truth is, Romanism has lost fearfully by American immigration, and is losing daily masses who belong to it by birth and training. The Romish Church knows this tolerably well, and at times her Bishops have uttered solemn warnings against immigration."

Brutality.

A fiendish act was perpetrated in this village last Monday night, the person guilty of which ought to be held in execration by his fellow citizens. The act consisted of putting kerosene oil on a living cat, setting fire to it and turning it out in the street. The poor dumb animal ran hither and thither a few minutes, rolling along the street like a ball of fire, until some humane gentleman put an end to its misery with a pistol shot. Setting fire to a living creature is an act of unmitigated cruelty that can hardly be surpassed. It is a crime which ought to be severely punished. The present case was not only one of cruelty to the poor animal, but endangered the lives and property of the citizens, for had the burning animal gone into a barn, or come in contact with any inflammable material, there is no telling what the result might have been. —Sandy Hill, N. Y., paper.

[From the next week's paper.]

Cat-astrophe Outdone.

Messrs. Editors: The sympathy of our village was justly aroused by the inhuman cruelty of setting fire to a poor defenceless cat; and it was a praiseworthy effort to put the poor creature out of misery as soon as possible.

But what is this, cruel as it is, in comparison to the popular doctrine of endless torment to countless millions of our fellow creatures, in a lake of fire and brimstone? Who can dare to assert and believe, that a God of love and mercy is so infinitely more cruel than any of his creatures ever could be? Especially in flat contradiction to His holy word, which declares—"the soul that sinneth it shall die," and "the wages of sin is death," not endless torment.

Age of the Tower of London.

Even as to length of days, the Tower has no rival among palaces and prisons; its origin, like that of the Iliad, that of the Sphinx, that of the Newton Stone, being lost in the nebulous ages, long before our definite history took shape. Old writers date it from the days of Cæsar—a legend taken up by Shakespeare and the poets, in favor of which the name of Cæsar's tower remains in popular use to this very day. A Roman wall can even yet be traced near some parts of the ditch. The Tower is mentioned in the Saxon Chronicle, in a way not incompatible with the fact of a Saxon stronghold having stood upon this spot. The buildings, as we have them now in block and plan, were commenced by William the Conqueror; and the series of apartments in Cæsar's tower—hall, gallery, council-chamber, chapel—were built in the early Norman reigns, and used as a royal residence by all our Norman kings. What can Europe show to compare against such a tale? Set against the Tower of London—with its eight hundred years of historic life, its nineteen hundred years of traditional fame—all other palaces and prisons appear like things of an hour.

Poetry.

Our Father's Goodness.

How thankful ought we all to be
That we are suffered still to live,
Though oft we slight God's mercy free,
And oft his Holy Spirit grieve.

We live upon his fostering care,
With heaven's choicest bounty fed;
And though we oft unthankful are,
He giveth us our daily bread.

Though objects of his tender care,
Receiving from his bounteous store,
We oft forget these blessings rare,
And grieve our heavenly Father more.

Our life, though but a shortened span,
Shows many a blessing shed abroad;
Then why should man, poor mortal man,
Thus slight the goodness of his God?

We'll give our Father constant praise,
And, leaning on his mighty arm,
He'll still support us all our days,
And shield us safely from all harm.

He'll lead us with a Father's hand,
Till old mortality shall cease,
And bring us to that promised land,
Where we shall live in endless peace.

The Fish with a Blow-Gun.

"Did you ever see a fish shoot?" asked Uncle Rea, who had been a great sailor in his time, having been twice around the world.

"Of course I have, hundreds of times," answered Harry, his little nephew. "Shoot through the water just like an arrow."

"Oh, I don't mean that kind of shooting; but with a gun," said Uncle Rea."

"A fish shoot with a gun! You know I never did, nor anybody else."

"Not so fast, my boy. There's a fish in the Indian Ocean that carries a gun and shoots its prey."

"Now, uncle, you're just fooling me! I don't believe I would believe that if I saw it."

"Seeing is believing, Harry: and as I've seen it, I'm bound to believe it."

"You, Uncle Rea; you saw a fish with a gun?"

"Yes."

"And saw it shoot?"

"Yes, oftener than I've got fingers and toes."

"What kind of a gun was it? Did the fish use powder and shot?"

"I hardly think," said Uncle Rea, smiling, "that it could have kept its powder dry. No, it didn't use a powder-gun, but a blow-gun."

"You're just fooling me in some way," said Harry, half laughing, half serious.

"No, honor bright," returned Uncle Rea; "it's just as I'm telling you. You have seen a pair of bellows with their long nose. Well, instead of a wide mouth, like most fish, the one of which I speak has a long muzzle or snout, something like a pair of bellows, only it is split down the middle, so that it can open like a pair of pincers. This is its gun."

"Oh! I thought you meant that it carried a gun in its fins."

Uncle Rea laughed, and then went on telling about his fish.

"The name of the fish is the Beaked Chaetodon, and it lives in the East Indian seas, along the coasts of China, Japan and many of the islands. It feeds mostly on insects, but as enough of these to satisfy its hunger do not usually fall into the water, it makes up the deficiency by gunning."

"I'd just like to know how, Uncle Rea."

"It's wonderful enough, my boy," said Uncle Rea; "but as I've seen it scores of times, there's no doubt of it in the world. A fly will light near the water's edge on a blade of grass or a twig, seeing which, the fish takes a drop of water in its mouth and swims quietly up to within two or three feet of the fly, with its body, except end of its snout, in the water. When near enough, it shoots this drop at the fly, and with such sureness of aim as almost always to knock it into the water, when it is snapped up instantly."

"Well now, that does beat everything!" exclaimed Harry. "And you've seen it done, Uncle Rea?"

"Oh yes, as I've said, scores of times. In Java and China they keep these finny hunters in bowls and vases as pets, and amuse themselves by watching them in pursuit of their prey."

"And did you ever see them in vases?"

"Oh yes; and have often held a fly near the water, on the end of a stick, to see them shoot it?"

"And did they always shoot."

"Almost always, and rarely missed their aim."

"Why didn't you bring one home, Uncle Rea?" asked Harry.

"I don't think they would live in our climate; they belong to a warmer region of the world."

"Are they large?"

"No; I never saw them more than five or six inches long. They are shaped much like a sun-fish, and are curiously striped with brownish bands, edged with darker brown and white. But let us see if we can't find the picture of one of them in a book on Natural History."

And Uncle Rea went to the library and took down a volume.

"Yes, here is the very chap himself," said Uncle Rea, as he turned the leaves of the book; "and the artist who drew him has taken him in the very act of shooting a fly. See the drop of water just at the muzzle of his gun, ready to pop out at the poor insect, that hasn't a thought of danger."

"I'll believe 'most anything after this!" exclaimed Harry, gazing intensely at the picture for a long time. "And to think that I never heard of it before," he added; then after a pause, he said: "I guess there are a good many other little boys—and girls, too—that never heard of a fish with a blow-gun. I wish I could show them all this picture, and tell them about it, too."

Beware of the First Whiff.

Boys, shall I tell you a story, a true story—a sad one nevertheless, and one which I wish you always to remember? Well, you would like to hear it? It is this:

I had a little cousin once—a boy, bright and buoyant. He was a very happy child; he had kind parents, and a sister who loved him very much, and he was a very good boy till he reached the age of thirteen.

Then his parents moved into a neighborhood where there were many bad boys; but they knew it not, and their child used to play with them, and, all unconsciously to his parents, he was fast being corrupted.

These boys used to get away by themselves in an old barn, and smoke pipes and cigars, and try who could smoke longest.

Edwin, for this was my cousin's name, used to try to smoke, too, and he would come home pale and spiritless, with loss of appetite and very bad headaches. My aunt never suspected what was the matter with her boy; but all a mother's anxiety was aroused for the health of her only son, and she would tenderly nurse him; but he got no better, and his friends feared he was going into a decline. He was forbidden to stay out after eighth o'clock in the evening, but sometimes he would transgress.

One evening he stayed out quite late, and his mother became very uneasy. Nine o'clock struck, and still he came not. My uncle was absent, and they had no man around the house to send for him. At last the clock struck ten His mother could bear the suspense no longer. She put on her bonnet and went out, but she could find nothing of her child. She turned to go home, and met some large boys leading, or rather half dragging, a smaller one along.

That's his mother," she heard one of them say. She went up to them—it was her Edwin! She feared he was hurt; perhaps in his weak state of health he might have fallen and injured himself. She inquired hastily of one of the boys, and he rudely answered her, "He is drunk, ma'am!" O what a sound for that doting mother!

They reached home; how, she never knew; her feelings seemed utterly paralyzed; but there was her boy, her Edwin, helplessly intoxicated, pale as a corpse, with red, swollen eyes, and a terrible bruise on his head, where he had fallen and hurt himself. All night his mother watched and wept over her fallen child.

In the morning he confessed to her that he had been accustomed, every hour he could steal away, to go with those boys and smoke. He told her how sick it made him at first, and that he would have given it up; but they laughed him out of it: told him it was manly to smoke—gentlemen did it; and that the night before they got some wine, and smoked and drank till he knew nothing, until the fall and bruise roused him a little. O how repentant he seemed! how he promised his poor mother he would never smoke or drink again.

But he was weak-minded. The boys laughed at him. Again and again he yielded, and grew from bad to worse, till at last, at the age of eighteen, his misconduct broke his poor mother's heart, and he died the miserable death of a drunkard, a victim to the "first whiff."

And now, boys, whenever you are tempted by others to smoke—whenever you are told it is manly, remember Edwin's fate.

"Touch not, taste not, handle not." Believe me, it is more manly to refuse than to yield to temptation.—Band of Hope Review.

Judgment.

There seems to be a class of persons professing Christianity who believe that the judgment is to take place immediately after the resurrection; and that all who have lived from Adam down to the present time, and all who will live from the present time to the coming of Christ, or the resurrection, will be raised to life and then be judged according to the deeds done in the body.

Let us now see how this will compare with the word of God. The Psalmist says, The ungodly shall not stand in the judgment. Psa. i., 5. God judgeth the righteous, and God is angry with the wicked every day. Psa. vii., 11. This text clearly proves that the judgment is every day. Enter not into judgment with thy servant, for in thy sight shall no man living be justified. Psa. cxliii., 2. The Psalmist is here entreating the Lord not to enter into immediate judgment with him. This text seems to be in direct opposition to the popular belief. Zion shall be redeemed with judgment, and her converts with righteousness. Isa. ii., 27. Here is a class of people and not the whole human family. A class that shall be redeemed with righteousness; and Jesus said, for judgment I am come into this world. John ix., 39. Not for judgment I will come some other time. For judgment I am come; (present tense) clearly stating into this world and not into the next world.

Therefore as by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation. Rom. v., 18. It cannot be doubted but that all men are under the sentence of the law, and according to the Divine law stand condemned. Now, what are we condemned to? Eternal torture, such as hell fire and brimstone, and there to be kept alive by God's agency, and for him to make the pains most intolerably deep, as some believe at this present day? No: thank God, that is not the case. We are under sentence of death; that is the law, and unless we have a union with Christ there is where we will remain. If eternal torture be the punishment, will some of our friends tell us what would have been the punishment if Christ had not come? Has Christ made the punishment worse by his coming? Glad tidings of great joy to all people, this must be; especially the ungodly to suffer eternal conscious torments! However, the law of God seems clear on this point. It says, I set before you life and death. Deut. xxx., 15. Eternal life to the righteous; eternal death to the wicked; for, as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. 1 Cor. xv., 22. Some will say, That raises all to life. I would ask if all mankind are in Christ? such as murderers, thieves, adulterers, fornicators, etc. Paul says, if any man be in Christ he is a new creature. 2 Cor. v., 17. In Christ shall all be made alive, clearly proves judgment before resurrection. Out of Christ has no promise of life. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. Col. iii., 4. Now, is Christ the life of the wicked? If so, then the wicked will appear in glory too: if Christ is not the life of the wicked, where will their life come from? This text also proves judgment before resurrection, because it applies to those only who have their lives hid with Christ in God.

"Follow Me."—John xxi., 19.

This was one of Jesus' last commands to Peter, repeated with emphasis as he inquisitively asked, "What" should be the future of the beloved disciple John, whom he saw following; clearly intimating that it was no concern of his what John should do; all would be wisely ordered in the councils of His will. What personally concerned Peter was made known in plain terms, "Follow thou me."

The command is to us also imperative: what Jesus said to them, He said to all. How shall we follow in this age? First, deny self; crucify all sinful desires and affections; take every cross patiently and cheerfully: feed the hungry, clothe the naked; teach the ignorant: "freely" we have received, "freely" we should give. Be ashamed of no service where good can be accomplished. We should also remember to teach the lisping infant the loving words of Jesus; inspire into its every day life, by precept and example, the pure principles that fell from Jesus' lips as He walked among men.

When should we follow him? Shall we do it when we feel like it—when from Pisgah's top we get a glimpse of future good, and can almost walk by sight? Rather, should not the great principles that underlie the Divine arrangement, as unchangeable as their Author, be our motive power? although they may lead into thick darkness, quaking and trembling, it may be, yet we should follow.

Moses might have shrunk from the Divine mandate when commanded to "go forward;" each side environed by high mountains, Pharaoh's formidable hosts in the rear and the Red Sea before them. With all these insurmountable obstacles, the command rang out from the pillar of fire, to the people, "Go forward." They obeyed; and Israel's six hundred thousand fighting men, besides women and children with flocks and herds, and a mixed multitude that went with them, were fast moving from the tyrant's grasp and nearing the shore where in shouts of victory they would celebrate Jehovah's triumph—the conquest of obedience in the midst of difficulties and dangers.

Thus I understand the Christian should follow Christ, not only when on the mount, but in the vale: not only when the sun shines, but when clouds obscure his rays. Jesus is behind the clouds and calls us in accents of love to follow where thus commanded. We might well suppose the earnest inquiry of all would be, may I follow? is it for me? Yes, anxious inquirer, if such there be, it is for all, unto the uttermost. Jesus will never send you back because His followers are so numerous that He has no place for more; nor will He refuse you because you are poor and lowly, or because you have been great sinners. The woman who washed His feet with tears and wiped them with the hair of her head was forgiven much and loved much, and was tenderly cherished.

This Divine command embraces all: therefore, sorrowing son or daughter of Adam, follow Jesus and you will find a warm and loving heart, where you can pour your sorrows and unbosom your cause with confidence, anticipating no diminution or decay, and enjoy a feast of love such as only the obedient heart, that follows Jesus, clearly can comprehend. I speak from experience, lonely ones, having long known the heart of the widow and the power of Jesus' promises and love to sustain and comfort.

We should not follow merely for the loaves and fishes—the comfort it brings: nevertheless, it is right I think, to have some respect unto the recompense of reward, or it would not be set before us as a motive power. The first great principle that should move us is, the command from the infinite source of justice and right. To these requirements the obedient heart will ever heartily respond. Amen.

From Mrs. E. V. C. Bennett.

Riceville, Iowa, Feb. 25, 1869.

Br. Storrs: Inclosed I send you a portion of a letter which explains itself. You may make such use of it as you think best, with the exception of publishing the name of course, I would prefer not to have that done as the letter is a portion of private correspondence.

I wish that Dr. Finley's series of articles may be published in tract form. Would do something if possible to furnish means to that end; but must wait longer even to pay the price of the dear Herald, which I certainly feel very anxious to do.

I am much comforted and delighted with your Bible views of the glorious age to come. May God speed and aid you in your investigations. I do thank Heaven that there is a Herald of Life to assist the seekers after truth.

I find in our last "New York Tribune" an address of the Hon. Andrew D. White, on Agricultural Education, from which I make the following extract, which you will see has so broad an application, and should be studied especially by theological teachers, whose olfactories are so acute at scenting out heresy:

The Extract.

Nor should you be too much afraid regarding truth.

All over the land you will find well meaning gentlemen in terror, lest somehow, scientific studies upset God's truth.

They seem to think eternal truth the weakest thing going, although perpetually coddled and bolstered. Their predecessors trembled, and bit, and burned, for fear of the idea that the earth revolves about the sun—then they were alarmed at Geology, then at Zoology and Chemistry, and now many of them seem to think that it is safe to study nothing save some language so dead that it cannot possibly do harm.

Look into History, and you discover that Truth has taken care of herself wonderfully well. Grand as glorious John Milton's praise of her power was, it was not a whit overstated.

Curiously enough, the main supports of truth in every age have generally been the men thought heretics; and the worst opponents of truth in every age have generally proved to be these same timid gentlemen who have feared lest truth receive some detriment. Look through the whole range of History, you do not find one of the scientific investigators who has implanted a permanent error, but you find hosts of their conscientious opponents who for ages have cut out and burnt out truth. God's truth is mightier than the poets make it. Men's interpretations of truth are constantly changing; truth itself is never endangered.

Hoping that you will think best to send me the Herald until I can pay for it, I remain truly yours.

The following is an extract from the letter Mrs. Bennett sent us, written from a town in Massachusetts:

How are your schools progressing? Have you more than one? We have enough here of schools. But one town in Mass. raises more money according to the number of scholars than this; and yet I am sorry to say that, for the past year, perhaps no town in the State has had a greater share of crime than this. Just think: Here is a town almost on the verge of Forefathers Rock. Here we have many direct descendants of the Puritans. The Bradfords, the Brewsters, the Faunces, whose ancestors thought with the Jews that they were almost as much the favored of God as the seed of Abraham, whose laws were almost Mosaic. So fearful were they of the encroachments of levity and sin that a man was prohibited from kissing his wife on the Sabbath. Even some were so devout that the roosters were shut up in a separate coop from the hens on Sunday. Here we have three churches, all not two gunshots from where I am now sitting, just opposite a store and Post Office. Yet with all the peculiar advantages, we have had theft in several instances, arson, murder, adultery, beastiality, and an alleged case of sodomy. The murderer was an orthodox deacon; and all committed by residents of the town. Thus you see we have line upon line, and precept upon precept, but unholy still. As for me, I do not go to meeting; for no creed here suits my view of things. No creed on earth comes up to my standard, viewed from my stand-point. I cannot believe what my reason dictates is not so. It is easy to say "I believe." But to believe is to be positive without any doubt. Where can any one see a design of a just God to create beings to be consigned to endless misery, knowing, as Omniscience, even before man was made that countless millions must thus suffer? Was it to be glorified by saints in heaven, because merely justice is satisfied? Shame to think such a God is great and is glorified by the wails of the damned; and Christian throngs must stand on the battlements of the New Jerusalem and applaud devils in their torture of sinners. But I have preached enough.

From Horace Story.

Coventry, Vt., Feb. 24, 1869.

Br. Storrs: I make no apologies for addressing a few lines to you at this time; for it is but a few month since I became convinced that only those who believe on Christ would be "raised up at the last day;" although I had for some five years rejected the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, consciousness of the dead, and endless torments. I am now alone, there being no one within eight miles of me of "like faith;" but I am trying to do the best I can, hoping for better time.

So long as I could find one passage of Scripture which seemed to me to teach the doctrine of endless punishment, or so long as I supposed that Christ said "These shall go away into everlasting punishment" I believed and advocated the doctrine. But when upon a more careful examination there was not one single text to support it, and after reading the celebrated work of Robert Landis in favor of immortal-soulism, endless punishment, etc. and seeing, on the 480th page of that work, that in the text above, the word punishment is from kolasin, meaning cut off, and consequently our Saviour really said that the wicked should be forever cut off, I thought and think now that I had good reason to change my mind; or in other words, my mind was unavoidably changed. Therefore I think it of the first importance that those portions of Scripture which are quoted and relied on by errorists to support their errors should be correctly and thoroughly explained if we would reform them; for the intemperate, the polygamist, and oppressor, as well as the spiritualist, and the various orthodox sects, all think there are a few passages of Scripture, at least, to prove their peculiar doctrines.

Therefore it should be the great work of our lives to shed light upon the sacred page; or in other words, to let our light shine before men.

I was held to the doctrine of a general resurrection by just three texts of Scripture; but these have been satisfactorily explained to my mind. In relation to 1 Corth. xv., 22, I think it sufficient to say, "if any man be in Christ Jesus he is a new creature," or a new creation. We are all in Adam and must die; and if we are all in Christ we shall all be made alive; if not in Christ, I think we "shall remain in the congregation of the dead."

Time.

"Time was, 'tis past, thou canst not it enjoy,
Time present is, the moments well employ;
Time future is not, and may never be,
The present is the only time for thee."

For one moment of time how many have vainly cried. They have lived in luxury and ease many a long year; time measured none of their actions, so it would seem; till at last, when Death the great leveller had sent his arrow swifter than was anticipated, then came the harrowing cry, "My kingdom for one moment of time:" but, alas! the summons had gone forth, "Thou fool," etc. Surely, in view of the great gain before men, and the brief allotment of time to make their calling and election sure, how doubly important is the necessity of a proper use of time. Lost time is never regained.

G.

Concerning Creeds.

Sometimes I wish there were no such things in existence. They gender so much strife; they do so much to strengthen sectarian bonds, to cherish bigotry, to keep good people out of the church, who do not believe exactly as the creed teaches in all its details.

Some venerate the creed much more than the Bible: that is, they magnify the distinctive feature of their belief above and beyond the Bible, as a requisite for church membership. I suppose there are good Christian members of Congregational churches, who do not believe in Election, and who do believe in a fall from grace. I know of two such persons, and they are deacons, too. Now I contend that a Congregational creed ought not to contain anything which should keep a good Methodist, or any other good Christian brother from church membership. Suppose infant baptism is an article. That might keep out a dozen good members. True disciples of Christ are what we want for church members. What is it that keeps so many non-professing Christians out of the church? It is their conscientiousness as much as anything else. They would join the church if its requirements were such as include the essential doctrines of Christian belief, and nothing more. And then who ever looks at the creed? Who ever goes to it for religious instruction, or for comfort? It is not the sheet anchor of our hope. The Bible is; and it is our spiritual meat and drink. If any don't know what they believe without a creed, they will not know with it. A creed answers about this purpose for most persons. They receive a copy when taken into the church; hear it read in its tedious length, when taken into the church, and never look into it afterward.

As things are now, I would have for each church a definite written creed; but I would have it deal altogether with essentials, and thus should have it brief, concise, comprehensive; something after the order of the "service of admission," now in use in some of our churches, which is read whenever candidates are taken into the church.

Remarkable Works of Human Labor.

Nineveh was 14 miles long, 8 miles wide, and 46 miles round, with a wall 100 feet high, and thick enough for three chariots abreast. Babylon was 50 miles within the walls, which were 75 feet thick and 100 feet high, with 100 brazen gates. The temple of Diana, at Ephesus, was 420 feet to the support of the roof; it was 100 years in building. The largest of the pyramids was 481 feet in height, and 953 on the sides, the base covers 11 acres: the stones are about 60 feet in length, and the layers are 208; it employed 320,000 men in building. The labyrinth in Egypt contained 300 chambers and 12 halls. Thebes, in Egypt, presents ruins 27 miles round, and 100 gates. Carthage was 29 miles round. Athens was 25 miles round, and contained 350,000 citizens and 400,000 slaves. The Temple of Delphos was so rich in donations that it was plundered of £10,000,000, and Nero carried away from it 200 statues. The walls of Rome were 13 miles round.

Quakers as Indian Agents.—Gen Grant is choosing a good plan of carrying out his programme for the Christianization and civilization of the Indians. He has caused letters to be written to members of the Society of Friends in this city, asking them to nominate persons fitted for the position of Indian agents, and pledging himself to do all in his power to comply with the recent Memorial presented by the Yearly Meeting. No compliment to a religious body could be higher or better deserved.—American Presbyterian.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—" the 'Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in thei order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. Earth, not Heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. The Soul Saved or Lost. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 5. Moral Depravity; by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 7. Doom of the Ungodly: or The Wicked Dead remain eternally under death's dominion. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 8. The Wages of Sin; by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. Letters to a Clergyman; or Life only through Christ not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. Finley, Pittsburg, Pa. Price 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are 16 pages octavo. They will be sold at $3 per 100, or, fifty cents per dozen, free of postage.

No. 9. The Essential Baptism; by the Editor of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price 7 cents.

Unless attention is paid to all these matters confusion and delay are inevitable.

LITERAL FULFILMENT OF PROPHECY.

WE have shown in previous articles that there will be a literal return, in the flesh, of a remnant of the posterity of Jacob to the land wherein their fathers have dwelt. Among other prophecies that clearly teach this truth, we trust it has been made to appear that Ezk. xxxvi., and the latter part of chap. xxxvii., are proof of this position. It will be expected that the first part of chap. xxxvii, should be harmonized with this view, if correct. It is contended that the language there clearly shows that the gathering is from the grave. We admit it. But the question is—What grave is spoken of! Is it the grave where their physical organizations are deposited? or, the grave of their national organization? It must be understood that the term "grave" is used in both these senses in the Bible. It is used in the sense of national overthrow, or dissolution in reference to Babylon, Isa. xiv., 11, "Thy pomp shall be brought down to the grave." The Lord, also, speaking of the overthrow of Assyria, Ezk. xxxi., after having described the glory of that kingdom, says, v., 15, "In the day when he went down to the grave," etc; that is, the "fall" or overthrow of Assyria, as the connection shows. Again, the Lord, speaking of the overthrow of Nineveh, Nahum i., 14, says, "I will make thy grave; for thou art vile."

These examples show that the overthrow of nations is spoken of as going, nationally, down into the grave. The kingdoms of Judah and Israel had been overthrown, and had gone down into their graves; God assures them that their overthrow is not a final one, like Babylon, Assyria and Nineveh; but that he will open their graves, hopeless as their case might appear to themselves and others, and that he would bring them up out of their graves, and bring them into the land of Israel: nationally restore them, and put them in possession of "the land wherein" their "fathers have dwelt:" not the land wherein they, personally, had dwelt; showing a clear distinction, as we have shown elsewhere, between those at this time brought into the land, and the "resurrection" of their fathers. If it still be said, that "the language used in reference to their coming up is in explanation of the vision, and therefore must be understood of a literal coming out of the grave"—we admit it. What then? The "coming up" is of "the whole house of Israel:" that is—a national coming up. Babylon, Assyria, and Nineveh did not and will not come up out of their graves, but the whole house of Israel—both Judah and Israel—as explained in the latter part of the same chapter—shall come up out of their graves—that state of ruin they had been in as nations—and shall come into the land wherein their fathers have dwelt; and shall there become "one nation," and "they shall be no more two nations; after that restoration they shall no more go into captivity.

That the true exposition of this account of the whole house of Israel coming up out of their graves, is here given, appears clear, because it makes a perfect harmony with the entire context, both in this chapter and in chapter xxxvi., which cannot be separated from it. The only hope the opposers of this view can have of escaping this conclusion is, by insisting on what we have shown to be groundless, viz.: that because the term graves is used in explaining the vision, therefore it must mean the place of deposit of the personal organization of the bodies of the men of Israel. We trust we have said enough already to show the unsoundness of such a construction of the language. Let the opposers apply the same principle of interpretation to some of their own expositions, and they will find themselves blown to the winds. Take for example, Daniel vii. It is there said in explanation of the vision, verse 17, "These great beasts, which are four, are four Kings;" and again, verse 24, "The ten horns out of this kingdom are ten Kings." Now if the principle which they urge in the interpretation of of the term "graves," Ezk. xxxvii., that is, because it is used in explanation of the vision, that therefore it must be understood in its first and primary sense: i. e., to mean the place of deposit for dead men: then they must, for the same reason, make kings to mean individual reigning monarchs, and not kingdoms.

In Ezk. xxxvii., a real resurrection from the dead is the symbol of the vision. It would be strange indeed if the thing symbolized was the same as the symbol itself. It is often the case that lesser events are symbolized by greater. But for a resurrection to be used as a symbol of the resurrection; or a judgment to be used as a symbol of the judgment, would not, we think, accord with the general use of symbols. The judgment of the great day is used, perhaps we might say frequently, to denote great calamities or judgments on nations. So, it appears to us, in Ezekiel's vision, the resurrection of the dead is used as a symbol to illustrate the national restoration of Judah and Israel, so fully dwelt upon in the remainder of the chapter, as well as occupying nearly all the preceding one. The whole house, or nation, of Israel were to descend into their graves by being overthrown nationally: so God declares he would open their graves, that is, the graves of both Judah and Israel, and bring them out of their graves, and bring them into the land wherein their fathers had dwelt, and this work he symbolizes by a resurrection of dead men, which are presented to the prophet's mind as "bones exceeding dry." Such was the state of "cast out" Israel and "dispersed" Judah; but hopeless as their case appeared, the Lord assures Ezekiel he will gather them and make them "one nation" upon the "mountains of Israel;" and that he will "settle them after their old estates;" and "multiply" them both "man and beast: and they shall increase and bring fruit." Taking the thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh chapters together, no other construction than the one here contended for, can possibly harmonize them; and this view does make a most perfect harmony, and is not contradicted by a single text of scripture, but is sustained by a multitude.

EXPECTATIONS OF A MESSIAH.

BY REV. V. D. COLLINS.

IT is a great mistake to suppose that only in Judea was the anticipation of a divine being cherished. Buddhism, and Tauism, and Brahminism are all based on the idea of an incarnation of Divinity, wedding humanity to heaven. Plato, after visiting Egypt, and drawing knowledge from all available sources, confessed that he looked for a divine Teacher.

Tacitus, a learned Roman historian, informs us that, throughout the whole East, it was the general expectation, that about the time of the reign of Cæsar Augustus, a king was to appear in Judea, who should rule over the whole world, from the Pillars of Hercules to the Ganges of India.

This was a very natural expectation of the times, and ardently taught by the Jews to the surrounding nations. Wherever they went, they dropped the seeds of this great prophetic truth into the hearts of men. While Jacob and Moses taught it in Egypt, and Daniel in Babylon, it was inculcated by writings, by ceremonies, and by speech, wherever a Jew came in contract with heathen nations. From the time of the Babylonian captivity, some 607 years before Christ, the Jews were scattered eastward throughout all the provinces of the great Persian monarchy, as we learn from the Book of Esther, where, in one place, Haman informs the King, that there was a certain race (referring to the Jews) scattered abroad and dispersed among the people, in all the provinces of his kingdom, governed secretly by different laws from those of his kingdom, neither would they keep the King's laws.

In Persia, the Jews made many converts to the religion of their fathers; and they scattered far and wide the expectation of this root, which should spring forth from Jesse, at Bethlehem, which should be an ensign of the people, and to which the Gentiles should look for truth and salvation.

[illegible] the return of the Jews to the Holy Land, from their captivity, they rapidly increased. Judea being too small as a field of enterprise, or, providentially, by the force of circumstances, many of the Jews emigrated to different parts of Asia, Africa, and Europe;—wherever, in fact, the eagles of Rome flew, and even beyond, the Jews went, and everywhere made converts to the Hebrew Faith—belief in a covenant, invisible God, and a promised Teacher, Saviour, and King.

Agrippa, in an oration to the Jews, delivered before their final dispersion, and, of course, before the destruction of Jerusalem, declared, "There is not a nation upon earth where some of your countrymen are not to be found. If you, who are in Judea, rebel against the authority of Rome, all of your race that reside in other places, will be destroyed, and thus every great city of the world will be filled with blood."

Philo, in one of his orations, declares, "The Jews are dispersed throughout all the world. They dwell in most of the flourishing cities of Asia and Europe,—in the islands of the sea, and on the continents." And even Cicero, in one of his masterly orations in defence of a Jew at Rome, declared, that "the gold which the Jews sent to their temple at Jerusalem, was forwarded from Italy and from all the provinces of the vast Roman Empire." This heathen testimony accords with the account given in the Acts of the Apostles, regarding the representatives of many nations gathered at Jerusalem, on the day of Pentecost. "There were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven, Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers of Mesopotamia, and in Judea and Cappadocia, in Pontus and Asia, Phrygia and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes, Cretes and Arabians."

There never was, in the history of the world, a more generally received anticipation—extending from the banks of the Tiber and the groves of Greece, to the Indian Ganges and the plains of China, than that which awaited the birth of Christ in Judea. There is nothing like it in modern times, except a somewhat similar expectation of Christendom, and of some heathen nations, in regard to the second advent of Christ, and the consequent overthrow of false religions. This modern expectation, like the ancient one, is vague, conflicting, but general, among thoughtful men. During the last ten years such startling political events have transpired, such barriers have been broken down for the advancement of Truth, and such rapid communications opened among the nations, that a large class of minds would not be at all amazed, or even surprised, if Christ should, any day, reappear bodily, on this earth, as the rightful Sovereign and Saviour of mankind.

There is a vague, but universal expectation with the Jews, now scattered among all nations, as they were, to some extent, two thousand years ago, that the Messiah is yet to come on the earth to redeem Israel and to reign as their King.

Their wealth being easily convertible into ready money, the Jews, as a race, could easily and quickly make their way to the Holy Land. This, of course, is but stating the opinion of some; but it is a remarkable fact of the times, that more Jews visited Palestine last year, than during any former year since their loss of the country. As a race without nationality, but Israelites by faith, their hearts ever turned toward the ancient Land and the City of the Great King. For hours have I sat with the Jews at their Wailing Place along the western wall of their ancient temple in Jerusalem, and heard them, with true, tearful sorrow, cry, "How doth the city sit solitary, that was full of people! All that pass by clap their hands at her. They hiss and wag their heads at the daughter of Jerusalem, saying, 'Is this the city that men call the perfection of beauty—the joy of the whole earth?' Wherefore dost thou forget us forever, and forsake so long time? Turn thou us unto thee, O Lord, and we shall be turned; renew our days as of old." Thus, in the language of Jeremiah, do they pray for Jerusalem, and the advent of their Messiah. There is no great fact in history more remarkable than the unbelieving, and yet believing Jew, returning to the Holy City to prove, not only the continuity of race and religion, but to die there, and there to mingle his dust with that of the ancient worthies.—Am. Presbyterian.

THOUGHTS ON PSALM CX.

BY R. CADWELL.

I SEND some thoughts on the time, position, and reign of God's Son, as upheld and appointed of the Father, or the kingdom of God and of Christ.

"The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool." Does this text mean that God the Father will make the foes of his anointed his footstool actually by destruction, while sitting at his right hand? or, till those referred to are doomed to be his footstool by destruction? We think it is in the sense of being doomed to destruction, and that his being anointed, and sitting at God's right hand, is proof prospectively that he is "both Lord and Christ," or the anointed Lord by whom he will subdue all things to himself, and destroy ultimately all his foes. So it is explained in Acts ii., 36, and so saith the apostle, "From henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool." Heb. x., 13. David was anointed king, sometime before administering the government as king over the nation of Israel.

The Holy Spirit has given many practical illustrations of this passage, and many others, some of which we may consider. The apostle says, God hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained. When he shall declare, "the day of vengeance of our God." "For in righteousness he shall judge (or rule), and make war." By the appointment of the Father—in the time his anointed is to "sit on his holy hill Zion." He will then break the heathen with a rod of iron, that he may have them for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. And thus prays the Psalmist: Arise, O God, judge the earth; for thou shalt inherit all nations. The practical meaning of this text may be found illustrated in the Psalm where it occurs. The second verse of Psalm cx. reads—The Lord shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion: rule thou in the midst of thine enemies. But before the rod of my Lord's strength can be sent out of Zion, he must be sent to dwell there, or he would have no enemi[illegible] to rule among, and none, if they were actually made his footstool by destruction while sitting at the right hand of the LORD in heaven as High Priest only. The 5th verse reads, the Lord (or God's anointed), at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath. Where shall this be? Verse 6. He shall judge among the heathen; he shall fill the places with the dead bodies; he shall wound the heads (rulers) over many countries. The "rod" which the Lord will send out of Zion, is probably Messiah's power, he being a rod in God's hand, and also all agencies which he may use, or cause to be used by his Son, on his doomed foes, to destroy them, and to cause others to submit to his law.

Of the branch of Jesse, it is said, With righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth: and he shall smite the earth (or the wicked inhabitants) with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips he shall slay the wicked. Of God, in or by Christ (no doubt it is said in reference to earthly powers, Ps. xlvi., 6). The heathen raged; the kingdoms were moved; he uttered his voice, the earth melted. This is said when God is in the midst of the Holy City. The earth melted. This may be in reference to the heart of the inhabitants, or heathen powers, fainting, or failing them for fear, as in the case of the people of the land of Canaan, at Joshua and his men, who, probably, were a type of what God will be to the kingdoms of the heathen—or Christ's foes. The Psalmist, in view of their destruction, invites all concerned to come, behold what desolations he hath made in the earth; he maketh wars to cease to the end of the earth; he breaketh the bow, he cutteth the spear in sunder; he burneth the chariot in the fire. After this is done, are they all destroyed? No. Be still, and know that I am God; I will be exalted in the earth, I will be exalted among the heathen.

It is quite evident, when the foes of David's Lord are made his footstool, he is represented as being at God's right hand when it is done. And if this is not done while sitting at God's right hand, as he now is—the great High Priest, it will undoubtedly be when God will send his first-begotten again into the world, to receive a kingdom, and to reign: which will be a joint reign and dominion, if I may thus with reverence speak.

But what is far more certain, in my mind, than this, is, the Lord who said to my Lord, is to make them his footstool when they are made such in fact. But that the position of the Son of man when he comes is at God's right hand, seems to be taught by Christ in this passage, Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven. That this coming would be by the will, and attended by the revelation of the glory and power of the Father, seems to be quite manifest, and is still made more clear by additional statements, such as—The Son of man shall come in his glory, and the Father's; and of the apostle, in Titus ii., 13: The glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ.

Here are a few texts following, as proof or pledge of the position of God's Son, and what he is or will be while all things are being of God, put under him in subjection. Rom. i., 4; Eph. i., 20–23; 1 Cor. xv., 27. Of him who was to be a priest forever after the order of Melchizedec, it is said, in Zech. vi., 13, He shall sit and rule upon his throne, and shall be a priest upon his throne.

It would be well if this verse were written in the creeds of many, as a stumbling stone, where it may be seen, and it may be equally dangerous to keep it out of sight and hearing, as too many do. Having noticed all the verses but one, we will give the third a little attention. This verse, also, refers to Christ's glorious reign in Mount Zion. Who are the people who shall be willing? We think, "thy people," to be willing, are the descendants of Jacob, now in blindness and unbelief, who will "turn from transgression in Jacob" when "the Redeemer comes to Zion." Of the redeemed saints it cannot be said, they "shall be willing," for they have been willing in order to reign with Christ, and be glorified together, in the day of Christ's power. Thus saith the apostle, The Lord himself shall descend . . . then we who are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air. They that are Christ's at his coming. Then the end . . . when he shall put down all rule, etc. Are not these saints the same as are indicated by, Thou hast the dew of thy youth? The dew of Christ's youth, and the day of his power, present two distinct conditions. And the church hath made herself ready, and become subject to Christ: sanctified, and without spot or wrinkle. I fear that those who have to do with the gospel now, will not be willing in the day of Christ's power, who do not obey it now, and yet believe it to be the gospel of God. And a people "prepared, and made ready for the Lord," are very different from those who shall be willing in the day of Christ's power.

THE SIEGE OF JERICHO.

"Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them." Isa. xlii., 9.

ISRAEL'S wanderings were ended. Moses, long their leader, prophet and law-giver, was dead: and the days of his mourning were over. And, pitched on the plains of Moab, stood their weather-bleached tents, whitening a land of aliens to Israel's God; who little thought of the future greatness of the strangers then resting on their soil. But the full time had arrived. The predicted moment revealed to Abraham had come, when the reproach of Egypt should be rolled from off his seed, and it should inherit the land.

Their days of toil and bondage are over. They have fought the good fight, finished their course, and kept the faith; and celestial joys await them. They linger but for a moment, tented on this side the swelling flood. The ark of the covenant moves forward. The waves of Jordan feel the influence Divine, and, rolling back on themselves, leave a channel dry, and Israel passes through. The waves close behind them. Their weary feet press the hallowed ground, and the rest, in prototype is gained.

Hail, happy land: promise Divine to all the good: Celestial Eden, and garden of God; the planting of his own right hand. And thou, Zion, the choice of his rest and throne of his eternal Empire. Land which the martyrs sighed to see; and for which they suffered persecution, sword and flame.

Open thy portals wide and receive these thy new comers, rightful heirs to thee by promise made of God to Abraham and his seed. Lo, they come, and the Lord their God is with them, mighty to save and terrible as an army with banners. He smote the first-born of Egypt, overthrew Pharaoh and his host, the horse and the rider. He smote the Red Sea in twain and shook Sinai with his thunder.

He is the God of all lands, and thou Palestina art the pride of his choice; and Israel, his inheritance, hath he made to possess thee forever. And now for the first time in four hundred years hath He made thy holy hills to re-echo the sound of sacred song.

He has made heaven to distil nocturnal dews, and gentle showers to impregn the earth with corn and wine. He hath filled the vales with amaranthine bowers and crowned the hills with ambrosial fruits.

And when He shall come, whose better right it is to reign, and shall raise his worthies up from under ground, and, more than Joshua like, lead them into this sacred land of rest; then shall his soft hand wipe all tears from off all faces, and there will be no more pain, no more death and no more curse. Eden will be restored and Paradise regained: the kingdom of God will have come, and his will will be done on earth as in heaven.

A thrill of universal joy ran through the camp of Israel as they reached this long, long desired land. Two hundred and fifteen years of hard toil and bondage under the galling yoke of proud oppressors had they hung on the promise made of God unto the fathers; like a ship at sea tossed by the waves and beaten by the tempest, casting her anchor and holding on, [illegible]strides the storm and enters the port.

So Israel, holding on to the promise, outrode the storm and stood on Jordan's bank. They were in a land made dear to them by the fond reminiscences of the fathers, the youthful days of Joseph, and which was to be the future scene of their own display of power. A land in which great deeds were to be achieved; battles fought, fields won, and cities taken.

Jericho lies before, the first in their way and the first to feel the power of Israel's God, She saw from her embattled walls the tents of Jacob stretching over the plains of Jordan. They had heard what had been done to Sihon and to Og, kings of the Amorites, and through fear had shut themselves up in their city to await the siege.

Well might they have laughed at the novel mode of attack. Instead of ponderous engines of war and battering-rams, they beheld a silent procession of priest and soldiers, bearing what appeared to them a chest, and blowing ram's-horn trumpets, which apparently had no other effect than to break the silence of the besiegers.

This must have excited their mirth as they beheld so novel a spectacle from day to day, six days in succession. But on the seventh day their mirth was turned into the dread horrors of death itself. Their strong walls fell and their city was taken and they were slain.

These are the things which have come to pass; and the new things declared are—Christ is the Lamb of God, and was foreshadowed in the ordinances of the law by a male lamb, without spot or blemish. By him the victories of his people are won. A horn is prophetically an emblem of power. The horn of the lamb is therefore, the power of the Lamb of God. The Lamb is also the Word of God. Rev. xix., 13; John i., 1. The sound of the ram's horn, therefore, foreshadowed the Word of God.

This Word is sounded in the ears of the wicked six days, foreshadowing six thousand years; during which they will make as light of it as did their brethren, the Jerichoites, thinking their own human walls are a sufficient defence. But the seventh and last trumpet will sound a long and loud blast on on the seventh day, which is the great day of the Lord, when the cities and kingdoms of the wicked will fall into the hands of the Lord and of his people: and, like Jericho, they will be destroyed. For thus it is written—"And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." Rev. xi., 15.

The siege and destruction of Jericho is a splendid mirror in which the wicked may see their own miserable end. The Word of God is still sounding around their walls, giving them timely warning of their future and sudden destruction; but they heed it not; but are vainly trusting in the strength of their own walls. But the seventh trumpet, of the seventh day, will soon sound, and no human power can resist it. The walls of the wicked will tumble down, and their dead bodies will lie on the ground from one end of the earth to the other, unlamented and unburied.

LONG WAITING REWARDED.

FAITH is rarely more severely tried than in the case of parents who are waiting upon the Lord from year to year, and wa[illegible] for the answer of prayers in the salvation of their children. There is, no doubt, much that sounds like prayer, on this and on other matters, which is only a sound—or at most the breathing of natural affection. Even where they "ask in prayer, believing," there may often be long delays; during which it may be their sad lot to look on while the child of many prayers grows apparently hardened in sin and reckless in ungodliness. There may, it is humbling to think, have been errors in training or inconsistencies in the life even of praying parents, of which such a course is the legitimate result. Few sorrows can be keener than that which accompanies the consciousness of this; and what wonder that such parents should not be permitted to witness the fufilment of their prayers. "It is not necessary that I should be here to keep watch over God's faithfulness," said a dying saint with reference to some such prayers which were still unanswered. Doubtless when all secrets are revealed, it will be found that there are no unanswered prayers, though it will at the same time be found that much that passed for prayer was unreal.

The facts we are about to record upon the authority of one well-acquainted with the parties may be encouraging to some who are waiting in sorrow. A Christian father and mother, who were no strangers to the power of prayer, had long borne their son upon their hearts before the Lord. From a wayward boy he grew up to be a profane and profligate young man; and in addition to all their sorrows, it was their grief to know that he was pointed at by the ungodly as a proof of the uselessness of religious training and of the worthlessness of prayer. The restraints of his father's house, little as he seemed to heed them, soon became intolerable; and he departed, no one knew whither. His parents subsequently learned that, after a brief career of profligacy, he had sought refuge on board a ship as a common sailor.

During his first voyage, while he stood on the bulwarks of the ship uttering wanton blasphemies, he lost his footing and fell overboard. Though every effort was made to rescue him, as the vessel was under considerable headway and the sea ran high, there was some delay before he could be reached by the boat, and he was taken out of the water apparently lifeless. Under some impulse the surgeon of the ship persevered in the use of means to restore animation after the captain and every one on board pronounced it mere folly. His efforts were at last rewarded by some signs of life. The feeble spark was carefully cherished, and at length the young man opened his eyes, and with a faint expression of joy struggling through the feebleness and pain of such an awaking exclaimed, "Jesus Christ has saved my soul!"

A long time elapsed before he recovered sufficiently to give a connected account of his feelings while in the water. When he did, he said that, on his fall, his mind seemed at once opened to a discovery of the wickedness of his life and his awful guilt in the sight of God. He had no hope of being rescued, and for a time—it seemed an age—he contemplated his hopeless guilt and the wrath of God that seemed to await him. All at once the remembrance of his father's oft-repeated testimony, "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners; of whom

I am chief," flashed upon his mind. In the presence of all his black guilt, Jesus Christ the Son of God was revealed to him as an all-sufficient Saviour, whose blood cleanseth us from all sin. His soul rested there. He knew that he was saved; a sweet calm succeeded his anguish, and then he sank into unconsciousness.

His after-life proved that this was no passing delusion. He was soon received back joyfully to the home where he had caused so much grief. He is now, or was very recently, a faithful and honored preacher of that Gospel of whose divine power he was a signal example.—Selected

"Theology of the Bible."

The above excellent work by Judge Halsted is still called for; but some overlook our directions. No one should send to us for it; such a course subjects us to expense and trouble wholly unnecessary. Any subscriber of the Herald of Life can procure the work by enclosing two dollars to the author of it, addressed as follows: "Hon. O. S. Halsted, Box 91, Newark, N. J." Be particular to follow this direction, and give him your own name and Post-office, written plainly. Do not think he can guess either, as we are sometimes obliged to do. State in your letter that you are a subscriber of this paper. This is important; for the price of the work is three dollars, but the Judge has generously offered it for two dollars, free of postage, to any of our subscribers. You thus get a premium for being a patron of our paper.

"Devil, Satan, and Demons."

The Tract on this subject will be issued in a few days. The price we cannot state definitely this week; probably, about five cents per copy. Let us hear from all who wish for them, immediately, and let the amounts pledged be sent, as all is needed to pay the bills.

It is said the devil likes concealment. Perhaps this tract may draw him out from his hiding place and expose him; at least, his lying character and high professions of greatness. His worshippers may cry out, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians;" but fear not, the truth must be told.

From George Bangs.

Danville, P. Q., Canada, Mar. 14, 1869.

Br. Storrs: I think it is but just that I should say to you and the readers of the Herald of Life that I feel I have been particularly benefitted by reading the publications obtained from your office on the subject of Life only to the righteous. I had long been established in mind with regard to the unconscious state of the dead and the destruction of the wicked, but had believed there would be a resurrection both of the just and the unjust; that the just were raised incorruptible, and the unjust mortal, capable of degrees of suffering. But both classes were raised to receive their award at the sound of the last trump.

But in the early part of 1867, by reading a certain scripture in Matth. xi., 20–24, the question arose in my mind, When and how were the judgments executed upon those cities of the Plain? And upon those of Palestine? The answer was: Upon the one the destruction was sudden and quick, but the other protracted and severe in suffering. And again: If God sentenced a people, and executed the judgment upon them in a special manner, would he judge and punish them the second time? And in answer I was forced to say, No.

This led me to question the resurrection of the wicked dead to kill them the second time. I was searching the Scriptures on this point, when I received the pamphlets from the then unknown friend, who proves to have been Sr. M. M. Weaver, to whom I return my grateful thanks. With those I received the tract, The Living Soul, with which I am well pleased. By the help of those publications, with a prayerful study of the Scriptures, I am convinced that the wicked dead will not live again. They will sleep a perpetual sleep; they never will be raised up to life. They have received the full penalty of the law, which is death. O, how dreadful the thought! Eternally dead. But the text, John v., 28, 29, seems to be a difficult one to harmonize with this view as it stands in our version: but I cannot think the Lord would contradict Moses and the prophets in positive terms on so great a question, and am led to think there may be a more perfect rendering of this passage. Yet I confess I have no knowledge of the Greek language, but must conclude that the Lord must always be in harmony with the prophets, and the prophets in harmony with the Lord. As there are so many positive declarations, by so many prophets, and all agreeing on this point, that the wicked shall not rise. It seems to me that this rendering makes the Lord to say, here, contrary to the prophets, and contrary to his own teaching elsewhere, as in John xi., 25: "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." 1 Cor. xv., 52. "The dead shall be raised incorruptible." Luke xx., 36. "Neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God; being the children of the resurrection."

I feel heartily to subscribe to God's revealed plan of redemption as given by the pen of inspiration, and give God the glory. This reveals his attribute of mercy as well as his attribute of justice. Yours, in love of the truth,

NEW YORK, MARCH 24, 1869.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

The Herald of Life.

This number completes half the present volume. We have continued to send the paper to a few who have paid nothing for it, supposing the "hard times" was the only reason why they had failed to remit the subscription price. We are inclined to wait still, but those persons must not think strange now if the paper should cease to visit them. We hope better things of them though we thus speak. We have had quite an accession to our list of new subscribers since the commencement of the present volume, and still they come. Will our patrons see what further can be done in this direction? We will still furnish five or six back numbers and the remaining twenty-four for one dollar.

The scattering of the "Campaign Documents" has brought us in new subscribers, who have themselves sent for the paper. This is encouraging. Now is the best time to see what further can be done for the remainder of this volume. We trust it will be improved.

The Campaign Documents.

Our friends will see that these Documents now number eight; a set of which can be sent to one address for twenty-four cents, including postage. Many have been sent off on this plan. Let that work still go on. For general circulation, in your neighborhood, you may wish a selection from the list. If so, when you send the order, name which number or numbers you desire, so that we can know what is wanted.

The Six Sermons (cheap edition) are not in the regular list of Campaign Documents, and will not be sent unless specially named in your order. When thus named, and sent with the others, they will be put at sixteen cents, including postage; or at fourteen cents, when taken at the office or sent by express.

These Sermons when sent to Great Britain must have six cents postage pre-paid. We mention this because some one has mailed a copy which has been returned to us—not forwarded, and marked, "Short paid four cents." Who mailed it we know not; but it cost us six cents and our trouble to correct the error.

Sects and Denominations.

Adventists.—At a recent conference of Adventists, at Springfield, Mass., a resolution was adopted, by an almost unanimous vote, discountenancing the preaching of distinctive doctrines representing the exact date of the end of all things. A similar resolution was adopted by their last Social Conference in Michigan. These facts indicate not so much an accession of wisdom through experience, as a change in denominational platform. The sect is now more concerned about preaching the annihilation of the wicked than about announcing the approaching end of the world.—Am. Presb.

The above, in substance, has been going the rounds, from Maine to California, both in the religious and secular papers. As to "the sect" and its "denominational platform," if they have one, we profess to have no connection with any sect or denominational platforms. We are opposed, from principle, to all the Conferences or other organizations, which undertake to tell us what we may or may not preach. Such efforts may all be classed with what Martin Luther called "Roman dunghill decretals:" they are human inventions, invented, it may be, by well-meaning men, but as much out of place as the act of Uzzah in putting "forth his hand to hold the ark; for the oxen stumbled," 1 Chron. xiii. He paid for his well intended interference with his life. There may be "stumbling" bearers of truth, but each one is responsible to God alone for the faith he holds, and any interference, whether by creeds, conference resolutions, or other human inventions, is an usurpation that no Christian man has any right to allow to be imposed on him.

As to the statement in regard to "Adventists, at Springfield," we can only say, we regret that they should set an example of any such proceedings as the passage of resolutions in any form. If Christians wish to meet in conference for mutual edification and comfort, we have not a word to say against it; but the passing of resolutions touching the faith and labors of Christ's servants, we protest against, as a most dangerous usurpation, not be tolerated, and as directly tending to enslave the free minds of God's people, and to prevent a growth in the knowledge of the truth. Suppose some do promulgate error; let it be met by a presentation of truth, and not by the "dunghill decretals" of fallible men.

As to "preaching annihilation," that is not our calling. The leading theme we labor to promulgate is, "Life future and eternal, for any of the family of Adam, is only in and through our Lord Jesus Christ." This we call, "The Life Views," and those who embrace these views we call, "Life Believers," or, "Believers in Life in Christ alone." All who reject Christ, to whom He is preached, are excluded from a future life—they "shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him," John iii., 36. Such "shall remain in the congregation of the dead." Prov. xxi., 16.

We have made these remarks that our friends and foes may understand our position. We intend to "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free," nor will we, the Lord being our helper, "be entangled again with the yoke of bondage;" no, not by any organization of human invention. If others choose to be slaves to any sect, they must take the risk, but they need not ask us to share in their fortunes.

As to preaching "the exact date of the end of all things," we have no lot or part in such work; but neither have we in passing resolutions against those who do.

"Ages to Come."

If we speak of "The Age to Come," some persons appear to think we have coined a new phrase, and wonder we cannot keep to scriptural expressions. We think such people are much too sensitive. If the expression "ages to come" is a scriptural one, it certainly cannot be unscriptural to speak of one of those ages in particular; for if there are ages to come, there must be one that is nearer than the others, and that one is "the age to come." The apostle Paul tells us of some things that were "hid from ages and from generations, but are now made manifest." So there have been ages in the past: see Col. i., 26. He speaks also of "eternal life which God promised before the world [pro chronon aionion—before the ages] began." Tit. i., 2. Again he says, God has "made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, that in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus." Eph. ii., 6, 7. Once more he saith, "Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end;" or, as McKnight translates it, "throughout the endless succession of ages." Eph. iii., 21.

In all this there is surely good and Scriptural ground for speaking of "the age to come," and the language of the apostle wakes up our thoughts to speak of "the ages." In the sense in which Paul uses this term, we understand periods of time in which some peculiar work was done, or manifestation was made.

The history of this world has been divided into periods, or ages, each of which has had its peculiarities and epoch. They have had a marked beginning and termination. We design to notice, in the first place, briefly, the ages past.

1. The Adamic Age.—This was from the creation to the fall. The length of this age we have no means of ascertaining. That it occupied some little space of time is clear. We are not to suppose that Adam fell the first day of his creation; there must have been some time for all the developments to be made that are there recorded. Some have supposed that sixteen years elapsed; but though that seems little time enough, yet it is wholly conjectural. Whether little or much time is taken up in that period, it was an age, and the age of the trial of our first parents, and their expulsion from the Garden of Eden.

2. The Antediluvian Age.—This commenced with the expulsion from Eden. It was an age which resulted in a total apostasy from God, except one family. This age covered a period variously estimated from fifteen hundred to two thousand years. God, during all this period, was striving with men by his Spirit, which they resisted, hardening themselves in wickedness, till wrath came upon them and swept them all away with a flood: there that age terminated.

3. From Noah to Abraham may be denominated the third age. This was marked with its peculiarities. It commenced with Noah's advent from the Ark, and, like the previous age, was marked in its progress with almost a total apostasy of Noah's posterity. God had said, however, that he would no more "smite everything living as he had done." Another method was now to be tried to keep alive a seed in the earth that should acknowledge and worship the true and living God; and Abraham was called to go out from his countrymen and kindred to a strange land, and he went out at God's command, not knowing whither he went. This brings us to the

4. Patriarchal Age.—The commencement of this age was marked by the call and departure of Abraham from Chaldea to go into Canaan, and is filled up with the most interesting incidents, viz., the covenants with Abraham—the birth and offering up of Isaac—the birth of Jacob, with the many and thrilling scenes recorded of these patriarchs in the history of their lives and death, the multiplication of their posterity and their ultimate bondage in Egypt. Great and glorious developments were made during this age, which serve as a key to unlock all the succeeding ones to the present time and coming age. This age is marked in its termination by the advent of Abraham's posterity, through Jacob, from their bondage from Egypt and settlement in Palestine, and covered a period of five hundred years or more.

5. The Mosaic Age.—This commenced with the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt, and embraces all the interesting events recorded in the Old Testament, relative to that people and the surrounding nations, pointing forward to "ages to come," both of humiliation and glory to that people and their Messiah. That age continued till the first advent of Messiah, and the overthrow of the Jewish or Mosaic polity at the destruction of Jerusalem, and was filled up with most interesting developments, or manifestations of God's truth, power and faithfulness.

6. The Gospel Age.—The ministration of the Spirit and calling of the Gentiles. This commenced with the personal ministry of Messiah—was more fully opened on the day of Pentecost, but not perfectly developed till Paul became the minister to the Gentiles. It has been an age, emphatically, of contest between the flesh and the Spirit; or between the animal propensities of men and the Spirit working in the mind, or in the affections. In this age many have been sealed by the Spirit, and have overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil, but the vast majority of men, as in the previous ages, have walked after their own lusts, and refused the cross of Christ. The love of the praise of men, the thirst for wealth, fame, power, or sensual enjoyment, has carried captive the largest part of men and drowned them in perdition; and all well-grounded hope of this world, or its inhabitants, ever being recovered from the dominion of evil by the efforts of men in the flesh, i. e., by corruptible and dying men, whatever stations they may occupy, is vain. All such efforts have proved a failure; and unless a new age or dispensation is opened, the world fails of being regenerated, evil is triumphant, and prophecy fails. So we understand the matter. But we have no doubt another age is to succeed this, or, that there is an "age to come," in which God's great purpose in creating the world and testing men under such a variety of dispensations, or ages, shall be fully developed, and Messiah's personal reign and glory, with his people who bore the cross in previous ages, shall demonstrate that there is a power that can control men and cause them to be subject to God, to the everlasting confusion and discomfiture of evil. The present age, then, will end or terminate with the return of Messiah to this earth to take the throne of David, to reign and execute judgment and justice in the earth. This brings us to the

7. Age of Messiah's Personal Reign.—Its commencement is the seventh great epoch in this world's history, and is "the age to come," being still future, though we are so near to it that its light dawns upon us, and the watchful will not fail to see its approach.

This age opens with the termination of the times of the Gentiles treading under foot Jerusalem—the overthrow of the present earthly monarchies—the return of God's favor to Palestine and Jerusalem—the gathering of the outcasts of Israel—the personal advent of Messiah as King of kings and Lord of lords—the assumption by him of the throne of Israel, or David's throne, and his dominion over the earth, together with the resurrection and immortalization of all them that are his, who have suffered with him or for his words in any of the previous ages.

It embraces, in its progress, the destruction of all incorrigible enemies, and the subjugation of all nations to him and his government. How long this age will continue we do not pretend to know, but it doubtless has a limit. At that point we are brought to the borders of another age, which is a perfect one, when compared with any of the preceding, but is only one in a chain, or "endless succession of ages;" each of which, doubtless, will exceed the one going before it in glory and glorious developments, thus opening to the view an endless prospect of inexhaustible enjoyment, and making the hope of eternal life a hope full of glory, and needing no endless torments to make it more blissful. All the wicked will have passed away and perished forever, and all surviving creatures in heaven, in earth, and in all God's dominions, will be filled with joy and unending delight.

Such we conceive to be the true Scripture doctrine, but we have not time or space now to go more largely into the subject.

"Wisdom Shall Die with You."

These words came forcibly to mind in reading an article in "The World's Crisis" last week, to which our attention was called by its Editor, saying, "Do not fail to read with care the article headed, 'Calamity, or Penalty!'" Without this call we should not probably have read it. After reading we saw nothing new or striking in it except its introductory assumption and its "conclusion." Here they are:

> The divine law which the wicked are under requires their life to pay its penalty; nothing else will suffice; and as they have already lost that by calamity, through Adam, being dead in him, they cannot pay the penalty unless they are raised from the dead, and thus furnished with life for that purpose.
> We thus feel impelled to the conclusion that the Adamic death is a calamity to his posterity; and as all lose life in him, the wicked must have a resurrection from the dead, in order to pay the penalty for their service to sin, or it remains forever unpaid.

The filling up corresponds with the wisdom of these two paragraphs. We marvel that men of sense and reason can blind their own minds or the minds of others with such unsound positions. They assume that dying is the wages of sin. No such statement is made in the Bible, in relation to Adam's posterity. It is death. Death is a state—it is the entire absence of any life principle. Such is death to all impenitent sinners. In death they have no surviving or revival principle, because connected with none before they died: hence, they are "holden with the cords of their sins"—they "shall remain in the congregation of the dead." Prov. v., 22, and xxi., 16. "The sting of death [its killing power—its power to hold its victim] is sin! and the strength of [or power of] sin is the law." 1 Corth. xv., 56.

The "Crisis" writer very gravely tells us the law requires the life of the wicked; and "as they have already lost that by calamity," "they are raised from the dead, and thus furnished with life for that purpose." Is not this wisdom? Look at it: A man owes you a thousand dollars; by calamity he is unable to pay it; so you give him another thousand dollars with which to pay what he owes you! Is your debt any more paid than if, when he had nothing to pay, you had frankly forgiven him the debt by not exacting it?

And then, the idea that God inflicts the "calamity" of loss of life upon the sinner, so that he "cannot pay the penalty, unless he is raised from the dead," and thus lays Himself under obligation to give the sinner another life to enable him "to pay the penalty." That must be a wise "plan" of administration, that obliges the Law-maker to furnish the means to pay the law's claim.

But all this "confusion worse confounded" arises from this writer, and those of the same school, confounding things which are clearly distinct. We have said, death is a state. A man may enter into that state with no surviving or reviving principle in him: then death is necessarily eternal, or death holds eternal dominion over such. Under the dispensation of grace, or the free gift of God in Jesus Christ, a redeeming principle is provided, so that "though a man die he may live again." That redeeming principle is the Divine life, or the Spirit of God given to us in Jesus Christ the Life-giver. Union with Him secures that life principle to believers, so that they "sleep in Jesus," or go down into the grave with the same life principle that brought up Christ from the dead, and will as surely bring up Christ's body—the church, as it brought up its Head. The sting of death was taken away, and the law had no power over the divine life principle. Not so with the sinner: he is held in the bondage of death—thus has to pay and does pay the penalty and the law's claim.

So far as loss of life is concerned, it is a loss by failing to secure "the gift of God, eternal life, through Jesus Christ." Rom. vi., 23. The word of God neither promises nor threatens any other future life, or life after death. "It is appointed unto men once to die," no more. This animal or Adamic life once extinct, and corruption set in, is never restored; it is a final and eternal extinction. But "unto them that look for him (Christ) shall He appear the second time without sin for their life."—Syriac, Heb. ix., 27, 28. Christ is the life of the believer, and "When Christ our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. iii., 4. Till then our "life is hid with Christ in God." Col. iii., 3. This life secures the resurrection of all in Christ, or who are made "partakers of the Divine nature." 2 Pet. i., 4. This life the wicked have not, and hence lose resurrection life, or come short of it, and "utterly perish in their own corruption." 2 Pet. ii., 12. They "shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on them." John iii., 36.

To assume, as the 'Crisis" writer has done, that the taking away of life is the penalty, and thus obliging God to give them back the life they lost by "calamity" so that He can take it away again, represents the Creator in a light which is far from "hallowing His name;" it presents Him, of His own free will, appointing the calamity, which deprives the sinner of the means of paying the debt, and the making him alive again to give the sinner the means to do it by going back into the state where the calamity landed him. If such a theory is not a reproach to wisdom, justice, truth, mercy, love and every other perfection that goes to make up a being worthy of adoration and love, then we might add to it eternal torture with propriety; for all the characteristics of such torture are embryotically embraced in the theory.

From D. S. Metcalf.

Meredith Village, N. H., March 15, 1869.

Geo. Storrs—Dear Sir: I have for a long time been a constant reader of your publications, having subscribed for the "Bible Examiner," soon after its first issue. At that time I was in full fellowship with the Congregational Church, in which faith I was born and bred, and never doubted that its tenets were Scriptural until, as a consequence of reading the "Bible Examiner," I was induced to "search the Scriptures to see if these things were so." After years of study, I have become thoroughly convinced that man is by nature mortal; that the first Adam was of the earth earthy, and had no immortality to transmit to his posterity; so that if man ever becomes immortal it must be by a union with the second Adam, who brought life and immortality to light. Failing in this, he must "utterly perish in his own corruption."

With most of the doctrinal views set forth by you in the Herald of Life I heartily agree; but upon one point I want more light. As I have never troubled you with questions of any sort, perhaps I may be permitted to ask your solution of the difficulty under which my mind labors. It is simply in regard to temptation. I understand you to ignore the personality of Satan, and teach that there is a spirit of evil in the heart that leads us astray, as the apostle James seems to teach, when he says, that "a man is tempted when he is drawn away by his own lusts and enticed."

Now the question is, Who tempted our Saviour? Taking the ground of no personal devil, and as it is not to be supposed He had any lust, or spirit of evil, in his heart to draw him away, from whence came the temptation?

I ask this question candidly and honestly, with a desire to know the truth as it is revealed in the Scriptures. Should you be pleased to give your views upon this point, in the Herald of Life, it will gratify and I hope benefit at least one. Thanking you for the light you have shed on the sacred page and the blessed truths I have been enabled to embrace through your instrumentality, I am, dear sir, very truly and respectfully, yours.

Response by the Editor.

We shall not give a protracted answer to our friend now, as our tract on the subject will soon be issued, which we trust will give him and others all the information, on our Lord's temptation, desired.

It should be distinctly kept in mind that the term lust is not of itself indicative of a "spirit of evil," nor is it evil in itself. Its first sense imports no more than desire; but when it becomes uncontrollable, or disregards the restraints God has laid upon it, then, and not till then, it becomes a "spirit of evil." Temptation may arise from any desirable object; that is, even a lawful object. For instance: It is right for a man to acquire a home for himself and family. To seek such, there may be two ways: one lawful, the other unlawful. By patient industry he can honestly secure the home. Instead of that, if he suffers his desire (or lust) to lead him to cheat, lie to and defraud his fellow men, so as to obtain the amount necessary, in a less time than he could secure it in a lawful way, he has given way to temptation and is led into sin.

The desire for a home was not wrong, or a spirit of evil; but the pursuit of the object in an unlawful manner would have been.

Jesus had the promise, from his Father, of the throne of David, and that His dominion should be from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth. As the Son of man, and the seed of David, he had all the natural desires incident to humanity. His Father's method, or way, for Jesus to take possession of this kingdom was through suffering and death. This way was His trial or temptation. A desire to avoid suffering and death was inseparable from his manhood, and was no sin or spirit of evil. He could not help desiring, "if it be possible," that the "cup" of suffering and death might be avoided. By His miracle-working power, He could have so overawed all men as to have taken "all the kingdoms of the world" and escaped the terrible trial of suffering and shame to which He was likely to be subjected, He could not but see what lay before Him—it was all presented to His mind. Shall He follow the natural desire, and take possession of the kingdoms of the world at once, and go forth in triumph and glory? or shall He subject His natural desire to the will of God? He chose the latter, and thus put temptation to flight: His will overcame all by a perfect acquiescence in that of his Father, and thus the temptation, or spirit of evil, found no place in Him: He remained pure. So it was in every other

I am chief," flashed upon his mind. In the presence of all his black guilt, Jesus Christ the Son of God was revealed to him as an all-sufficient Saviour, whose blood cleanseth us from all sin. His soul rested there. He knew that he was saved; a sweet calm succeeded his anguish, and then he sank into unconsciousness.

His after-life proved that this was no passing delusion. He was soon received back joyfully to the home where he had caused so much grief. He is now, or was very recently, a faithful and honored preacher of that Gospel of whose divine power he was a signal example.—Selected.

"Theology of the Bible."

The above excellent work by Judge Halsted is still called for; but some overlook our directions. No one should send to us for it; such a course subjects us to expense and trouble wholly unnecessary. Any subscriber of the Herald of Life can procure the work by enclosing two dollars to the author of it, addressed as follows: "Hon. O. S. Halsted, Box 91, Newark, N. J." Be particular to follow this direction, and give him your own name and Post-office, written plainly. Do not think he can guess either, as we are sometimes obliged to do. State in your letter that you are a subscriber of this paper. This is important; for the price of the work is three dollars, but the Judge has generously offered it for two dollars, free of postage, to any of our subscribers. You thus get a premium for being a patron of our paper.

"Devil, Satan, and Demons."

The Tract on this subject will be issued in a few days. The price we cannot state definitely this week; probably, about five cents per copy. Let us hear from all who wish for them, immediately, and let the amounts pledged be sent, as all is needed to pay the bills.

It is said the devil likes concealment. Perhaps this tract may draw him out from his hiding place and expose him; at least, his lying character and high professions of greatness. His worshippers may cry out, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians;" but fear not, the truth must be told.

From George Bangs.

Danville, P. Q., Canada, Mar. 14, 1869.

Br. Storrs: I think it is but just that I should say to you and the readers of the Herald of Life that I feel I have been particularly benefitted by reading the publications obtained from your office on the subject of Life only to the righteous. I had long been established in mind with regard to the unconscious state of the dead and the destruction of the wicked, but had believed there would be a resurrection both of the just and the unjust; that the just were raised incorruptible, and the unjust mortal, capable of degrees of suffering. But both classes were raised to receive their award at the sound of the last trump.

But in the early part of 1867, by reading a certain scripture in Matth. xi., 20–24, the question arose in my mind, When and how were the judgments executed upon those cities of the Plain? And upon those of Palestine? The answer was: Upon the one the destruction was sudden and quick, but the other protracted and severe in suffering. And again: If God sentenced a people, and executed the judgment upon them in a special manner, would he judge and punish them the second time? And in answer I was forced to say, No.

This led me to question the resurrection of the wicked dead to kill them the second time. I was searching the Scriptures on this point, when I received the pamphlets from the then unknown friend, who proves to have been Sr. M. M. Weaver, to whom I return my grateful thanks. With those I received the tract, The Living Soul, with which I am well pleased. By the help of those publications, with a prayerful study of the Scriptures, I am convinced that the wicked dead will not live again. They will sleep a perpetual sleep; they never will be raised up to life. They have received the full penalty of the law, which is death. O, how dreadful the thought! Eternally dead. But the text, John v., 28, 29, seems to be a difficult one to harmonize with this view as it stands in our version: but I cannot think the Lord would contradict Moses and the prophets in positive terms on so great a question, and am led to think there may be a more perfect rendering of this passage. Yet I confess I have no knowledge of the Greek language, but must conclude that the Lord must always be in harmony with the prophets, and the prophets in harmony with the Lord. As there are so many positive declarations, by so many prophets, and all agreeing on this point, that the wicked shall not rise. It seems to me that this rendering makes the Lord to say, here, contrary to the prophets, and contrary to his own teaching elsewhere, as in John xi., 25: "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." 1 Cor. xv., 52. "The dead shall be raised incorruptible." Luke xx., 36. "Neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

I feel heartily to subscribe to God's revealed plan of redemption as given by the pen of inspiration, and give God the glory. This reveals his attribute of mercy as well as his attribute of justice. Yours, in love of the truth.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MARCH 24, 1869.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

The Herald of Life.

This number completes half the present volume. We have continued to send the paper to a few who have paid nothing for it, supposing the "hard times" was the only reason why they had failed to remit the subscription price. We are inclined to wait still, but those persons must not think strange now if the paper should cease to visit them. We hope better things of them though we thus speak. We have had quite an accession to our list of new subscribers since the commencement of the present volume, and still they come. Will our patrons see what further can be done in this direction? We will still furnish five or six back numbers and the remaining twenty-four for one dollar.

The scattering of the "Campaign Documents" has brought us in new subscribers, who have themselves sent for the paper. This is encouraging. Now is the best time to see what further can be done for the remainder of this volume. We trust it will be improved.

The Campaign Documents.

Our friends will see that these Documents now number eight; a set of which can be sent to one address for twenty-four cents, including postage. Many have been sent off on this plan. Let that work still go on. For general circulation, in your neighborhood, you may wish a selection from the list. If so, when you send the order, name which number or numbers you desire, so that we can know what is wanted.

The Six Sermons (cheap edition) are not in the regular list of Campaign Documents, and will not be sent unless specially named in your order. When thus named, and sent with the others, they will be put at sixteen cents, including postage; or at fourteen cents, when taken at the office or sent by express.

These Sermons when sent to Great Britain must have six cents postage pre-paid. We mention this because some one has mailed a copy which has been returned to us—not forwarded, and marked, "Short paid four cents." Who mailed it we know not; but it cost us six cents and our trouble to correct the error.

Sects and Denominations.

Adventists.—At a recent conference of Adventists, at Springfield, Mass., a resolution was adopted, by an almost unanimous vote, discountenancing the preaching of distinctive doctrines representing the exact date of the end of all things. A similar resolution was adopted by their last Social Conference in Michigan. These facts indicate not so much an accession of wisdom through experience, as a change in denominational platform. The sect is now more concerned about preaching the annihilation of the wicked than about announcing the approaching end of the world.—Am. Presb.

The above, in substance, has been going the rounds, from Maine to California, both in the religious and secular papers. As to "the sect" and its "denominational platform," if they have one, we profess to have no connection with any sect or denominational platforms. We are opposed, from principle, to all the Conferences or other organizations, which undertake to tell us what we may or may not preach. Such efforts may all be classed with what Martin Luther called "Roman dunghill decretals:" they are human inventions, invented, it may be, by well-meaning men, but as much out of place as the act of Uzzah in putting "forth his hand to hold the ark; for the oxen stumbled," 1 Chron. xiii. He paid for his well intended interference with his life. There may be "stumbling" bearers of truth, but each one is responsible to God alone for the faith he holds, and any interference, whether by creeds, conference resolutions, or other human inventions, is an usurpation that no Christian man has any right to allow to be imposed on him.

As to the statement in regard to "Adventists, at Springfield," we can only say, we regret that they should set an example of any such proceedings as the passage of resolutions in any form. If Christians wish to meet in conference for mutual edification and comfort, we have not a word to say against it; but the passing of resolutions touching the faith and labors of Christ's servants, we protest against, as a most dangerous usurpation, not be tolerated, and as directly tending to enslave the free minds of God's people, and to prevent a growth in the knowledge of the truth. Suppose some do promulgate error; let it be met by a presentation of truth, and not by the "dunghill decretals" of fallible men.

As to "preaching annihilation," that is not our calling. The leading theme we labor to promulgate is, "Life future and eternal, for any of the family of Adam, is only in and through our Lord Jesus Christ." This we call, "The Life Views," and those who embrace these views we call, "Life Believers," or, "Believers in Life in Christ alone." All who reject Christ, to whom He is preached, are excluded from a future life—they "shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him," John iii., 36. Such "shall remain in the congregation of the dead." Prov. xxi., 16.

We have made these remarks that our friends and foes may understand our position. We intend to "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free," nor will we, the Lord being our helper, "be entangled again with the yoke of bondage;" no, not by any organization of human invention. If others choose to be slaves to any sect, they must take the risk, but they need not ask us to share in their fortunes.

As to preaching "the exact date of the end of all things," we have no lot or part in such work; but neither have we in passing resolutions against those who do.

"Ages to Come."

If we speak of "The Age to Come," some persons appear to think we have coined a new phrase, and wonder we cannot keep to scriptural expressions. We think such people are much too sensitive. If the expression "ages to come" is a scriptural one, it certainly cannot be unscriptural to speak of one of those ages in particular; for if there are ages to come, there must be one that is nearer than the others, and that one is "the age to come." The apostle Paul tells us of some things that were "hid from ages and from generations, but are now made manifest." So there have been ages in the past: see Col. i., 26. He speaks also of "eternal life which God promised before the world [pro chronon aionion—before the ages] began." Tit. i., 2. Again he says, God has "made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, that in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus." Eph. ii., 6, 7. Once more he saith, "Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end;" or, as McKnight translates it, "throughout the endless succession of ages." Eph. iii., 21.

In all this there is surely good and Scriptural ground for speaking of "the age to come," and the language of the apostle wakes up our thoughts to speak of "the ages." In the sense in which Paul uses this term, we understand periods of time in which some peculiar work was done, or manifestation was made.

The history of this world has been divided into periods, or ages, each of which has had its peculiarities and epoch. They have had a marked beginning and termination. We design to notice, in the first place, briefly, the ages past.

1. The Adamic Age.—This was from the creation to the fall. The length of this age we have no means of ascertaining. That it occupied some little space of time is clear. We are not to suppose that Adam fell the first day of his creation; there must have been some time for all the developments to be made that are there recorded. Some have supposed that sixteen years elapsed; but though that seems little time enough, yet it is wholly conjectural. Whether little or much time is taken up in that period, it was an age, and the age of the trial of our first parents, and their expulsion from the Garden of Eden.

2. The Antediluvian Age.—This commenced with the expulsion from Eden. It was an age which resulted in a total apostasy from God, except one family. This age covered a period variously estimated from fifteen hundred to two thousand years. God, during all this period, was striving with men by his Spirit, which they resisted, hardening themselves in wickedness, till wrath came upon them and swept them all away with a flood: there that age terminated.

3. From Noah to Abraham may be denominated the third age. This was marked with its peculiarities. It commenced with Noah's advent from the Ark, and, like the previous age, was marked in its progress with almost a total apostasy of Noah's posterity. God had said, however, that he would no more "smite everything living as he had done." Another method was now to be tried to keep alive a seed in the earth that should acknowledge and worship the true and living God; and Abraham was called to go out from his countrymen and kindred to a strange land, and he went out at God's command, not knowing whither he went. This brings us to the

4. Patriarchal Age.—The commencement of this age was marked by the call and departure of Abraham from Chaldea to go into Canaan, and is filled up with the most interesting incidents, viz., the covenants with Abraham—the birth and offering up of Isaac—the birth of Jacob, with the many and thrilling scenes recorded of these patriarchs in the history of their lives and death, the multiplication of their posterity and their ultimate bondage in Egypt. Great and glorious developments were made during this age, which serve as a key to unlock all the succeeding ones to the present time and coming age. This age is marked in its termination by the advent of Abraham's posterity, through Jacob, from their bondage from Egypt and settlement in Palestine, and covered a period of five hundred years or more.

5. The Mosaic Age.—This commenced with the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt, and embraces all the interesting events recorded in the Old Testament, relative to that people and the surrounding nations, pointing forward to "ages to come," both of humiliation and glory to that people and their Messiah. That age continued till the first advent of Messiah, and the overthrow of the Jewish or Mosaic polity at the destruction of Jerusalem, and was filled up with most interesting developments, or manifestations of God's truth, power and faithfulness.

6. The Gospel Age.—The ministration of the Spirit and calling of the Gentiles. This commenced with the personal ministry of Messiah—was more fully opened on the day of Pentecost, but not perfectly developed till Paul became the minister to the Gentiles. It has been an age, emphatically, of contest between the flesh and the Spirit; or between the animal propensities of men and the Spirit working in the mind, or in the affections. In this age many have been sealed by the Spirit, and have overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil, but the vast majority of men, as in the previous ages, have walked after their own lusts, and refused the cross of Christ. The love of the praise of men, the thirst for wealth, fame, power, or sensual enjoyment, has carried captive the largest part of men and drowned them in perdition; and all well-grounded hope of this world, or its inhabitants, ever being recovered from the dominion of evil by the efforts of men in the flesh, i. e., by corruptible and dying men, whatever stations they may occupy, is vain. All such efforts have proved a failure; and unless a new age or dispensation is opened, the world fails of being regenerated, evil is triumphant, and prophecy fails. So we understand the matter. But we have no doubt another age is to succeed this, or, that there is an "age to come," in which God's great purpose in creating the world and testing men under such a variety of dispensations, or ages, shall be fully developed, and Messiah's personal reign and glory, with his people who bore the cross in previous ages, shall demonstrate that there is a power that can control men and cause them to be subject to God, to the everlasting confusion and discomfiture of evil. The present age, then, will end or terminate with the return of Messiah to this earth to take the throne of David, to reign and execute judgment and justice in the earth. This brings us to the

7. Age of Messiah's Personal Reign.—Its commencement is the seventh great epoch in this world's history, and is "the age to come," being still future, though we are so near to it that its light dawns upon us, and the watchful will not fail to see its approach.

This age opens with the termination of the times of the Gentiles treading under foot Jerusalem—the overthrow of the present earthly monarchies—the return of God's favor to Palestine and Jerusalem—the gathering of the outcasts of Israel—the personal advent of Messiah as King of kings and Lord of lords—the assumption by him of the throne of Israel, or David's throne, and his dominion over the earth, together with the resurrection and immortalization of all them that are his, who have suffered with him or for his words in any of the previous ages.

It embraces, in its progress, the destruction of all incorrigible enemies, and the subjugation of all nations to him and his government. How long this age will continue we do not pretend to know, but it doubtless has a limit. At that point we are brought to the borders of another age, which is a perfect one, when compared with any of the preceding, but is only one in a chain, or "endless succession of ages;" each of which, doubtless, will exceed the one going before it in glory and glorious developments, thus opening to the view an endless prospect of inexhaustible enjoyment, and making the hope of eternal life a hope full of glory, and needing no endless torments to make it more blissful. All the wicked will have passed away and perished forever, and all surviving creatures in heaven, in earth, and in all God's dominions, will be filled with joy and unending delight.

Such we conceive to be the true Scripture doctrine, but we have not time or space now to go more largely into the subject.

"Wisdom Shall Die with You."

These words came forcibly to mind in reading an article in "The World's Crisis" last week, to which our attention was called by its Editor, saying, "Do not fail to read with care the article headed, 'Calamity, or Penalty!'" Without this call we should not probably have read it. After reading we saw nothing new or striking in it except its introductory assumption and its "conclusion." Here they are:

> The divine law which the wicked are under requires their life to pay its penalty; nothing else will suffice; and as they have already lost that by calamity, through Adam, being dead in him, they cannot pay the penalty unless they are raised from the dead, and thus furnished with life for that purpose.
> We thus feel impelled to the conclusion that the Adamic death is a calamity to his posterity; and as all lose life in him, the wicked must have a resurrection from the dead, in order to pay the penalty for their service to sin, or it remains forever unpaid.

The filling up corresponds with the wisdom of these two paragraphs. We marvel that men of sense and reason can blind their own minds or the minds of others with such unsound positions. They assume that dying is the wages of sin. No such statement is made in the Bible, in relation to Adam's posterity. It is death. Death is a state—it is the entire absence of any life principle. Such is death to all impenitent sinners. In death they have no surviving or revival principle, because connected with none before they died: hence, they are "holden with the cords of their sins"—they "shall remain in the congregation of the dead." Prov. v., 22, and xxi., 16. "The sting of death [its killing power—its power to hold its victim] is sin! and the strength of [or power of] sin is the law." 1 Corth. xv., 56.

The "Crisis" writer very gravely tells us the law requires the life of the wicked; and "as they have already lost that by calamity," "they are raised from the dead, and thus furnished with life for that purpose." Is not this wisdom? Look at it: A man owes you a thousand dollars; by calamity he is unable to pay it; so you give him another thousand dollars with which to pay what he owes you! Is your debt any more paid than if, when he had nothing to pay, you had frankly forgiven him the debt by not exacting it?

And then, the idea that God inflicts the "calamity" of loss of life upon the sinner, so that he "cannot pay the penalty, unless he is raised from the dead," and thus lays Himself under obligation to give the sinner another life to enable him "to pay the penalty." That must be a wise "plan" of administration, that obliges the Law-maker to furnish the means to pay the law's claim.

But all this "confusion worse confounded" arises from this writer, and those of the same school, confounding things which are clearly distinct. We have said, death is a state. A man may enter into that state with no surviving or reviving principle in him: then death is necessarily eternal, or death holds eternal dominion over such. Under the dispensation of grace, or the free gift of God in Jesus Christ, a redeeming principle is provided, so that "though a man die he may live again." That redeeming principle is the Divine life, or the Spirit of God given to us in Jesus Christ the Life-giver. Union with Him secures that life principle to believers, so that they "sleep in Jesus," or go down into the grave with the same life principle that brought up Christ from the dead, and will as surely bring up Christ's body—the church, as it brought up its Head. The sting of death was taken away, and the law had no power over the divine life principle. Not so with the sinner: he is held in the bondage of death—thus has to pay and does pay the penalty and the law's claim.

So far as loss of life is concerned, it is a loss by failing to secure "the gift of God, eternal life, through Jesus Christ." Rom. vi., 23. The word of God neither promises nor threatens any other future life, or life after death. "It is appointed unto men once to die," no more. This animal or Adamic life once extinct, and corruption set in, is never restored; it is a final and eternal extinction. But "unto them that look for him (Christ) shall He appear the second time without sin for their life."—Syriac, Heb. ix., 27, 28. Christ is the life of the believer, and "When Christ our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. iii., 4. Till then our "life is hid with Christ in God." Col. iii., 3. This life secures the resurrection of all in Christ, or who are made "partakers of the Divine nature." 2 Pet. i., 4. This life the wicked have not, and hence lose resurrection life, or come short of it, and "utterly perish in their own corruption." 2 Pet. ii., 12. They "shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on them." John iii., 36.

To assume, as the 'Crisis" writer has done, that the taking away of life is the penalty, and thus obliging God to give them back the life they lost by "calamity" so that He can take it away again, represents the Creator in a light which is far from "hallowing His name;" it presents Him, of His own free will, appointing the calamity, which deprives the sinner of the means of paying the debt, and the making him alive again to give the sinner the means to do it by going back into the state where the calamity landed him. If such a theory is not a reproach to wisdom, justice, truth, mercy, love and every other perfection that goes to make up a being worthy of adoration and love, then we might add to it eternal torture with propriety; for all the characteristics of such torture are embryotically embraced in the theory.

From D. S. Metcalf.

Meredith Village, N. H., March 15, 1869.

Geo. Storrs—Dear Sir: I have for a long time been a constant reader of your publications, having subscribed for the "Bible Examiner," soon after its first issue. At that time I was in full fellowship with the Congregational Church, in which faith I was born and bred, and never doubted that its tenets were Scriptural until, as a consequence of reading the "Bible Examiner," I was induced to "search the Scriptures to see if these things were so." After years of study, I have become thoroughly convinced that man is by nature mortal; that the first Adam was of the earth earthy, and had no immortality to transmit to his posterity; so that if man ever becomes immortal it must be by a union with the second Adam, who brought life and immortality to light. Failing in this, he must "utterly perish in his own corruption."

With most of the doctrinal views set forth by you in the Herald of Life I heartily agree; but upon one point I want more light. As I have never troubled you with questions of any sort, perhaps I may be permitted to ask your solution of the difficulty under which my mind labors. It is simply in regard to temptation. I understand you to ignore the personality of Satan, and teach that there is a spirit of evil in the heart that leads us astray, as the apostle James seems to teach, when he says, that "a man is tempted when he is drawn away by his own lusts and enticed."

Now the question is, Who tempted our Saviour? Taking the ground of no personal devil, and as it is not to be supposed He had any lust, or spirit of evil, in his hea[illegible]raw him away, from whence came the temptation?

I ask this question candidly and honestly, with a desire to know the truth as it is revealed in the Scriptures. Should you be pleased to give your views upon this point, in the Herald of Life, it will gratify and I hope [illegible]enefit at least one. Thanking you for the light you have shed on the sacred page and the blessed truths I have been enabled to embrace through your instrumentality, I am, dear sir, very truly and respectfully, yours.

Response by the Editor.

We shall not give a protracted answer to our friend now, as our tract on the subject will soon be issued, which we trust will give him and others all the information, on our Lord's temptation, desired.

It should be distinctly kept in mind that the term lust is not of itself indicative of a "spirit of evil," nor is it evil in itself. Its first sense imports no more than desire; but when it becomes uncontrollable, or disregards the restraints God has laid upon it, then, and not till then, it becomes a "spirit of evil." Temptation may arise from any desirable object; that is, even a lawful object. For instance: It is right for a man to acquire a home for himself and family. To seek such, there may be two ways: one lawful, the other unlawful. By patient industry he can honestly secure the home. Instead of that, if he suffers his desire (or lust) to lead him to cheat, lie to and defraud his fellow men, so as to obtain the amount necessary, in a less time than he could secure it in a lawful way, he has given way to temptation and is led into sin.

The desire for a home was not wrong, or a spirit of evil; but the pursuit of the object in an unlawful manner would have been.

Jesus had the promise, from his Father, of the throne of David, and that His dominion should be from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth. As the Son of man, and the seed of David, he had all the natural desires incident to humanity. His Father's method, or way, for Jesus to take possession of this kingdom was through suffering and death. This way was His trial or temptation. A desire to avoid suffering and death was inseparable from his manhood, and was no sin or spirit of evil. He could not help desiring, "if it be possible," that the "cup" of suffering and death might be avoided. By His miracle-working power, He could have so overawed all men as to have taken "all the kingdoms of the world" and escaped the terrible trial of suffering and shame to which He was likely to be subjected, He could not but see what lay before Him—it was all presented to His mind. Shall He follow the natural desire, and take possession of the kingdoms of the world at once, and go forth in triumph and glory? or shall He subject His natural desire to the will of God? He chose the latter, and thus put temptation to flight: His will overcame all by a perfect acquiescence in that of his Father, and thus the temptation, or spirit of evil, found no place in Him: He remained pure. So it was in every other temptation or trial He passed through. These remarks must suffice till our friend can have our tract on the subject, where we have treated it more fully.

Paul's Desire to Depart.

"Having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ." Phil. i., 23.

"What does it mean?" One replies that "Paul wanted to die and go to Christ then:" another, that "he longed for the returning of Christ from heaven, that he might be with the Lord:" and another, that "Paul desired a translation like Enoch's." "Which one of the three views is correct? or, are none of them right? I think that the latter position is correct.

Paul, in Rom. xiv., 7, 8, writes, "For none of us liveth to himself and no man dieth to himself. For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord: whether we live, therefore, or die, we are the Lord's."

In writing to the Philippians he expresses the same ideas in connection with our text: see Phil. i., 20, 21. "According to my earnest expectation and my hope, that in nothing I shall be ashamed, but that with all boldness, as always, so now also Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life, or by death; for me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."

"There" says our friend number one, "to die, will be Paul's gain." But Paul thought and taught differently, for he says, "No man dieth to himself:" "Christ shall be magnified in my body . . . by death." "We die unto the Lord." He taught that it would be gain to Christ, or, in other words, that Christ would "be magnified . . . by (his) death."

Then he writes further, "yet what I shall choose I wot not, for I am in a strait betwixt two."—"What two?" Those two positions which he has just mentioned, living (in the flesh) and dying. "Why?" Because Christ will be magnified in Paul either by his life or by his death.

Hence to depart and to be with Christ is not living in his flesh, or dying: it is a third position. If departing means dying, then Paul would not have been in a strait, for he says it "is far better" to depart. We leave our friend number one here, in the care of Paul.

Next, our friend number two claims that the returning of Christ is what the apostle had reference to, when he said he had "a desire to depart and to be with Christ which is far better." To their attention I would earnestly recommend the next verse. "Nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you." That, provided our friend is correct, would make Paul's abiding in the flesh more needful for the church, than the return of Christ from heaven. We shall here leave friend number two in the hands of Paul.

Finally: that Paul longed for a translation is evident, for then he would be with Christ. He had a desire to pass at once into that state. Being with Christ was to Paul the very height of honor and joy, yet for his brethren's sake he thought it more needful to abide in the flesh, that is, in his mortal flesh.

These few thought are submitted to the thoughtful by their bro. in Christ.

F. H. Burbank.

"Refuge of Lies."

To rise up early, to late take rest, to toil and labor unceasingly to acquire the honors, riches, or pleasures of this transitory and uncertain life: in this work, and for this end, how many are engaged, and how few succeed. They labor in vain, and spend their strength for naught; and yet they labor on, till death puts a period to their efforts and their hopes.

If men would use the like efforts to obtain durable riches, and the honor and wisdom that cometh from above, they would not be so often sent empty away. In spiritual things, as well as temporal, men reap as they sow: if they sow sparingly, they reap also sparingly.

What is the religion of the present day? It is a mere form, an outside show; there is no depth or earnestness in it. It is a mere secondary concern, to make a decent appearance in the world; and men flatter themselves that this will insure them future happiness, immortal glory! Has this hope a good foundation in the word and promise of God? Is eternal life so easily attained? Is it not worthy of more effort and exertion than most men bestow upon it? Who would hope to obtain riches, or honors, in this world, who would take no more pains to secure them, than too many professors of religion do in pursuit of spiritual treasures? Truly, the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light, in the more diligent use of means to secure the desired end. We are exhorted to "prove all things, and hold fast that which is good." Yet most men are born, live, and die, just where they chance to be placed, and evince no anxiety to know or distinguish between truth and error, as it regards a future state. It is too much trouble to think, examine, or judge for themselves; so they hire a man they call a minister, to make it all safe and easy, and there let it rest. If any one ventures to ask these persons a reason for the hope that is in them, they manifest a distaste at being disturbed in their peaceful slumber; and, when pressed with scriptural arguments against their man-made theories and traditions of an immortal soul, endless torture, etc., they take refuge in this universal quietus to all conflicting opinions on theology: "Well, who can decide all these perplexing questions, that have puzzled men's brains to no purpose for centuries? If we do about right—trust in God's mercy—and unite with some Christian church, we shall fare as well a our neighbors, and save much time and temper."

Some such reasoning as this, is all you can get out of the great majority of religious professors in our popular churches. They do not even inquire, what is truth? Much less, do they wait for an answer. What can you do with such idol worshippers, but let them alone? Why cast pearls before swine? All we can say is, Father forgive them, for they cannot, or will not think. If we could but get them to think, there might be some hope; but this is too much trouble. Sleep on now, and take your rest, there will be enough of it in the grave.

J. Perry.

Sandy Hill, March 20, 1869.

J. W. McCagg, Warsaw, N. Y., writes: Great interest has been manifested in our Life views since Br. Burbank left us. His labors seem to have given a general impulse as regards the teachings of the Bible. Each day, as I meet them, some one says, When are you to have another preacher? I tell them, As soon as the weather becomes warm, and I promise them to pay fifty dollars to defray expenses. I am in earnest about the matter. I do believe there is good grounds to expect a large accession to the Life views in this county by having two or three weeks' meetings. As to the best time to have them I leave that to you and Br. Burbank. Br. B. made many warm friends in this place. A great many wish to hear again, and think if he located here, in six months he would have the largest congregation of any church in town.

Remarks by the Editor.—Our Br. will remember that Jesus never remained long in one place, nor did His apostles often do it. Our work is to sow the seed of truth, and pass on to other fields where it has not yet been heard. The Saviour tarried in some important places only a day or two; nor did He stop to inquire, "How many are converted?" In Samaria He began with one hearer, (a woman), and when the interest became intense, He left them "after two days." John iv., 43. When the light is sent to a people it is their business to improve it and not to wait for, or depend on, a preacher to carry forward the work. Too often the work is hindered or destroyed by too much preaching. The people have had their attention aroused and are led to search the Scriptures, and if professional preachers would keep away or go into other new places, it would be far better for the cause of truth. The Bible is God's only authorized preacher. If one, calling himself a minister, preaches anything not in the Bible, we are not to receive it as from God. A true servant of Christ calls attention to what God saith: or, in other words, calls men to search the Scriptures; having done this, and exhorted them to read and pray over the words of life, he may safely pass on to other fields: God will see that the seed sown shall find lodgement in the "honest hearts," such as really hunger and thirst to know the way of life.

Do not look abroad too much for help. Stir up one another to seek light from the Bible, and the diligent in that work will be made rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom which God hath promised to them who love Him. The Bible, the Bible, is the great preacher; for in that God speaks; and His Spirit, given to those who ask for it, will guide them into all truth. Heaven grant that all Life Believers may more and more realize these things.

A Terribly Tortured Text.

Perhaps no passage in the whole Bible is more unfairly handled by the adherents of modern theology than Luke xx., 37, 38. "Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living; for all live unto him." The last part of this passage was selected by Rev. Alvah Hovey, D. D., of the Newton Theological Seminary (Baptist) as the foundation of a sermon recently preached in Worcester, Mass., on the conscious state of the dead. He of course argued that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are now enjoying a blissful consciousness in the "middle state," because the Lord is their God, and "all live unto him."

To corroborate this position he adduced the usual collection of supposed Scripture proofs, such as Christ preaching to the "spirits in prison," the rich man and Lazarus, and the thief on the cross, Stephen's prayer, and Paul's desire to depart. He deprecated the evil effect of teaching or believing that the dead are unconscious, as calculated to remove the restraints of virtue and lead to violence and suicide. "Let it but appear," said he, "that the Bible teaches unconsciousness after death, and the terrors of the future, as depicted so fully in Hamlet's soliloquy, in a great measure disappear."

It is said that "the sermon was listened to with deep interest;" but whether the terrors of Hamlet's soliloquy, or the truths of God's Revelation, had the greater influence, is not certainly known.

I was not a little surprised, a few months ago, to see a similar argument from the pen of a Methodist editor. He gave the following syllogistic exposition of the passage above quoted:

God is a God of the living, and not of the dead.

But he is the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

Therefore Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are now living.

That looks a little like logic, but does it contain one grain of Bible truth? Is it not a gross perversion of Scripture—a terrible torturing of Christ's words, to prove exactly the opposite of what he intended to teach? I believe the reasoning is purely sophistical, and the conclusion wholly unwarranted. The above treatment of this passage is such as honest criticism ought to be ashamed to adopt. The entire discourse relates to a single point—the resurrection of the dead. The Sadducees disbelieved this doctrine, which had been made so prominent in the Saviour's preaching. They endeavored to undermine this great, fundamental pillar of the new religion, by resorting to what logicians call argumentum ad absurdum. They supposed that the perplexing cause of seven husbands to one wife would involve the resurrection theory in inextricable difficulties, and thus deal out a staggering blow to their Pharisaic rivals. Jesus quickly demolished this objection by showing that marriage is only a temporary argument, to be swallowed up in the overwhelming glories of the resurrection state. He then adduced a direct argument to prove the resurrection of the dead. No language could show more explicitly that this is the very object in view. "Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham," etc. The appeal to Moses was especially in point, as the Sadducees acknowledged the divine authority of the Mosaic record.

If the conscious existence of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob be admitted, how does Jesus prove the point in view—"that the dead are raised?" This very assumption makes his argument perfectly futile. The patriarchs referred to were actually dead. But God is not the God of the dead, but of the living. Yet he is positively called their God. How can this be true, unless those sleeping worthies are to be made alive by a resurrection from the dead? The present tense is used for the future, as is commonly the case in general propositions. Thrown into logical form, the argument stands thus:

God is the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

But Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are now dead; and God is not the God of the dead, but of the living.

Therefore Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob must have a resurrection (in common with all men, "for all live unto him") and not remain eternally dead, as the Sadducees teach.

This is the simple truth which Jesus sought to prove. Did he succeed? Most gloriously. If modern theologians cannot find the resurrection plainly taught in this passage, let them know that their theological ancestors—the Sadducees—were not so obtuse. They saw the point, and were speechless. This simple syllogism from the Master's mouth effectually spiked the anti-resurrection cannon.

The passage under consideration, so far from proving the conscious state of the dead, clearly proves the opposite. If the argument needs any additional strength, it may be found in the perfect silence which the Sadducees maintained in regard to an intermediate state of consciousness between death and the resurrection. If Jesus had given any countenance to such a belief, why did not these crafty men take advantage of it, by asking what relation the oft-widowed wife sustained to her husbands during the intermediate state? This would have been equally perplexing to Christ, and the objection, if sustained, would have borne with double weight against the Pharisees, as embracing two articles in their creed instead of one. But not the most distant allusion do we find to any such "middle" state, for the obvious reason that Christ had never taught that dead folks were alive at the same time! There was no question, however, that Jesus fully believed and clearly taught a resurrection from the dead. Hence the Sadducees proceeded at once to the resurrection, as the period when life and action are to be resumed. What a pity that men will not now treat the doctrines of Christ as fairly as even the quibbling Sadducees of his own day! Let us not make the Lord Jesus Christ responsible for doctrines which he either wholly ignored or heartily repudiated!

"To Him that Overcometh."

To achieve success is one of the intensest desires of man, and a most powerful incentive to activity. Believing the object sought after may be attained, the severest and most constant labor of hand, and heart, and brain, are counted as dross, and sacrifices, frequent and costly, are freely offered. And if these longings be after the good and true, nothing can be more laudable and honorable, or labor better directed.

If knowledge be the object of pursuit, noble is "he that overcometh" the obstacles that are in the way of its attainment, and rich indeed the rewards of its acquirement. Does love for fame win the heart? If sought by serving well the cause of the right, happy is "he that overcometh," and the ages shall prolong the story of his greatness. Does wealth allure? If honorably gained, and well used, well may it be to "him that overcometh;" and sorrowing hearts shall rise up and bless the hand of him that hath relieved their needs. Has passion long raged within the breast? and would its tyrant power be broken and subdued? Better is "he that overcometh" it than he that only conquereth nations.

When the grandest struggle of life is begun, and the interests of the Present and the Beyond are the objects of one's contending, and its success is immortal treasures, the Deity appeals with the eloquence of an holy inspiration to this element in the soul of man. "The world, the flesh, and the devil," are the opposing enemies, but the victor is promised a glorious reward. To "him that overcometh" shall be given "to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God;" it is he, too, that shall "eat of the hidden manna," and have "the white stone," "and the new name;" and shall have "power over the nations;" and to him will be "given the morning star." The battle may be long, and the struggle hard, but "he that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment," and will be "made a pillar in the temple of God, and he shall go no more out, and to him will He grant to sit in His throne;" and finally, it is said, "he shall inherit all things, and I will be his God, and he shall be my son." Will you be of this class? Conquer yourself, overcome your evil heart by calling for, and abiding in the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. God will help you now and crown you with His glory and joy hereafter.—Zion's Herald.

Can the Dead Hear?

"Certainly!" say some of our opponents: "do we not read that the blind see, 'the deaf hear,' 'the lame walk,' and, that 'the dead are raised up?' hence the dead can hear as easily as the blind can see, or the deaf hear, or the lame walk."

In reply we say, truly, dead men can hear just as well as blind men can see, or, as deaf persons can hear, etc. But it is a fact that dead persons cannot hear, and that blind persons cannot see, and that deaf persons cannot hear.

Then one may ask, "what does the Saviour mean by saying that 'the deaf hear,' 'the blind see,' etc? Simply this, that the deaf were cured of their deafness so that they could hear, and the eyes of the blind were opened so that they could see. If the dead are to hear, life must be restored first, then they can hear. Yours in Christ.

European War-Clouds.

The correspondent of the Philadelphia "Morning Post," writes from Paris under date of February 2d, that this year must inevitably bring forth a general and fierce European war.

Every country in Europe has long been dissatisfied to the utmost with its own and the general situation. The sudden and radical subversion of the economical laws, which for centuries governed the world, have dislocated the habits and interests of all classes, and led to discontent, material sufferings, and demoralization, which induce part of the people to think that a new territorial partition of the Continent among the different races will result to the universal advantage. The rest of the people, the greatest number, are confident that a general revolution, whatever may be the geographical result, will give them the best opportunity of establishing the economical law henceforth, their favorite theme, the socialist dogma. So that, though divided as to the secret or avowed reasons for war and its ultimate consequences, all, high or low, rich or poor, capitalists or laborers, economists or socialists, join in a common and irresistible call for War.

France, where both people and rulers have been so deeply wounded in their pride and prestige for the last six years, is longing for the signal to advance to the Rhine, for it is very likely in the vicinity of that river that the European Gordian knot will be cut; and besides her ambition for glory and her desire to regain her natural frontiers, France, perhaps more than any other power in Europe, is eager for war, because of the above-explained economical uneasiness. As for the Emperor, he is certainly resolved to play the whole for the whole. If he succeeds in getting the Rhine and assuming again the role of arbitrator of Europe, he will have reached the goal that he has ever had before him; and he is bent upon gaining it, or falling gallantly and with the honors of war.

Prussia, drunk with glory since the day of Sadowa, is eager for a contest with France, not only for political purposes, but also to give the proof that the Prussian army is the first army in the world, and the Prussian generals the first generals.

Behind Prussia, all Germany waits but a word from Berlin to rush toward the Rhine first, and the Danube soon after.

Russia, stronger than ever after the annihilation of Poland and the failure of the Western scheme of conciliation between the Mohammedan and the Christian populations of the Ottoman empire, will rise as a single man, with enthusiasm and confidence in her final success. She is ready to make all sacrifices to avenge her disasters in 1855, and to give the coup de grace to the "sick man," whose succession is hers, (according to a religious and political faith,) from the Pruth to the Amoor. Sustained, morally and materially, by all the Greco-slave populations of the Sultan's dominions, numbering nearly two-thirds of the whole, the traditional Moscovian policy meets now with a chance that Russia would certainly not allow her Government to throw away. But the Emperor and his counsellors share the resolution of the people to set up the St. Andrew's cross upon the shores of the Bosphorus.

Austria—poor Austria! who is being day after day dismembered, and whose prestige was lost forever at Sadowa, has but one chance to recover part of her greatness and influence among nations, and that chance is War.

All throughout Europe one smells powder; thousands of men are working night and day from the Seine to the Neva, in completing the engines of attack and defence; the arsenals are overflowing with means of destruction so terrible that the genius of Hell seems to have presided over their creation. The fleets and railroads are ready for the transportation of armies amounting to five or six millions of soldiers, commanded by illustrious chiefs, and eager for glory, honors, and slaughter. The time of words and compromises has past. The hour of deeds and radical settlements is struck, and the governments themselves, in spite of their casuistic assurances for peace, cannot conceal any longer the solemnity of the situation and the imminence of war. And out of that war may come the Antichrist. Any day, then, Christ may call for his watching ones.—Prophetic Times.

Nature Unending.

We have never seen a finer argument for the perpetuity of the earth, and sun, and moon than the following. It is scriptural and logical. Indeed, it is conclusive. "The earth abideth forever," is the testimony of inspiration. From the Bible we learn a fact for science—that the sun has endless duration. This is founded on Ps. lxxii., 5, 7, 17; and lxxxix., 3, 4, 28, 29, 39, 37.

It is predicated by Christ, of His throne and of His people, that each shall continue forever, as long as the sun and moon endure. There would be no force in the parallel if the sun were to exist for a less period than is affirmed of Christ, His throne, and His people. The sun is declared to be a witness forever in the heavens of the covenant of God to His Son, and to the redeemed for their unending existence. The witness must be cotemporaneous and conterminous with the covenant. The covenant exists so long as the subject continues. But the subject continues to endless duration. The witnesses must be of concurrent perpetuity. Therefore the witnesses, the sun and the moon, have endless duration.

By parity of reasoning, the solar system has a like unending duration; for the superior, the sun, controls and carries the inferior. I believe this argument is as logical as it is biblical.—Selected.

From D. Perine.

Hudson City, N. J., March, 1869.

Br. Storrs: In looking over the Methodist Catechism, I noticed what they say of the Trinity. It reads thus: "There are three persons in the Godhead—the Father, Son and Holy Ghost; and these three are one." I examined the Scriptures to see if I could find a text that read like that. Their reference is to 1 John v., 7, "For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the (Son or) Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one." One what? "One God," they say. I say, no; one in the record. The Father bears record; the Son bears record, and the Holy Ghost bears record; and these three records are one; that is, there is a perfect agreement in them. Concerning this record, let us see what it is. The 11th and 12th verses tell us. "This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son: he that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son hath not life." Brethren, will you honor the Father and the Son by believing this record, (see verse 10), or will you "make God a liar" because you "believe not the record God has given of his Son?" O that we may all fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life according to our heavenly Father's plan, is the prayer of your brother in Christ.

From S. S. Call.

Burr Oak, Iowa, March 11, 1869.

Br. Storrs: There has been a great deal written on John v., 28, 29, yet I have never seen anything that appears so literal, so simple, and yet so plain, as the following: First, Christ was speaking to the Jews; and as neither he nor his disciples ever preached to the Gentiles before his crucifixion, He could not mean any more than those to whom he spake, namely, the Jews. Some did hear, and as many as believed, to them gave he power to become the sons of God. Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming (definite time, one hour,), in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice (Isaiah tells us who they are, chap. lxv., 2–5), and they shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; they that have done evil unto the resurrection of condemnation. Now are they the resurrection? Christ does not say so. If I ask a man to dinner, he is not the dinner, yet he may come unto it, but he is not the dinner any more than the Jews were the resurrection; for Christ saith, "I am the resurrection." They came unto his resurrection; to the one it was life unto life, by a new and lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. To the others, it was their condemnation; for by his resurrection he condemned their unjust judgment, and their dispensation ended, and with it ended all their rites, forms, and ceremonies under the law, and they stood condemned before all the world; for it was then evident they had done evil, in condemning the Holy and Just One.

Allowing Christ to be the resurrection, all is literal, all is plain; for Christ did not say either the good or the evil were to be raised, but he did say they would come forth unto the resurrection; and he said, "I am the resurrection;" and as he was speaking to the Jews, of course he meant those to whom he spake; and as the Gentiles were not spoken to, as Jews, why should they apply the words of the Saviour to themselves, when they were not intended? It is time enough for the Gentiles to hear when they are spoken to; and they were not spoken to till after the day of Pentecost. Yours in hope of eternal life through Christ the Life-giver.

A Life Believer, in Maine, writes: I send two dollars; for which send me your Review of T. M. Post, on Man's Destiny, and the remainder in Campaign Documents. I wish to try them among my neighbors to see if they will have any influence with them. The opposition to the view of Life only in Christ is very strong about me and increasing in earnestness and virulence, although quite a number of late are making inquiries about the doctrine. Some have read such works as I could supply them, and acknowledge the reasonableness of them, so that I am led to try others. There are but two of us that hold the Life views within several miles.

Note by the Editor.—No better course can be adopted than to scatter the Campaign Documents. They have already wrought wonders, under the blessing of God. Brethren, let there be no lack of funds to carry on this work. Many thousands have already gone out on their mission, and tens of thousands more must go. May the Lord give them wings.

D. Sherburne, Waterville, Mass., writes: I send $1. Please send me the "Six Sermons," the balance apply to the Tract Fund. I would be glad to do more, but my means are limited. I am thankful to be able to do anything to procure something to read that will give some satisfaction. I prize the Herald of Life above every paper I have ever read. I have none to associate with here except those who are opposed to the Life views. I have attended the "orthodox" meetings until within a few months. I do not feel it my duty to hear any one preach what I believe to be an error. I thank the Lord he has put it in the hearts of some of His servants to preach and publish the truth to dying men. May the Lord prosper you and all the dear brethren, and give you, with all the dear saints, an abundant entrance into His everlasting kingdom.

Z. McLester, Tennessee, writes: The people about here seem still to take hold of the Life views as they would a hot iron, while I consider it lacks vastly of being as hot as the orthodox views.

Poetry.

Church Parties.

[Sister Beach sends the following note and poetry We agree with her that "the picture might have been more perfectly finished up."—Editor.]

The accompanying poem, I have many times read with interest, and now send for publication. The picture might have been more perfectly finished up, but each reader can, in their own mind, easily supply what is wanting. It seems to be peculiarly appropriate just now when "church order" and "church organization" are so much talked of, and that too, among a class of people who have come out of every sect in Christendom, professedly ignoring all creeds and platforms but the Bible, acknowledging that the word of God and the Holy Spirit are sufficient to instruct, guide and govern the church in all their pilgrimage to the Kingdom of God. Louisa J. Beach.

No Sects in Heaven.

BY MRS. ELIZABETH H. J. CLEVELAND.

A dream related at an anniversary of the Evangelical Society of New York City and vicinity, has been versified, with some additions, as follows:

Talking of sects quite late one eve,
What one and another of saints believe,
That night I stood in a troubled dream,
By the side of a darkly flowing stream.

And a "churchman" down to the river came,
When I heard a strange voice call his name—
"Good father, stop; when you cross this tide,
You must leave your robes on the other side."

But the aged father did not mind,
And his long gown floated down behind,
As down to the stream his way he took,
His hands firm hold of a gilt-edged book.

"I'm bound for heaven, and when I'm there,
I shall want my book of Common Prayer;
And though I put on a starry crown,
I should feel quite lost without my gown."

Then he fixed his eyes on the shining track,
But his gown was heavy and held him back,
And the poor old father tried in vain
A single step in the flood to gain.

I saw him again on the other side,
But his silk gown floated on the tide:
And no one asked him, in that blissful spot,
If he belonged to "the church" or not.

Then down to the river a Quaker strayed;
His dress of a sober hue was made;
"My hat and coat must be all of grey—
I cannot go any other way."

Then he buttoned his coat straight up to his chin,
And staidly, solemnly waded in,
And his broad-brimmed hat he pulled down tight
Over his forehead, so cold and white.

But a strong wind carried away his hat,
And he sighed a few moments after that;
And then as he gazed on the further shore,
The coat slipped off and was seen no more.

Poor, dying Quaker, thy suit of grey
Is quietly sailing—away—away;
But thou'll go to heaven as straight as an arrow,
Whether thy brim be broad or narrow.

Next came Dr. Watts, with a bundle of psalms
Tied nicely up in his aged arms,
And hymns as many—a very wise thing,
That the people in heaven "all round" might sing.

But I thought that he heaved an anxious sigh,
As he saw that the river ran broad and high,
And looked rather surprised as, one by one,
The psalms and hymns in the wave went down.

And after him, with his MSS.,
Came Wesley, the pattern of godliness;
But he cried, "Dear me! What shall I do?
The water has soaked them through and through;"

And there on the river, far and wide,
Away they went on the swollen tide,
And the saint, astonished, passed through alone,
Without manuscripts, up to the throne.

Then, gravely walking, two saints by name
Down to the stream together came;
But as they stopped at the river's brink,
I saw one saint from the other shrink.

"Sprinkled or plunged, may I ask you, friend,
How you attained to life's great end?"
"Thus, with a few drops on my brow."
"But I've been dipped as you'll see me now.

"And I really think it will hardly do,
As I'm 'close communion,' to cross with you;
You're bound, I know, to the realms of bliss,
But you must go that way and I'll go this."

And straightway plunging with all his might.
Away to the left—his friend to the right,
Apart they went from this world of sin—
But how did the brethren "enter in?"

And now, where the river was rolling on,
A Presbyterian church went down;
Of women there seemed an innumerable throng,
But the men I could count as they passed along.

And concerning the road they never could agree—
The old or the new way, which it could be;
And never a moment paused to think
That both would lead to the river's brink.

And a sound of murmuring, long and loud,
Came ever up from the moving crowd,
'You're in the old way and I'm in the new;
That is the false and this is the true."
Or, "I'm in the old way and you're in the new;
That is the false and this is the true."

But the brethren only seemed to speak;
Modest the sisters walked and meek;
And if ever one of them chanced to say
What troubles she met with on the way—
How she longed to pass to the other side,
Nor feared to cross over the swelling tide—
A voice arose from the brethren then:
"Let no one speak but the 'holy men,'
For have ye not heard the words of Paul,
Oh let the women keep silence all.'"

I watched them long in my curious dream,
Till they stood by the borders of the stream;
Then, just as I thought, the two ways met,
But all the brethren were talking yet,
And would talk on, till the heaving tide
Carried them over side by side;
Side by side, for the way was one;
The toilsome journey of life was done,
And the priest and Quaker, all who died,
Came out alike on the other side.

No forms, or crosses, or books had they;
No gowns or silk, of suits of grey,
No creeds to guide them, or MSS.,
For all had put on "Christ's righteousness."

Children's Department.

A Little Girl's Letter.

Springfield, Mass., March 3, 1869.

Geo. Storrs—Dear Sir: As my father is a subscriber to the Herald of Life, I always hail the day with joy which brings it. I first read the Children's Department, which I love very much. I have written a little story, which, if you think worthy of a place in your paper, I should be pleased to have you insert. If you do not think it worthy of notice I shall not be displeased. Now that I have written it, I am at loss what to call it. How do you like A Word in Season: or, the Drunkard's Reform?

My Dear Young Friends: I am also young, like you. I was thirteen years old last November; and because I am young I am going to tell you a story, that you may see that we are never too young to do good. About two years ago two school-mates went in search of Sabbath school scholars. After going into a number of houses, they came to a house occupied by about seven families. They went up three flights of stairs, opened a door and entered a dark room, occupied by a woman, her drunken husband, and three girls. Emma, for that was the name of one of the scholars, began talking to the girls about attending Sabbath school; the other scholar went up to the man, laying her hand on his shoulder, asked him if he ever attended church. He said, No. I have no clothes to wear. His daughter said, If you did not spend your money for rum you would have clothes. She then asked him if he ever read the Bible. He answered, Sometimes. His daughter said to him that he did not tell the truth; for you never read the Bible. The scholar talked to him some time. I will not tell you all she said, for fear of tiring you. However, the mother promised her daughter for a scholar. The two girls went home and thought no more of the conversation with the drunkard, until about a year ago the mother of Lillie, for that was the name of the other scholar, while in a dressmaker's shop, observed a girl, about fourteen years of age, having a dress fitted One of the ladies in the shop said to her, Do you know that girl? She answered, no. The lady then told her of the girl's visit to the drunkard's home, as she got it from the man's wife. His wife said she expected to see him knock Lillie down. Instead of that he seemed ready to cry. He said nothing, but went to bed.

Next day, to her surprise, he came home sober, and said, "I have signed the pledge:" and he has not drunk anything intoxicating since. His wife was raised a Roman Catholic. The man is now in Hartford at work, and his family is still living here. He wrote to his wife not to let her children go in a Roman Catholic Church. He is now a sober, industrious, and respectable man, and supports his family well. The mother, when speaking of the visit of the two little girls, called them the comfort bringers.

Little friends, if you are like me, you are wondering if this is a true story. Yes, it is, for I am the little Lillie who talked to the drunkard. The reason I am telling you the story is, thinking that in your search for Sabbath school scholars you may meet with a drunken father. If you do, be kind to him. Many a poor drunkard might be saved if little girls would speak words of kindness and encouragement to them. Lillie G.

How it Could Have Been:

AND HOW IT WILL BE.

BY E. W.

We will cite a prophecy of the class referred to in our last remarks: "And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Isa. ii., 3, 4. Micah iv., 1–7 declares the same. Psalms xlvi., xlvii., and xlviii., appear to have the same vision.

Yea, and even after they had sinned more and more, God's long-suffering continued, and the prophets continued the same strain: Hear them: "Go and proclaim these words toward the north, and say, return, . . . only acknowledge thine iniquity, that thou hast transgressed against the Lord thy God, and hast scattered thy ways to the strangers under every green tree, and ye have not obeyed my voice, saith the Lord . . . . And it shall come to pass, ("only acknowledge thine iniquity") when ye be multiplied and increased in the land, in those days. At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; (without the acknowledgment of their iniquity?) and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem: neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart. In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, . . . But I said, How shall I put thee among the children, and give thee a pleasant land, a goodly heritage of the hosts of nations? (Conditions) And I said, thou shalt call me, My father; and shalt not turn away from me." Jer. iii., 12–19. This is the character of a large portion of the prophecies relative to Israel and Judah. Let us take another example: "For thus saith the Lord of hosts: As I thought to punish you, when your fathers provoked me to wrath, saith the Lord of hosts, and I repented not: so again have I thought in these days to do well unto Jerusalem and to the house of Judah: fear ye not. These are the things that ye shall do; Speak ye every man the truth to his neighbor; execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates: etc. . . . Thus saith the Lord of hosts; it shall yet come to pass, (Conditioned upon loving the "truth and peace," verse 19); that there shall come people, and the inhabitants of many cities: and the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, Let us go speedily to pray before the Lord, and to seek the Lord of hosts: I will go also. Yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord. Thus saith the Lord of hosts; in those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you: for we have heard that God is with you." Zech. viii., 14–23. But they never took that exalted position. Why not? Because they did not comply with the conditions.

So with Jer. xxxi. The theme commences with Jeremiah's letter to the captives in Babylon, chap. xxix., in which he says according to Deut. xxx., 1–10, "And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart; and I will be found of you, saith the Lord: and I will turn away your captivity, and I will gather you from all the nations, and from all the places whither I have driven you, saith the Lord; and I will bring you again into the place whence I caused you to be carried away captive." Jer. xxix., 13–14. Then follows on the goodly state of things which should take place after their return; and not only that, but in chap. xxxi., 31–34, he mentions a "new covenant" which he proposed to make "with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah" upon the repeal of the old law covenant: See Heb. viii., 8–13. But did he make it with Israel and Judah? No: never, as a people. Why? They—the leaders of the people—said, "We are Moses' disciples." And hence with few exceptions perished with the rituals of Moses; for "he (Jesus) came unto his own and his own received him not." John i., 11.

But some one may ask, Has not this covenant yet been made? Yes, it was made in the time appointed of the Father with as many as believed on his (Christ's) name, out of all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. In confirmation of which Paul said Christ was the mediator of a better covenant, (than the old law covenant: See Heb. viii., 6), and he himself of God was made an able minister of it. See 2 Cor. iii., 6.

Not long subsequent to Jeremiah's prophecy, and at the close of their captivity to Babylon, the angel of God gave to Daniel the limits of his long-suffering with the Jews, viz., seventy weeks, or 490 years, as he did to Noah concerning the Antediluvians, both of which times were faithfully remembered. And with present light, we see no more warrant for the restoration of privilege of one, more than the other, seeing that each were faithfully judged in their day. And the apostle said concerning the past, "We are sure the judgments of God are according to truth." Rom. ii., 2; and of this people he said, "Wrath has come upon them to the uttermost." 1 Thess. ii., 16.

We now call the new Scriptures to witness to the truth of these things. When Messiah came, the same theme was prominent, for the kingdom was preached and offered to Judah in good faith. "Zacharias was filled with the holy Spirit, and prophesied, saying, Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for he hath visited and redeemed his people, and hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David; as he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world (aioonas—age) began: . . . What he would grant unto us, that we being delivered out of the hand of our enemies might serve him without fear, in holiness and righteousness before him, all the days of our life." Luke i., 67–75 and see to 79.

Again, when Simeon took up the child Jesus "in his arms" he "blessed God and said, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word: for mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel?" Luke ii., 28–32. But was Jesus ever "the glory of thy people Israel?" No, never; but that was the time at his first coming when it should have been; and why was it not done? let Jesus answer: "There was a certain householder, which planted a vineyard, and hedged it round about, and digged a winepress in it, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country. And when the time of the fruit drew near, he sent his servants to the husbandmen, that they might receive the fruits of it. And the husbandmen took his servants, and beat one, and killed another, and stoned another. Again, he sent other servants more than the first; and they did unto them likewise. But last of all he sent unto them his son, saying, they will reverence my son. But when the husbandmen saw the son, they said among themselves, This is the heir, come, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance. And they caught him, and cast him out of the vineyard, and slew him. . . . Therefore say I say unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. And whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder." Matt. xxi., 33–44. See also the parable of the Marriage of the King's Son, chap. xxii. Here is the reason: "let us kill him," and instead of receiving him as their King, they said. "We will not have this man to reign over us." Now if this is not the place for these scriptures and such like, we would love to have them appropriated aright. Permit another thought. Jesus commenced to cast out devils; that is, heal all manner of diseases and deliver from all the consequences of evil; and gave commission to his disciples to do likewise: see Matt. x., 7, and onward; his purpose being to remove all sicknesses from among that people; (for only unto them was he sent) as God proposed by Moses (Deut. vii., 15) heretofore cited, but it was not done: why? Ans. "And he did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief." Matt. xiii., 58, Mark, vi., 5.

We trust our kind readers begin to see that the class of texts that many rely upon to prove so conclusively probation in a future age, might have been fulfilled under the first advent; there they are harmoniously applied by the Holy Spirit through Jesus and the Apostles. Now if they could have been fulfilled there, and if it was the pleasure of the Lord that they should be; but for the persistent wickedness of Israel; pray tell, under what obligation is the Lord to fulfil them still, seeing they were once offered in good faith and stubbornly refused? Surely, none at all.

To our mind the doctrine of the age to come must stand or fall here. Here is the turning point. If we say they could not have received these blessings then, we cast disrespect upon God and his dear Son; for even after Israel (the ten tribes) had gone away, he offered them to Judah, and when it was refused, the Son of God wept over Jerusalem, saying, "How often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not." Matt. xxiii., 37.

"If thou hadst known, even thou (Judah) at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! But now they are hid from thine eyes, (as a nation). For the days shall come upon thee that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, . . . because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation." Luke xix., 42–44. But if Jesus knew they could not receive him, and it was not the wish of God nor of himself for them to receive him, then we have the blessed Son of God speaking words of guile, and shedding tears of hypocrisy! May God preserve us from such a conclusion!

Now, if the foregoing be correct, that it was the pleasure of God for the Jewish people to receive Jesus at his first advent, we would ask, how many passages from the prophets can be found, that could not have been fulfilled under that order of things, that are now put by future probationists for fulfilment after Christ comes the second time? Will not this position test and settle this, question? Well, says one, concede this what then? We answer; there remains but the one question of God's obligation to fulfil the promises made to Israel and Judah. And that he does not consider himself under such obligation, appears to us evident from the fact that he devised, and spoke of another plan; which in our next we trust to be able to show will fulfil and absorb all the good and mercy intended under the first, to obtain a knowledge of which, we are mainly dependent upon the new Scriptures.

This will enable us with the apostle (Rom. xi., 33), to magnify both "the wisdom and knowledge of God;" who could turn such a stupendous failure to good account: opening a door of hope to us poor Gentiles, at the same time arranging to save some of Israel "if they abide not still in unbelief." Rom. xi., 23.

Screw, Up.

The following article, from the pen of George Barton Ide, D. D., containing some truthful and forcible ideas, I copy from a late number of the Watchman and Reflector, thinking it may interest some of the readers of the Herald of Life. A. Powell.

"A Little Brother that won't Unscrew."

In the family with which I reside is a five-year old boy, a great pet of mine, whose mind, like the minds of many larger boys, has lately been exercised about velocipedes. To possess one has been the very heaven of his desire. He has talked velocipede, and dreamed velocipede, and trotted out velocipede, morning, noon and night. Whatever the place or occasion, velocipede was always in the foreground of his thought and speech: and he has tried no small coaxing with his male friends to induce them to gratify his wish.

Until last week he was the only child of the household; but then a little brother came to join him in the nest. O, the wonder, and the mystery, and the rapture of the event to our five-year old! A little brother, coming from some dim, far off-land, into the loving arms which had hitherto fondled only him—wee and helpless now, but soon to grow to be his companion and playmate! O the strangeness! O the delightfulness! Velocipede passed swiftly away in the background, out of sight!

Yesterday, at breakfast, observing him full of the new theme, I said to him that if he would give "little brother" to me, I would buy him a velocipede. For a moment or two he pondered the question with the grave, intent look of a judge, and then, all at once, a flash of light broke over his face, like that which beams from the countenance of a statesman or a philosopher when some mighty problem has been solved. "No, he answered, "little brother won't unscrew, but a velocipede might."

The day before his sled had got "unscrewed," or in some other way fallen to pieces, and he had begun to have some vague idea of the breakableness, the unreliableness, and general tendency to get loose, of all man-made things. And so the fact that his little brother, fashioned by God, would not disappoint him in this repect, settled the matter, and gave to the tiny weakling a value beyond that of the most splendid toy which mechanic skill could produce. "A little brother that won't unscrew." The boy was right.

This quality of unscrewableness is of infinite importance in all departments of life, and especially in religion. The great want of our churches at the present day is "brothers," whether little or big, "that won't unscrew."

There is a vast deal of velocipede Christianity rattling around and breaking down among us. We desire to increase the number of professing Christians, a desire in itself commendable and holy. But instead of laboring to secure this object by deeper consecration, more intense personal effort, and a larger measure of active trust in the power of God's Spirit, we resort to artificial means, and employ some practised manipulator to conduct the operation.

The machinery is started, the wheels buzz, the steam hisses, the shop waxes hot, and out come the religious velocipedes, and go tearing away at a rate which leaves far in the rear all who have only the legs which God gave them, and threaten to outstrip the "White Horse" of the Apocalypse. Smash! halt! what is the matter? O, "there's a screw loose," and the rapid career is at an end. These manfactured, automatic Christians, are moved only by outside pressure; and when that ceases, they fall prostrate, and cumber with their dead fragments the path of living walkers.

And many, very many, whose religious character was formed, not by any outward force or mechanical process, but in the hidden laboratory of the divine Renewer, have yet become more or less "unscrewed." In all the branches of our Zion there are brothers, not a few, the screws of whose faith, and love, and zeal, have come out, and they are lying round loose and useless. One has lost the screw that attached him to his pastor; another the screw of the prayer-meeting; another the screw of the sanctuary; another the working screw; another the giving screw; another the screw of interest in the welfare of any church but his own. And O, what multitudes have lost or weakened the great screw of devotion to Christ and his cause! Look where we will, how seldom do we find a believer in whose religious experience there is not some broken bond dangling, impairing their symmetry, and barring their free outflow. And if we glance abroad over the entire host of God's regenerate people, what an awful "unscrewing" meets our eyes! We see different bodies of Christians, acknowledging the same Lord, sanctified by the same Spirit, and holding the same glorious faith, yet occupying positions of alienation and antagonism, because of disagreement respecting mere ritual or external order; while the broad, mighty links of their common fraternity are ignored or severed.

O, brothers of every Protestant name—brothers, because begotten by one Father, and washed in the blood of the One Son—screw up closer to each other! Screw up to Jesus, till your hearts touch his heart, and the hearts of all his redeemed. Screw up to truth, to purity, to love, to unity, till you become one compact army, pervaded by one soul, and marching onward with one impulse to the rescue of a perishing world.

A Curious Prayer.

The Syracuse Star is responsible for the following:

"In the State of Ohio there resides a family consisting of an old man by the name of Beaver, and his three sons, all of whom are hard 'pets,' who had often laughed to scorn the advice and entreaties of a pious, though very eccentric minister who resided in the same town. It happened that one of the boys was bitten by a rattlesnake, and was expected to die, when the minister was sent for in great haste. On his arrival he found the young man very penitent, and anxious to be prayed with. The minister, calling on the Lord, kneeled down and prayed in this wise:

"O Lord! we thank thee for rattlesnakes; we thank thee because a rattlesnake has bit Jim. We pray thee to send a rattlesnake to bite John; and, O Lord! send the biggest kind of a rattlesnake to bite the old man, for nothing but rattlesnakes will ever bring the Beaver family to repentance!"

A Matter of Choice.—The story is told that when Mrs. Judson and Mrs. Newell, the first female missionaries, sailed for India, some ladies in conversation expressed disgust with their decision to throw away their lives among the heathen. It was remarked, "They feel it their duty." "But I would not feel it my duty." was the prompt response. We may theorize as we choose, but that anecdote preaches a sermon that cannot be gainsaid. People manage to believe about as they try to. The fact is a terrible one for any but prayerful and teachable souls. Who cares to trust himself with himself?

Heathen Liberality.—A wealthy native of India has contributed to one of the great idolatrous festivals of the country, 80,000 lbs of sweetmeats, 80,000 lbs. of sugar, 1,000 suits of cloth, 1,000 suits of silk, 1,000 boxes of rice, plantains and other fruits. Another gave $150,000, besides an annual contribution of $50,000. Are the rich men in the Church as liberal in supporting Christianity?

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's [illegible] on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—" the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in thei order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. Earth, not Heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. The Soul Saved or Lost. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 5. Moral Depravity; by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 7. Doom of the Ungodly: or The Wicked Dead remain eternally under Death's Dominion. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 8. The Wages of Sin; by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. Letters to a Clergyman; or Life only through Christ not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. Finley, Pittsburg, Pa. Price 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are 16 pages octavo. They will be sold at $3 per 100, or, fifty cents per dozen, free of postage.

No. 9. The Essential Baptism; by the Editor of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price 7 cents.

Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2 20 a year or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658, NEW YORK

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the POST OFFICE, COUNTY, AND STATE must be given, and written plainly; and if a CHANGE is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters confusion and delay are inevitable.

LITERAL FULFILMENT OF PROPHECY.

WE now come to the inquiry—"Will the Gathering of Judah and Israel to the land of Canaan be before or after the advent?

In answer to this question several things must be taken into account.

1. Is there to be a gathering of the kings or warlike powers, into that land before the advent? It would seem there is. See Rev. xvi., 13, 14, 16: "And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty; and he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon." Compare this with Joel iii., 1, 2—"For behold, in those days, and in that time, when I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem, I will also gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for my people, and for my heritage Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted my land." Also Zech. xiv., 1, 2, "Behold the day of the Lord cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee. For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken—and half the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city." Ezk. xxxviii. and xxxix. seem to refer to the same thing.

1. Is Judah, or Israel, one or both, in that land at the time of this gathering of the nations? It appears Judah is, if not Israel. See Zech. xiv., 3, 12–14, "Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle. And this shall be the plague wherewith the Lord will smite all the people that have fought against Jerusalem; their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their holes, and their tongue shall consume away in their mouth. And it shall come to pass in that day that a great tumult from the Lord shall be among them; and they shall lay hold every one on the hand of his neighbor, and his hand shall rise up against the hand of his neighbor. And Judah also shall fight at Jerusalem; and the wealth of all the heathen round about shall be gathered together, gold, and silver, and apparel in great abundance." Thus it appears "Judah" is there. So also Ezk. xxxviii., 1–12, seems to teach the same thing. Speaking of that invasion, the Lord says—"And thou shalt say, I will go up to the land of unwalled villages; I will go to them that are at rest and dwell safely, all of them dwelling without walls, and having neither bars nor gates, to take a spoil and to take a prey; to turn thine hand upon the desolate places that are now inhabited, and upon the people that are gathered out of the nations, which have gotten cattle and goods, that dwell in the midst of the land."

3. Does all this occur before the advent? See Haggai ii., 6, 7, "For thus saith the Lord of hosts, Yet once it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land. And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come; and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord of hosts." Also, verses 20–22, "And again the word of the Lord came unto Haggai in the four and twentieth day of the month, saying, Speak to Zerubbabel, governor of Judah, saying, I will shake the heavens and the earth; and I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms, and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen; and I will overthrow the chariots and those that ride in them; and the horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother." Paul expressly applies this prophecy to the time of the second advent, Heb. xii., 26–28, "Whose voice then shook the earth; but now he hath promised, saying, Yet once more, I shake not the earth only, but also heaven. And this word, Yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain. Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably, with reverence and with godly fear." Here, the apostle appears clearly to state that the shaking is to prepare the way for that "kingdom which cannot be moved."

4. When does this shaking take place? See Ezk. xxxviii., 18–23, "And it shall come to pass at the same time, when Gog shall come against the land of Israel, saith the Lord God, that my fury shall come up in my face. For in my jealousy, and in the fire of my wrath have I spoken, Surely in that day there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel, so that the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the field, and all creeping things that creep upon the earth, and all the men that are upon the face of the earth, shall shake at my presence, and the mountains shall be thrown down, and the steep places shall fall, and every wall shall fall to the ground. And I will call for a sword against him throughout all my mountains, saith the Lord God; every man's sword shall be against his brother. And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone. Thus will I magnify myself, and sanctify myself; and I will be known in the eyes of many nations, and they shall know that I am the Lord." This shaking is after "the people are gathered out of the nations," etc. See verse 12.

5. The advent seems to occur after this shaking. See again Haggai ii., 6, 7. The order the prophet here gives is, First—"I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land, and I will shake all nations." Second—"And the desire of all nations shall come." It seems clear to us, the shaking is first; by which the kingdoms of this world are shaken to pieces—anarchy and confusion are universal—a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation—all nations, that is, those "left" of these wrecked nations, "desire" a deliverer, without knowing from whence that Deliverer is to come; but come he will, and it will be "the Lord from heaven," to establish the unmovable kingdom.

If this view is correct, then a portion of Judah, at least, must take up their abode in Palestine before the invasion by the kings—the invasion is before the shaking—the shaking is before or at the time of the advent. Two millions of Judah reside in a circle of twenty days' travel of Jerusalem. Russia and Poland have seventeen hundred thousand of them within that territory. It is easy to see it possible that the Emperor of Russia, as a matter of policy, stimulated by the desire to secure a stronghold in Palestine, might encourage his Jewish subjects to go there and settle; and it is possible that such a movement might stimulate England to send out her immensely rich Jewish population, to counteract the Russian policy, and France might do the same; and thus, suddenly, nearly the whole nation of Judah be gathered in Canaan, and the avarice of kingdoms overruled to accomplish the purposes of God. The Jews thus sustained by the most powerful monarchies of the world, would naturally be "dwelling safely without walls, having neither bars nor gates"—the natural result of having just returned, and feeling secure. But the jealousies of Russia, France, and England, would let neither of them sleep till they had formally possessed themselves of that land; and the desire to do so might lead at once to just such an invasion as is described in Ezk. xxxviii., Rev. xvi., Joel iii., and Zech. xiv.

Judah is to act a conspicuous part in the conflict with the nations. See Zech. xii., 1–7, "The burden of the word of the Lord for Israel, saith the Lord, which stretcheth forth the heavens, and layeth the foundation of the earth, and formeth the spirit of man within him. Behold I will make Jerusalem a cup of trembling unto all the people round about, when they shall be in the siege both against Judah and against Jerusalem. And in that day will I make Jerusalem a burdensome stone for all people: all that burden themselves with it shall be cut in pieces, though all the people of the earth be gathered together against it. In that day, saith the Lord, I will smite every horse with astonishment, and his rider with madness; and I will open mine eyes upon the house of Judah, and will smite every horse of the people with blindness. And the governors of Judah shall say in their heart, The inhabitants of Jerusalem shall be my strength in the Lord of hosts, their God. In that day I will make the governors of Judah like a hearth of fire among the wood, and like a torch of fire in a sheaf; and they shall devour all the people round about, on the right hand and on the left; and Jerusalem shall be inhabited again in her own place, even in Jerusalem. The Lord also shall save the tents of Judah first, that the glory of the house of David, and the glory of the inhabitants of Jerusalem do not magnify themselves against Judah." Judah, perhaps, may be first in the battle and in the victory, so that the royal house of David cannot boast over them. Let us here look at the ancient prophecy, Gen. xlix., 8–12, "Judah, thou art he whom thy brethren shall praise; [Who are his 'brethren?' The ten tribes, or Israel], thy hand shall be in the neck of thine enemies; [When? At the time the nations are gathered against them in their 'unwalled villages;'] thy father's children shall bow down before thee: [for his having been first in the battle and victory] Judah is a lion's whelp; from the prey, my son, thou art gone up; [an assurance of victory in this last conflict] he stooped down, he couched as a lion, as an old lion; who shall rouse him up? The sceptre shall never more depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, when Shiloh shall come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be." Such is the translation given to this last verse by some of the learned. This translation removes the obscurity and difficulty from this verse.

The doctrine we draw from Zech. xii., and Gen. xlix., is this: Judah is first gathered, and is in the battle, and finally victorious, after having suffered much, as noted Zech. xiv., 1, 2. This victory is by the special interference of God: Zech. xiv., 3, 4: Shiloh comes—puts an end to the controversy; after which he gathers "the people"—the ten tribes, i. e., the nation of Israel; and they are made "one nation" with Judah, "on the mountains of Israel"—one king is king over them all: and they shall "multiply," both "man and beast; and they shall increase;" and be "settled after their old estates," and "God will do better unto" them "than at" their "beginnings," see Ezk. xxxvi., 10, 11, and xxxvii., 22. Somewhere near the commencement of these things the resurrection occurs: precisely at what point we do not pretend to say: but, near the "shaking."

THOUGHTS ON PSALM CX.

BY R. CADWELL,

[Concluded from last week.]

IN regard to 1 Corth. xv., 27, 68, it will harmonize readily with other portions of the Bible on the specific theme, or two main ideas presented in them which, are embraced in the period of Christ and the saints entering upon their inheritance—the kingdom, the territory of the earth, and heavens, in their natural state, as they stand related to each other. First; by the removal of all hostile governments upon the earth. Second: the work of restoration of them to a primal state, with the left of the nations of every kindred, tongue, and people, freed from subjection to vanity, and subjected unto God, and all things ultimately made new, and God be all and in all. Of the all things put under him, his foes are destroyed; but the others subjected—rendering voluntary obedience.

There seems to be a difficulty in understanding the true position of the Son of man in another respect, namely, the Son of God is appointed a throne and a kingdom by the Father; and it would appear to be before he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, the Father. Not that his reign or kingdom would end at that time; but he was to sit at the right hand of power, or be upheld of the Father, till the work is accomplished for which he was sanctified and sent into the world to do.

This view would harmonize with the texts we have considered. The reason assigned, verse 27, why he shall put down all rule, all authority and power, and reign till all enemies are made his footstool is, For God has put all things under his feet.

This fact is proof, that the full purpose and work of the Father, by his Son, in subduing these, will be fulfilled; and all things be subjected unto him, and the Son also, himself, be subjected unto him who put all things under him, that God may be all in all.

It is worthy of remark, that here are things said to be put under Christ's feet, of which he is the Ruler and Lord, not yet subdued to his Father who put them there, but to be subdued; and this was to be done at, and after his coming, and making alive his saints; at least the martyrs, or first-fruits. Verses 23, 24, and Rev. xx., 4. The expression, "put under his feet," indicates that Christ is the Lord or Ruler of those "things." The Apostle evidently refers to Psa. viii., and the Psalmist clearly looks forward to the time when the purpose of God, as expressed to man in Gen. i., 26, 28, shall be fulfilled. That "the world to come" being put under Christ, the earth in its natural state will be under him, and man, or nations in the flesh, will be subjects of his kingdom and dominion, and will increase and multiply. One or two passages (out of many) may here be presented as proof. O ye mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit to my people . . . and I will multiply upon you, man and beast, and they shall increase and bring fruit. Ezek. xxxvi., 10, 11. And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave unto my servant Jacob, wherein your fathers dwelt, even they, and their children, and their children's children forever, and my servant David shall be their prince forever. Ezek. xxxvii., 25. This rule and kingdom is no doubt David's rule by David's Lord, on David's throne and kingdom forever. Psa. lxxii., 11, 12; Jer. xxx., 5–9.

The things here put under Messiah, 1 Corth. xv., 27, are obviously, not the saints made alive and immortal at Christ's coming; nor his enemies doomed to destruction, (as footstool) indicates, Psa. cx., and as verse 26 proves, but those who are to obey, being subjected to the Father; and the Son himself is associated with them in being subject to him who put all things under him.

These powers, or "things," are intelligent powers, or why should the Son be classed with them in obedience to God also? The question anticipated, and answered here, appears to be, Will Christ (his rule and kingdom) be subject unto God, or will he, in his reign and kingdom, be, and continue distinct from the will, and by the will of his Father? The answer is, the Son himself, also, shall be subject. I may have connected with the above question an inquiry of my own, which I will now try to answer.

In regard to this reign and kingdom, we read, "And the seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord, and his Christ, and he shall reign forever." This kingdom, at this state, would seem to be a joint kingdom. But it seems to be unending in some form of it; and thus we read, "Of the increase of his government and peace, there shall be no end upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom." . . . "The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this."

Here we learn that the Lord of hosts, himself, will accomplish this. Yet nevertheless, by the child born, and Son given, he will do it. Hence, the Apostle says, "To us there is but one God, the Father; of whom are all things, and we in (or for) him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him." Again, on this point, we read, "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father," when "all things that offend and do iniquity are gathered out," and done away.

This is their Father's kingdom, preeminently and supremely so. This is the eternal kingdom, in unity. Hence the great Head of the church taught his followers to pray (and as he prayed) "Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name; thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth, as in heaven." And the Father of mercies, and the God all grace, "who according to His divine power, has given unto us all things that pertain to life and godliness."

And in harmony with this, says the Son of his love, "Lo, I come (in the volume of the Book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God. Thy law is in my heart." "Who gave himself for the church, that he might sanctify and cleanse it . . . that he might present it to himself, (and thus to God) a glorious church." Which, when it is done, he may say to his Father, "Behold, I and the children whom God hath given me." "Thine they were, and thou gavest them me, and all mine are thine, and thine are mine, and I am glorified in them." "And he who sanctifieth, and they who are sanctified, are all of one." Saith the Apostle, "all things are yours, and ye are Christ's and Christ is God's." In the above quotations we have some of the forms of expression by which the heirs of the inheritance are presented to God, and delivered up, according to the fulfilled pleasure of God, to God.

We understand "delivered" here to mean, made over to, committed to—Webster's Dic. —Used in reference to God of whom it is said, He "spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all." It is to give up, to part with; and when Christ's work is completed for man in redemption and the earth, it is committed to, or made over to, or "delivered up," by the will of God, to God, even the Father.

And now we wish to obtain the view of the state of the earth, and its inhabitants, and the heavens also, as the territory in their natural and renewed state, as related to each other, in order to obtain the form of expression "shall have delivered up the kingdom to God the Father."

When God shall send Jesus, and he shall have "delivered up" to God the creature subjected to vanity in hope, from its bondage state of sin, suffering, and all evil; and death and hell have delivered up the dead which be in them, and death and hell be cast into the lake of fire, and the mystery of God shall have been finished; who shall say, these expressions, are not proper, and according to the eternal purpose of God, that he has purposed shall be done?

And as to the territory of the kingdom under the whole heaven, since this kingdom is now trodden under foot, as a rebellious province of God's creation, by hostile powers, the serpent's head of evil; and when these are destroyed, and this shall have been delivered up to God, by the Son of man, and made new, who will say, the Apostle's language has not been verified, "Then" shall Christ have "delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father, and the Son himself be subject to him, that God may be all in all?"

Right here, while the subject of these verses is before the mind, it may be well to consider the length of time this work of subduing will take up to the "end," when God is all in all.

The Apostle gives the time of Christ's second coming, and the order of approaching the "end;" or, gives "the end," (and either view amounts to the same, but we take the latter) and states what shall have been done at that point, from the event of his coming. He does not state how long—this work of subduing will last. But the evidence, on the face of it, shows it will be of considerable length; and upon the earth in its natural state.

Peter calls this period the "times of refreshing:" "the times of restitution." The Apostle, Christ's "times." The Saviour "the regeneration," in which the Apostles have the work assigned them of judging the twelve tribes of Israel. This is not in the new earth state evidently; for it is said, there shall be time no longer; but in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall sound, or begin to sound. The beginning of those "days," are marked by his "sounding." And these "days," evidently, cover the time of Christ's reign over the kingdoms of this world, in a state of subjugation, and until the mystery of God be finished, as he has declared by his servants the prophets. And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away, and there was no more sea. And that this reign is during the thousand years of the "lived, and reigned" upon the earth, who were made alive at Christ's coming. Rev. xx., 4.

CORTLAND, N. Y., March, 1869.

THE SIEGE OF JERICHO.

[Concluded.]

THE taking of Jericho was the first act in the grand drama of the conquest of the land of promise, and a brilliant illustration of the greater conquest of the saints to be achieved by a greater than Joshua, when he shall come to "strike through kings in the day of his wrath." Psa. cx., 5. And that the saints will participate in this universal conquest of all nations, is evident, for it is written, "Let the saints be joyful in glory. Let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a two-edged sword in their hands. To execute vengeance on the heathen, and punishment on the people: To bind their kings in chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron; To execute upon them the judgments written: this honor have all his saints. Praise ye the Lord." Psa. cxlix., 5–9.

There is a great work for the saints to do in the world to come. For, before the everlasting age of peace begins, there will be a short age of conquest. Christ will first reign, as the antitype of David, a man of war: then as the antitype of Solomon, a Prince of peace, when every man will again sit under his own vine and fig-tree. The saints are to be kings and priests, and will reign on the earth. They are, however, to be subordinate kings and priests, not after the order of Aaron, but after the order Melchisedec; and as they are to reign, they will have subjects (not saints), to reign over; and subjects (not saints), to officiate in the royal priesthood, too.

In the destruction of Jericho the harlot Rahab perished not, because she received the spies in peace. In this affair was fulfilled the promise of God to Abraham: "And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee."

She had bestowed a favor on the spies, the seed of Abraham, and obtained the promised blessing, which was life to her and to her whole household. See Matth. x., 40–42; Matth. xxv., 40–46.

I would next call attention to the Gibeonites, who had heard what had been done to the kings of the Amorites, and to Jericho, and they feared the God of Israel. So they came to Joshua, pretending, by various devices, to have come from a great way off, and that they lived in a far country, and desired terms of peace, giving themselves up as servants. And Joshua, without asking counsel of God, made a treaty of peace with them to let them live. But in three days after, hearing they were his neighbors, and that they lived near by, he made them hewers of wood and drawers of water.

It has been a question in the minds of some, whether this treaty was binding on the part of Joshua, inasmuch as it was made under false pretences. It is true, Joshua ought to have asked counsel of God. But as it was, the treaty is binding on his part. The men, fearing the God of Israel, gave themselves up as servants. What more can a sinner do? The Lord does not turn away sinners who come to him to serve him. And as to their coming to Joshua with a lie in their mouth, it is no worse than all sinners must do to live; that is, come to Christ with all their sins about them; for sinners cannot cleanse themselves: but must go to Christ as servants in order to be cleansed. They were made hewers of wood and drawers of water, and it is far better to get into the kingdom of heaven on such conditions than to perish.

It is frequently admitted that Israel, in crossing the Jordan, and entering the promised land, are a type of a people destined to possess the kingdom of heaven. It is not intended herein to decide this question. There is no need of it; for whether they are a type or not, the same parallel cases will again occur. Proof: "And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all nations, and languages, should serve him." Dan. vii., 14. "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." "Yea, all kings shall fall down before him; all nations shall serve him; for all nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest.

Though Joshua did not ask counsel of the Lord concerning the Gibeonites, yet it appears that the Lord recognized the treaty made with them; for, not long after, five kings banded themselves together to destroy Gibeon, the city of the Gibeonites, because they had joined the Israelites. And Gibeon sent to Joshua for help. And Joshua went up to help them, and the Lord was with him, and said unto him, "Fear them not, for I have delivered them into thine hand." This circumstance is a very important one. It discovers the divine principle that God is always willing to save sinners, whenever they are willing to serve him.

Beside the Gibeonites there were others not driven out by Joshua, or destroyed; viz., the Canaanites that dwelt in Gezer, the children of Kenite, the Jebusites, that inhabited Jerusalem; the inhabitants of Beth-shean and her towns; Taanach and her towns; Dor and towns; Ibleam and her towns; Megiddo and her towns; besides others mentioned in the first chapter of Judges.

So under Joshua there were many besides Israel to possess the land; and under Christ there will be some left in the land besides the saints. Proof: "I will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord." Zeph. iii., 8–20.

There seems among religionists generally a strange propensity to cling the [illegible] to that theory which consigns the greatest number to destruction, as though the highest intrinsic value of religion is, the more damned the better. But this is just the reverse of the pure mind of the Deity, who delights not in the death of the wicked, but is ever willing that they should serve him and be saved. So he has ever been in the past, and so he will be in the future. This is a natural consequence of his immutability; what he has done he will do under similar circumstances.

All that God ever required of his creature man is, obedience to his will; he, therefore, cannot, in divine justice, at any time in the future, prohibit the creature from serving him and being saved. It is a strange idea some have, that when Christ comes again, he comes, to close the door of mercy. Not so with Joshua on entering the promised land; he, while holding the sword of divine justice in one hand, with the other held the flood-gates of mercy wide open to let all in who were willing to serve his God. All admit this was right in Joshua. How is it, then, that some hate that in Christ which they admire in Joshua? Or, how is it that some do no not allow as much goodness and mercy in Christ as in Joshua?

I am aware that some of my readers will say, "O, what Joshua did was under the law, which was never intended to extend farther than to Christ, and now, under the gospel, these things are all different." But the gospel is a holy and divine thing, and, therefore, cannot make null and void a holy and divine principle, wherever it may be found. If it had not been a holy principle it would not have been incorporated into the law; and if holy, it cannot be eliminated by the gospel.

But it is indeed recognized in the gospel. What else can be the meaning of the texts already quoted, viz., Matth. x.; especially, "those who give a cup of cold water" to "one of these little ones?" Surely those who give the cup are not those who receive it, yet they are promised the reward of the "little ones," according to the preceding verses. And again in Matth. xxv., 40, and onward. In the fortieth verse there are two classes brought to view very clearly; the "my brethren" are one class, the righteous, surely; and the "ye that have done it unto the least of my brethren," are another class, and yet both are rewarded alike. In the forty-fifth verse the same "the least of these" (my brethren being understood), are one class, the righteous again; and the "ye did it not to the least of these," are another class, none will deny. And if there are two classes in the forty-fifth verse, there are two also in the fortieth. One is as evident as the other. Now all see clearly how one class are saved, but all do not see how the other can be. I will tell you: it is on the same principle that the harlot Rahab was saved: on the promise made to Abraham, "I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee." This principle is incorporated into the law and into the gospel; and were I not a Christian, I would not dare to be a Balakite, and curse Israel whom God has blessed. "Yea, and he shall be blessed." Here, for the present, let the subject rest, hoping to renew it again.

Z. CAMPBELL.

ASHTABULA, OHIO.

AMY JILLSON, Amherst, Mass., writes: I feel it a duty and privilege to write and let you know that I have lately seen the truth of Life only through Christ. Thank the Lord; it is truly the great crowning truth.

O, how plain it is. Why have I not seen it before? Why do not all see it? I feel that it is God's truth; or I never could have been so blessed in believing it. I do not believe in putting my light under a bushel or compromising God's truth. I must let the light shine. I can- see it all through the Bible. It is like travelling. One road leads to life; the other to death. If people will travel on in the road to death, rather than turn and walk in the way of life, they can have their choice. It is plain life and death (not two deaths) are set before us. Thank the Lord, this great truth makes everything plain and straight. I wish to have truth if I am all alone. God will be my friend. It is a strait and narrow way and few there be that find it. The path of the just will shine more and more till the perfect day. How I love the light that shines from God's word. I feel sad to see such things as come from conferences. How can Adventists be so much like the sects? My son, J. D. Bolster, opposed me a long time; but by studying to oppose he was led into the truth, and now rejoices in it.

Theology of the Bible.

The notice we took of an "Index" to this work we had received in manuscript from Chas. A. Hastings, two weeks since, we regret to learn has created the impression that he had them for sale, which is a mistake; but it has also brought to light the fact that there is a desire for a more full and perfect Index than has yet appeared, so that the various items could more easily be referred to than now. Br. C. A. Hastings writes us, if another is to be published he would prefer it should be more perfect and complete than his, as he only noted points of interest to himself, thinking it would be a help to what already accompanies the work. We find it so; and would be glad to see it revised, enlarged and printed. What might be the cost of it we cannot now say. If there is a general desire to have it done, the subject may have further attention.

Fools for Christ's Sake.

It is often said, as an apology for the wildest fanaticism, "we are willing to be accounted fools for Christ's sake;" it is right that we should be thus willing: let the world call us fools, or madmen, if they please, for truth and righteousness' sake; but let us bear in mind that there is a great difference between so walking with God as to excite the wicked world to call us fools, and our making fools of ourselves by throwing away common sense, and better judgment, and giving ourselves up to every vain and fanciful notion that may happen to chime with our present feelings and notions. If we give others just occasion to call us fools, we lay a miserable sacrifice on the altar, which gives a bad flavor, and does injury to the cause of truth and of God: but when we are called fools for Christ's sake, our ways please God; and men of sense will respect us, give heed to our influence, and commend our honesty and sincerity, though they may hate our godliness. L. B. C.

—Selected.

We clip the following "book notice" from the New York "Independent," a professedly Christian sheet, of the Congregational order. It says:

"The Swedenborgian church has made a valuable contribution to modern theology—less by the doctrines it has inculcated than by the influence it has exerted. It has leavened the church universal with a more living faith in the world of spirits, and has aided to restore the doctrine of regeneration to its proper prominence. So, on the whole, we are thankful for Swedenborgian literature, though we despair of comprehending it; and welcome such a series of sermons as William B. Hayden's Light on the Last Things, though to our minds it throws very little light on the subject."

So here we have an endorsement of Swedenborgianism on the ground, though itself incomprehensible, and throwing "very little light on the subject" of what the end is to be, it helps leaven the church with Spiritism! and strengthens "living faith" in Christ? no! but in "the world of spirits!" We are reminded here of an adage, homely but sharp, of "a hen raising chickens that pick out her own eyes." The church has nursed immaterialism; and spiritism in its various forms is seeking to destroy its foster-mother, who still clings to and helps on the delusion.—Voice of the West.

Albin Chandler writes from Batavia, Jeff. Co., Iowa: I left Cameron, Mo., in February, after I received the tracts, and distributed them to intelligent and interested parties. Came to this place in a wagon, over two hundred miles, with my family. It was a new and novel way to us; yet my wife enjoyed it much—it gave us good appetites and fine spirits. I stopped one day Corydon, Wayne Co., Iowa, and spoke to a very intelligent and attentive audience from 1 Pet. i., 3, and endeavored to show the love of God in sending Jesus and the importance of his death and resurrection in order to secure the life of the righteous from the perishing, animal condition. Had a free time and gave away many tracts; then left, praying my Father in heaven to bless my labor as seemeth good to Him. A young preacher took a deep interest: he is a very intelligent R. Catholic Prussian; he urged me to stay; also to come again. He promised to read the tracts carefully. There is also a very talented Eld. of the M. E. Church investigating the subject of the life and death theme. O how I love to see the truth prosper, and constantly pray for the final triumph. As ever, your brother in Christ.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MARCH 31, 1869.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

What They Say.

We copy the following item from the "New York Tribune" of March 27:

"The majority of the Second Adventists, at their late General Convention in Springfield, Mass., agreed on the general doctrine of the second coming of Christ soon, but concluded to give up trying to fix the time. They hold unanimously to another doctrine, which is gradually pervading all the evangelical sects, that the saints only are immortal, and that the wicked utterly perish, soul and body, at death."

We call this rich. We wish it was every word true. The last half comes very near the exact truth, but the word "unanimously," we are sorry to say, is not quite correct; yet we expect it will be in time. Another emendation, also, is necessary to make it perfect; that is, insert the words to be between "are" and "immortal;" so as to read "the saints only are to be immortal:" they are not now; they will put on immortality in the resurrection at the last day.

That the views held by Life believers are "gradually pervading all the evangelical sects" is a truth which it is useless for any one to deny. It is so both in England and America. There is no other refuge for evangelical Christians from the swelling flood of infidelity and spiritism which has been begotten in the foul pool of "inherent immortality." That doctrine has done more to bring religion into disrepute, and breed corrupting systems of irreligion, than any other and all other errors born into the professed church of God. Kill this monster error, and with it dies Romanism and all the corrupt systems which now disturb the moral atmosphere of Christendom.

The English Mind in Motion.

As long ago as 1844–5, we had imported several works from England and Scotland on the Immortality question, some of which we had reprinted in this country, and from others we extracted largely into the "Bible Examiner," which we were then publishing in the city of Philadelphia. Among others of these works was one by Archbishop Whately, late of Dublin. The works and the extracts we gave from them had a powerful effect in this country on many minds. For several years past we have had but little access to English literature on this subject. We are glad to avail ourself of an article on the question from a London periodical, for which we are indebted to "The Voice of the West." It commences as follows:

Immortality.*

Is man by nature an immortal being? To many readers the question doubtless appears strange and startling enough. We are so accustomed to be addressed from the pulpit and through the press as "immortal beings," and to be accredited with the possession of "never-dying souls," that to have the assumption of our natural immortality called in question, is at once a shock to our pride and an offence to our "orthodoxy." Yet, we are enabled to enumerate below ten separate publications,† ranging from the modest pamphlet to the octavo volume, and eight of them published within the last four years, in all of which we find this popular belief called in question; and that, be it observed, not by scoffing infidels, or materialist philosophers, but by clergymen of the Church of England, and Evangelical Nonconformist ministers, all of them, so far as their works enable us to judge, devout and earnest Christian men, sound in all the essential doctrines of the Christian faith, and who, without exception, make their ultimate and most reverent appeal to God's inspired word.

Are they right, or are they wrong? The question, be the conclusion what it may, demands a serious and satisfactory answer. It can no longer be quietly ignored as of little importance. It will not be stifled by the convenient but uncharitable cries of "heresy" and "rationalism." It is beyond all doubt a question of great and growing importance, just because it virtually involves the further question, "What is the nature and duration of the future punishment of the lost?" And he must be indeed blind to the signs of the times, who does not perceive, day by day, with increasing clearness, that around this latter question the boldness of modern speculation, and the remorselessness of modern criticism, are concentrating themselves in avowed hostility against the orthodoxy of bygone ages. Behind very much of the recent discussion on the nature of inspiration, and the divine authority of Scripture, lies this ulterior problem of human destiny; nor is it at all too much to say that there is, at the present moment, no question within the whole range of theological inquiry attracting such deep and earnest attention, even among the most orthodox Christians; nor one in reference to which religious opinion is drifting so widely and steadily. "A generation hence," says the Rev. W. L. Clay, incumbent of Rainhill, "educated Christians will be as incapable of believing in endless perdition as they now are of believing in the diurnal revolution of the sun round the earth."‡ And though this may be regarded as an extreme and incautious statement, it yet expresses with tolerable accuracy the opinion of many thoughtful and not irreligious minds. The question, then, presses; it can no longer, we repeat, be ignored; and to taboo it in a magazine like "The Rainbow," having "special reference to the revealed future of the church and the world," certainly seems a curious and not altogether creditable anomaly. Surely, none of us can be willing to admit that our faith in this matter, whatever it may be, is so delicate and fragile a flower that we fear lest the least wind of controversy should shed its petals on the ground; or of so volatile and inconstant an essence that it must be kept fast sealed in the dark vessel of a rigid dogma, lest, if the vessel be opened for examination, it should vanish at once in thin air.

"Sects and Denominations."

Under the above head, last week, we gave an item which, "in substance," had "been going the rounds from Maine to California, both in the religious and secular papers." This item we copied from the "Am. Presbyterian," not because we supposed the conference spoken of was guilty of the particular folly attributed to it, but to have all our readers and exchanges understand that we, individually, had no sympathy with conference resolutions or dictation in any form. We did not express any belief that the conference spoken of passed such a resolution as was attributed to it, and we are glad to learn it did not. It was not any particular resolution that we designed to speak against: it is the principle we oppose—the assuming the right to dictate what may and what may not be preached by those who believe themselves called to proclaim their views to others. A fine pass we have come to if men with the Bible in their hands have not the right to tell what they believe it teaches, and the people to judge for themselves, with that Bible before them, whether what is preached or taught is in harmony with the word, without some self-constituted body gravely passing resolutions against them, which, of course, are intended to cripple their influence by authority. Meet error with truth, not with resolutions. We meet conferences, with their resolutions, with facts. The facts are known and read of all men who know the history of the churches from the first centuries of the Christian era. Out of them came up Papacy with all its abominations: out of them has arisen the strongest opposition to any advance in knowledge of the Bible teachings in every stage of the progress of truth down to the present hour.

"Every one of us shall give account of himself to God." Rom. xiv., 12. But where is it written that any one of us shall give account of himself to self-constituted bodies, and be subject to their resolutions? Nowhere.

Our remarks last week have called out an article of some length from a brother who was a member of the Springfield conference, which, doubtless, is well intended, but which we regard as wholly uncalled for from anything contained in our article, besides being a misapprehension of several things to which he has referred. If he insists on making his article public, he can find some other medium to do so; then it will be time enough for us to notice his statements and give his name. We return him his article.

Devil—Satan—Demons.

The tract on this subject has been delayed longer than we expected, and is not yet ready for delivery, but is well under way and will soon go to press. Your orders for it will be filled at the earliest moment possible.

Good Counsel.

We take the following from an editorial of the "World's Crisis" of last week. We hope this good counsel may be followed by all parties concerned:

"We hope those who report conferences will be short as possible; for it is seldom that they contain anything of real interest to the most of our readers. We have many complaints about them. It is a matter of little consequence what the text was, so long as what was said about it is unknown. There are so many conferences held, if they are all reported, they will take much of the paper. Our readers are getting real tired of them. Instead of the resolutions, give the deeds. By this we mean we are always glad to receive short reports of any revival interest,—of any positive good accomplished. The reading of them produces a good effect upon the church. But do not send reports of bad things; we can get plenty of them without publishing them in our paper. The effect is bad—chilling, and tends toward backsliding, when we hear of troubles among the professed friends of Jesus. Love conceals instead of publishing."

Writers for the Herald of Life.

As a general rule, we desire such writers to state their own views on the topic they wish to present, without direct reference to other writers in the paper. Because a person happens to express a sentiment contrary to ours, that is no reason why we should call him by name in stating our views of an opposite character. We do not say it is always inadmissible to do so; but whoever is selected to take charge of the paper must use his discretion when to admit it, and when not. Several communications have been laid aside for this reason.

Another point. Do not send us long communications denouncing churches opposed to our views. Intolerance is often seen in such articles quite as unchristian as that complained of in the sects. "As much as in us lies,"—"let us in meekness instruct those who oppose themselves." We do not say we have always done so, but we strive to do it.

To Our Subscribers.

By some unaccountable mishap we lost one hundred and twenty copies of our papers last week, so there will be a large number of our subscribers who have failed to receive the paper of March 24. What we wish to say is to ask those who have received it, and do not care to preserve after reading, to favor us by sending it to us directed, "Herald of Life, New York City." Do not add anything to this direction. You will greatly oblige us by granting this favor, as we earnestly desire to supply such subscribers as we know have not had that paper. Remember the missing number is "March 24."

"Christian Separation from the World: Its Philosophy, Obligation and Extent. Considered with especial reference to popular amusements. By Rev. S. H. Platt, M. A."

We have received from the author, we presume, a neat pamphlet of fifty-two pages on the above subject. It is worthy of a careful perusal by all who wish to understand how far amusements are harmonious with true Christian character and responsibility, and what kind of amusements may be indulged in with safety to our spiritual interests and our influence on our fellow men. The author, in speaking of the "principles of Christian life," says they are three, viz.,

1st. Love. Proved by Matth. xxii., 35–40; John xv., 17; Rom. xiii., 8–10.

2d. Sacrifice. Indicated by the challenge which meets men in every invitation to discipleship: "If any man will come after me," etc.

3d. Purity. The temple of God must be holy. 1 Corth. iii., 16, 17; 2 Tim. i. 8, 9; 1 Thess. iv., 7; Eph. i., 3, 4; etc.

The points are dwelt upon at large, and must profit those who sincerely desire to be conformed to the will of God. On the "obligation" to separation from the world, we give the following extract:

"The moral repulsions of the soul from sin begin with the first breathings of Christian life. As in the physical economy, the nerves of sensation report instantly to the brain any unpleasant impression made upon them, so the soul recoils instantly from sin when by its change of nature the impressions of sin become painful to its exalted sensibility. Hence, the obligation to be separate from sin must coexist with its sanctified instincts, and must therefore be immediate. Besides, the yearnings of love to save others commence with its first implantation in the heart. Those yearnings indicate its mission—not a work to be wrought in some far-off future, with means not yet at command, but one that should begin now, and with the appliances that may be at hand. A duty lies at the opening door of every hour, and the mission of the love-consecrated heart is to gather up every one and sheaf them safely for the harvest time. The great, restless, improvident world, pleasure-dazzled and self-pampered—tramples the golden grain ruthlessly beneath its feet, and recks not for the morrow. To mingle with its pressing throng is to be swept along—powerless for good—and add the tramplings of your gospel-shodden feet to the mire that buries your blood-bought opportunity out of sight.

"See yonder crowd of excited rioters, filling the street from curb to curb, and borne along by the resistless pressure of thousands in their rear. In that surging front are men of noble instincts and humane impulses. There is, perhaps, here and there, one who started upon some errand of compassion to the destitute, the sick or dying, but they have heedlessly joined the crowd, or been caught in its mighty surgings, and now they are swept onward by the tremendous undertow of passions which are not theirs, and purposes which they disown; and now of what avail are noble instincts, kindly feelings, and compassionate purposes? The jaws of the whirlpool set their deadly gripe upon the men. Their good is whelmed and lost in the boiling sea of phrenzied passion which rages around them. As well kiss the tornado into quietude, or beckon the tempest-tossed deep to rest, as hope that their good will not be felt and seen. No! no! their good is lost. Worse, they actually swell the crowd! and whatever power there may be in example has been perverted to the worst of purposes.

"So, Christian, is it with you? Christ has heard your cry for help, as you were being trampled down by the on-rushing billows. His hand has lifted you, and his miracle-working grace might have held you even there; but 'Be ye separate,' is his command, that your new-born instincts may find a sphere of exercise, and your example may not belie your purposes. Separation is your immediate duty."

In relation to things in which we should be separate from the world, we give the following extract:

"This separation from the world precludes all degrees of unnecessary business, recreation, or amusement, which become sources of motives to neglect Christian duty, or abate the fervor of their heartfelt performance.

"The reader will note that this law says nothing of one amusement as distinguished from another, but applies to all alike. It contains a simple, practical test, by which any person may determine for himself what is justifiable. Suppose, for example, that some devotee of the theatre or dance, unconvinced by all the foregoing argument, should try this simple experiment, viz.: Coming home from the theatre at twelve, with his mind filled and saturated with the excitement of the stage, let him bow at his bedside in private prayer, and carefully note whether something does not whisper, 'Be short, you're tired;' or whether the fervor of closet devotion is not sadly cooled by the unseemly intrusion of ghost or assassin from the stage. Or let the wearied dancer go to her room at three, and divesting herself of the gay attire of the ball-room, and taking a last peep at the mirror, solemnly bow down and plead for God's blessings, and see whether the inspiriting music of the violin does not drive angel whispers from her heart, or nature's drowsiness does not bring the listless amen into the middle of the heartless prayer.

"So of mere innocent diversions, that which steps between you and devotion, or spreads the wet sheet of heartlessness over the kindlings of Christian desire, is wrong—always wrong—in nature, or in degree, or in both."

The following sentiments we most heartily approve. Speaking of disgraceful compromises with a dominant spirit of wrong, the author says:

"The time-serving plea, that 'It is not popular to be identified with these radicalisms,' is a kind of moral poltroonery that we will not mar our pages by characterizing as it deserves.

"Christian associations should make sentiment; not yield to it. God give us men! Men who can look temptation in the eye without blinking. Iron-mailed men, who can stand and let the bolts of earth crash against their plated sides, and fall harmlessly at their feet. Self-reliant men, who can stand up straight and tall amid the pliant obeisance of the crowd, and in the peerless royalty of right, disdain to bend. Men whom the fires of opposition and the prolonged heat of the conflict only crystallize into purer types of manhood, and more lustrous forms of virtue. Men of cool heads and firm hearts, who can suffer and endure; who dare to do or to defy!

"God give us such men! Then will the cause of righteousness move with the stately steppings of imperial triumph, and the world will yield to its conquering might!"

Let Life believers profit by such sentiments as are contained in these extracts. This last extract we commend especially to the attention of all. Such are the men we need in the great Life cause now advancing, and which is destined to triumph, though now despised and ridiculed by many mistaken good men.

The Resurrection.

A correspondent of a western religious journal, speaking of the doctrine of the resurrection as held in the society to the interests of which the paper is devoted, gives the popular opinion as entertained by many, "not a few of them the most enlightened and gifted," and says "many others not a whit behind the class above mentioned, understand the Scriptures to teach that a spiritual body only, will be raised from earth to heaven, and will pass at once from this mortal body to the judgment seat of Christ, there to receive the welcome message, 'enter thou into the joy of thy Lord,' or, 'depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels.' These also take comfort in contemplating this view of the subject." The writer says, also, that both classes believe "the clearly expressed and well established doctrine of the resurrection."

It is a "well established" fact that the Scripture doctrine of the resurrection is a resurrection to life of the dead. If, therefore, the theory of any ignores a revival to life of that which dies, he does not believe the "well established doctrine of the resurrection." Paul said that what "some man will say," is "how are the dead raised up?" not how does a living immateriality go from earth to heaven; and his reply is "the dead shall be raised incorruptible." Mankind neither have nor are "spiritual bodies" until that which goes into death a "natural body" is raised from that state a "spiritual body." It is absurd in the extreme to claim that an individual cannot die, and yet insist he will be raised from the dead. Life from the dead through Jesus Christ, the Life-giver, is the gospel glad tidings.

Where in the Bible is there such a resurrection spoken of as an immortal spirit passing "from this mortal body to the judgment seat of Christ?" No such transaction is represented in Scripture as ever taking place. The writer says the wicked experience the same resurrection, and receive from the Lord the terrible command, "depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire." This he believes to be a banishment into eternal, literal fire, and declares that Christians "take comfort in contemplating this view." Such ones must be thoroughly instructed by false "teachers, having itching ears," for surely they are little "learned in the school of Christ." Over Judah's city, doomed to destruction, Jesus wept in bitter anguish; but these Christians "take comfort in contemplating" sinners thrust into everlasting torments. No better evidence could be afforded that they believe man rather than God. "I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God."

The language quoted by the amiable correspondent as proceeding from the throne of God in heaven, is represented by our Saviour as occurring in connection with the judgment scene, "when the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him," when he shall "sit upon the throne of his glory." It is at the judgment of the nations "gathered before him" that he shall say to the righteous "come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you," and to the wicked "depart from me, ye cursed," etc, No judgment is represented as taking place in heaven. Christ is to judge in the great day, and he does not yet possess his throne, but sits with the Father on his throne. The judgment seat of Christ will be his throne established at his coming, upon the earth, the theatre of all the judgment scenes spoken of in the Bible.

Saith the Lord God, "My people have committed two evils: they have foresaken me, the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water." Jer. ii., 13. How much behind God's ancient and erring people, the Jews, are professing Christians of to-day in forsaking the Lord, and hewing out unto themsel[illegible] cisterns that can hold no water? They [illegible]tlessly turn from the inspired word, that great reservoir of the sweet waters of truth, and quaff with delight the loathsome, poisonous draught prepared for them by the "Mother of Harlots." When will professed followers of Jesus learn humbly and trustingly to accept the word of "the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep?" When will they learn to know their "frame," that they "are dust;" and that if they have no life from the dead, they perish absolutely.

Prophetic Events.

A pamphlet of forty-four pages entitled "Coming Events," etc., by the Rev. John Baillie, B.D., rector of Wyvenhoe, Essex, has recently been published in London, England. The February number of the "Signs of our Times" contains some of its most important thoughts, from which is selected the following on prophecy and its fulfilment:

Some years ago, I stood, one day, on Mount Sion; and, with a stalk of barley in my hand, which had been plucked from its furrowed slopes, I read that prophecy—given when the mountain was well-nigh covered with palaces—"Sion shall be ploughed as a field"—Mic. iii., 12. The divine oracle was fulfilled to the letter before my eyes.

Another day, in Jerusalem, I saw some masons erecting a church whose foundations, though the original city stood upon a plateau of rock, had been laid fifty feet deep in the vast mounds of rubbish; and, turning from the building, I looked at that Scripture—also written in the days of her splendor—"Jerusalem shall become heaps," Mic. iii., 13. Again the oracle was accomplished literally before my eyes.

A third day, I wandered over the smooth sand-covered hill on which erst had risen the proud towers of Gaza; and, among the broken remains of pillars which here and there could be detected in the loose sand, I pondered the oracle of God—"Baldness is come upon Gaza."—Jer. xlvii., 5. Another prophecy, uttered when the city stood yet in its glory, was fulfilled not less literally before my eyes.

A fourth day found me sauntering amidst the handful of shepherds' tents which now were scattered among the imposing ruins of Askelon; and, opening my divine guide-book, I read—"Askelon shall be forsaken, and the sea-coast shall be dwellings and cottages for shepherds, and folds for flocks."—Zeph. ii., 4–6. It was yet another oracle accomplished to the very letter.

A fifth day, I rode ankle deep in the street of the poor fishing village of Sur—the site of the seaport of the once magnificent Tyre; on the neighboring rocks I saw the fishermen's nets spread out to dry: for miles along the shore, I searched in vain for some well-defined fragments of the ancient city, finding only a literal of naked rock. And, as I gazed on to those scenes, I listened with awe to the voice of the Seer, as in vision he had stood surrounded by all the city's grandeur—"Behold, I am against thee, O Tyrus! I will also scrape her dust from her, and make her like the top of a rock. It shall be a place for the spreading of nets in the midst of the sea. I will make thee a terror; and thou shalt be no more: though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou never be found again, saith the Lord."

—Ezek. xxvi., 3, 5, 21. Once more the divine Word was fulfilled before me to the letter.

Day after day, I traversed that strange land, finding it vacant, without a people,—whilst everywhere in other lands I had left behind me innumerable Jews—a people without a country. And I read—"Ye shall be plucked from the land whither thou goest to possess it; and the Lord shall scatter thee amongst all people from the one end of the earth even unto the other."—Deut. xxviii., 63. Yet again the oracle was accomplished literally before my eyes.

In the presence of these most distinctive prophecies, and of those not less distinctive fulfilments, I found myself arrested by two other singularly distinctive prophecies concerning Israel's future.

The one was—"Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land; and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel: and one King shall be King to them all; and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all."—Ezek. xxxvii., 21, 22.

And the other was—"I will bring again the captivity of my people . . . and I will plant them upon their land; and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God."—Amos ix., 14, 15.

I knew that neither of these prophecies had as yet been fulfilled;—not Ezekiel's, because never, since the death of Solomon, have the two kingdoms been incorporated into one; and not Amos's because never yet have the Jews been restored so as not again to be scattered. I had before my eyes, moreover, that one people, preserved through so many ages as a distinct nationality without a country; and I had not less vividly before my eyes that one country kept for so many centuries without a people. In the view of these two dovetailed facts of God's Providence, and of those so explicit declarations of God's Word, what other conclusion could I come to, but that the Jews are yet to be restored literally and nationally to their land? If such correlative certainties of God's Word and of God's Providence could he resolved into a myth, as reasonably might not all history be spirited away into a like myth?"

A Favorite Argument.

"If the wicked do not have a resurrection from the dead, to die again, then they are punished no more than the righteous are; or, in other words, the righteous dead will suffer the punishment of the wicked dead until they have a resurrection."

At first, such an argument, which is advanced to support the theory that all the wicked dead must be raised, to die again, looks plausible. But a careful consideration of the nature of man, his obligations to God, and the penalty for transgression, must eventually proveto every thinking Christian that the foregoing argument is without weight.

We read that "we are flesh:" that "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God:" that we are "by nature the children of wrath:" that "death hath passed upon all men, because that all have sinned:" that "the wages of sin is death." It must be admitted that if Jesus had not died for the ungodly, that no flesh would have been saved, but that all would have perished.

I am amused and astonished, too, to hear Christians advance the favorite argument we are noticing. They are troubled for fear that the wicked will suffer no more than they do. Come on, Christians, and answer a few questions: Are you the righteous or the wicked? "The righteous, to be sure." Are you better than cursing John over the way there? "Yes, indeed! he does not love the Lord, and we do." Did you ever lie, or steal, or curse and swear, or commit adultery, or worship idols, or covet, or do any other such like things? "Well, to be candid, we did use to do all those things and more, too." Then you have been as wicked, and perhaps more wicked than "cursing John?" "True, some of us were at one time more wicked than he."

Next, let me ask you what you think of young Mr. D.? "Oh, he is a very moral man." Is his character as bad as yours was? "No: though we know that he is a sinner, yet his character is above reproach." His outward deportment is excellent, and he seems to be possessed of many of the finest traits of character. "All very true."

My questions must take another turn here. Are you righteous naturally? "We must confess that we are not." Does God consider you righteous naturally? "No, no: we know he does not." Does he consider Mr. D. to be a righteous man? "No: for he has never called on the name of the Lord." Ah! that is an opening that I desire to improve; before you found peace in Christ, how did you feel? "Lost, lost, without hope." When you were under conviction for sin did you feel that you were better than Mr. D. or "cursing John?" "Oh, no: we felt that we were the chief of sinners." How did you feel when you realized that your sins were forgiven—that you were a great deal better than those two men I have referred to? "We felt that we were brands plucked from the burning."

All that is excellent. Please do not forget that you are sinners saved by grace: that God does not have mercy upon you because you are better than somebody else. No, you are empty, begging sinners, trusting in a full Saviour. Whatever is the sinner's due, naturally is your due.

It is true all die; but the impenitent sinner dies out of Christ; while the penitent sinner dies in Christ. At the last day the latter is raised up again, while the former remains in the congregation of the dead. "Cursing John" and moral Mr. D., unless they call upon the name of the Lord, must remain in death forever. But all liars, thieves, robbers, harlots, adulterers, coveters, cursers, swearers and murderers, as well as moral people, who call upon the name of the Lord, forsaking their sins, shall have a resurrection, and will then be children of God, being the children of the resurrection. The same love that pardons the most guilty who repent, and calls them "children of God," leaves the others in the dark chambers of death eternally.

Do not think about how much you have suffered like the wicked; for you, by nature, deserve all that they do; but think of the eternal weight of glory that is in store for repentant sinners. There is a vast difference between a resurrection and no resurrection; between eternal life and eternal death; between the silence of death and the pleasures of life; between a rotting carcass and a glorified body; between endless light and endless darkness. Yes, dear Christian friends, it is the redemption from death, silence, corruption and darkness that is vouchsafed to us, and not to the impenitent.

Look away from that which we have in common, for awhile, to those exceeding great and precious blessings that are in store for us. I, a poor sinner, saved by grace, am but too glad to rejoice in God, my Saviour, that he has taken my feet from the horrible pit, and given me an assurance by his Spirit of deliverance at the last day. I do not ask concerning the wicked, "And what shall this man do?" I deserve immortality no more than he. He too may come if he will. If he does not turn he must suffer ETERNAL death; if he turns he shall "NOT DIE ETERNALLY." The righteous then will not die as the wicked do. These few thoughts from one who has been purchased by Jesus' blood.

Queries.

Why did King James' translators render the Gr. Gehenna "hell" in the New Testament in every instance (twelve times) where it occurs, and yet not so render its corresponding word in the Old Testament once out of the thirteen times where it occurs there?

Why have they always rendered the word "the valley of Hinnom" in the Old Testament and nowhere so in the New?

Why have they rendered Sheol, which occurs in the O. T. sixty-four times, "grave" thirty times and "hell" thirty-one times?

Why have they rendered its correspond ing word in the New Testament, which occurs eleven times, "hell" ten times, and "grave" but once.

Why have they rendered the original, "the gates of the GRAVE," in the O. T., and "the gates of HELL," in the N. T.?

Why have they rendered Psa. lv., 15, "Let them go down quick into HELL," and in Num. xvi., 30–33, "go down quick into the PIT."

Why do so many of the readers of the popular version believe that hell is populated by living persons, when the same version tells us that in the future "death and hell (delivers) up the DEAD which (are) in them?"

Why do they believe that hell is the lake of fire, when the same version tells them that "death and hell (will be) cast into the lake of fire?"

A multitude of other queries might be propounded—but this may suffice for the present. Who will answer? Yours in Christ.

"Himself:" A Word to Believers.

BY W. T. TURPIN, M. A.

I have been greatly delighted of late in contemplating the blessedness of being engrossed with Jesus; and one effect that the many questions, strifes about words, vain janglings and contentions which beset one on every side, have had, is to drive me closer to Himself. I desire to recall the scattered and bewildered minds of saints from everything else, and to present before them an object that is worthy—oh, how worthy!—of their entire, constant, continued attention, adoration, and praise. The Lord help me to write what He has taught me "concerning himself!"

It is exceedingly blessed to observe the prominence which that one word "HIMSELF" has all through the word. If the Holy Ghost would direct the thoughts to the cross, that great judgment of sin, Calvary, the place of life though the place of a skull, it is by presenting "HIMSELF," and hence it is in 1 Peter ii., 24, "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, . . . . by whose stripes ye were healed." Beloved, the centre of it all is Jesus—it is "His own self" it is "His own body"—it is "His stripes!" Oh, blessed particularity and specialty! How sweet to the heart it is! The same thing is to be observed in Isaiah liii., where it is all "Him," "He," "His,"—the Holy Ghost would fix the undivided, undistracted gaze of my soul on "Jesus Himself" as my perfect sacrifice!

Again: He has finished the work, He has endured the cross, and sin—that mighty barrier standing in the road of the sinner's return to God, is taken out of the way; the mountains of my guilt, yea, "the tops of the highest mountains" of mine iniquities, having been "covered" by "the blood of Jesus" the Saviour rises from the dead. The grave could not detain him. He rises, he bursts the bonds of death, for it was "not possible that he should be holden of it." He presents Himself to his disciples, who, with blighted hopes and scattered prospects, are terrified and affrighted. All their hopes had been laid in the grave of Jesus, never again, as they thought, to rise. Consequently, when He appears, He causes fear and affright among them. And how does He reassure their hearts? What is the plan He adopts to restore their confidence and peace? He presents himself, saying, (Luke xxiv. 49,) "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself." Then, (ver. 40,) "He showed unto them his hands and his feet;" mark, beloved, "His hands, his feet." Still it is "HIMSELF;" it is not even a clear announcement of the proofs of what He was; it is not a recalling to their minds that He had taught them these things. No, beloved, precious as this would have been from His lips, there was something yet more touching, more melting, more convincing, and that was—presenting himself—"Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself." How blessed is all this!

But there is a step even further in this blessedness, for we find the Gospel by John ends, leaving the disciples and Jesus together, leaving them with himself. In the 21st of John, Peter is restored, and then, when fully restored and reinstated in office, the blessed Master says,(ver. 19,) "Follow me." John, we are told, was seen by Peter "following." Well, when Peter inquires of the Lord about John, the reply was, "What is that to thee? follow thou me." Here we see again the blessed Lord would have the mind engrossed with himself.

And now that He has come and gone away, and that we, his poor weak ones, are left in a world that disowns and rejects him, what has He left us to cheer our hearts, to occupy our souls, to feed our hopes? "Himself." "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also:" (John xiv., 3:) and so in kindred words of comfort does the Holy Ghost console the Thessalonian saints in their sorrow: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout. . . . then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them, to meet the Lord in the air." . . . . If our past be himself, if our present be himself, our future is also himself, and "so shall we ever be with the Lord."

Oh, the exceeding preciousness of all this! It is truly "Jesus only;" and well may we sing—

The bride eyes not her garment,
But her dear bridegroom's face.
I will not gaze at glory.
But on my King of grace;
Not on the crown he giveth,
But on his pierced hand.
The Lamb is all the glory
Of Immanuel's land.

Beloved, may the Lord deliver us from every object that would seek to intrude itself into the place he himself ought to have in our hearts! The devil is not wanting in skill and stratagem to draw the minds and affections of the saints to various points which are indeed connected with Jesus, but which are not "himself," and to make these (right and proper in their place) the all-absorbing subjects for the mind; and when he succeeds, what is the result? A manifest chill among the dear saints of God, a coldness which must ever be the consequence of having any object but Jesus next the heart. May the dear Lord Jesus Himself give us all the grace to abide in that happy place, of which we sometimes sing—

Oh, that I may, like favor'd John,
Recline my wearied head upon
The dear Redeemer's breast:
From care, and sin, and sorrow free,
Give me, O Lord, to find in Thee
My everlasting rest."

—Dublin Tract Repository.

Settled at Last.

My faith in the doctrine of eternal torment became seriously jostled about two years ago. I determined to investigate the subject, calmly and thoroughly. My all-absorbing desire was to know the truth, however it might affect my preconceived opinions. I was willing to believe in the doctrine of endless misery, or renounce it, according to its agreement with, or opposition to, the word of God. I resolved not to cherish a theory because of its popularity, nor reject the truth because of the rabble cry—"Away with it!" I well knew that majorities are quite as apt to be wrong as right. The richest veins of gold have always been hidden from the popular eye. I determiued to be very cautious and deliberate in drawing conclusions, well knowing that every inch of ground would be boldly contested. I prayed earnestly that God would lead me into all truth. I felt that I could well afford to stand on God's platform, whatever it might be. Though chiefly concerned to know the teaching of the Bible on this subject, I yet availed myself of such helps as came in my way. I secured and read the strongest works I could find, on both sides of the controversy, concerning the doom of the ungodly. Of course I found real arguments on each side, worthy of serious and prayerful consideration. But I was soon struck with the paucity of Scripture evidence to prove that millions of sentient beings will be immortal in misery. The overwhelming tide of testimony seemed to bear on the other side. I gathered up the strongest possible objections against the total destruction of the wicked, to see how formidable an array could be made. I found many of them could be easily demolished, and perhaps all of them made to harmonize with God's purpose to "burn up" the wicked, "root and branch." For two years I have been compelled to admit that the doctrine of endless torment is so terrible in itself, that no man should be expected to believe it without an array of evidence in its favor that is absolutely overwhelming. Such evidence I do not find. If two or three passages can be fairly disposed of, there is scarcely a word in the Bible that would ever suggest the doctrine of interminable woe. On the other hand, there are scores of passages that point strongly and clearly to the final extermination of all the wicked. What is the safe and sensible mode of harmonizing Scripture in such a case? Must the few be made to agree with the multitude? or the multitude with the few? Evidently the general tenor of scripture teaching must decide the case. I am compelled to yield the point. "Let God be true." For months I have felt the force of the argument, and regarded the evidence as unanswerably strong and clear. And yet old ideas and impressions would linger around.

But the chains are severed at last. The clearing-up shower descended a few days ago, while on my knees pleading with God for light. I am fully convinced that the devil and all his works will yet be destroyed; and the universe of God, so terribly marred by sin, will rise up out of the smoke and ruin, free from every element opposed to purity and love. O enrapturing thought! Transporting prospect! Glorious consummation! Eternal triumph! The plan of redemption will yet be a grand success! Millions of redeemed ones will be crowned as trophies of amazing grace; and all who would not come into the glorious plan will be accounted useless rubbish and cleared out of the way by the raging fires which God will kindle in the day of the sinner's doom! Praise God for being such a God! Praise him for devising such a wondrous plan of recovering mercy! The Bible possesses new charms. Harmony is restored. The last spot is removed from the shining face of the sun. Hallelujah! I shall henceforth be a happier man!

An Extract:

FROM WHITTIER'S SNOW-BOUND.

"Alas for him who never sees
The stars shine through his cypress trees;
Who, hopeless, lays his dead away,
Nor looks to see the breaking day
Across the mournful marbles play?
Who hath not learned, in hours of faith,
The truth to flesh and sense unknown,
That Life is ever lord of Death,
And Love will never lose its own!"

If we may substitute the word Christ in place of the words Life and Love, the above lines beautifully express our belief.

But this author's idea of immortality is the current one, and his discerning mind does not accept the truth that immortality is the gift of God, and to be obtained through Christ, who came to bring it to light.

Verily this crowning truth of "future life only in Christ" is a stumbling stone, a rock of offence: "To the Jews a stumbling block, to the Greeks foolishness." But this stone, which the builders combined to reject, will yet be the head of the corner.

Dear friends, let us set this light on high, that it may enlighten all under our influence. Let us repeat it with the mirror of our means, and seek the Divine blessing on our efforts. Then shall we be glad when the Master comes, his rewards with him: and we shall see the fruits of our labors.

Christ's Return to Earth.

"And again, when he bringeth in the First-begotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him."—Heb. i., 6.

The marginal reading of this text is no doubt the correct one: "And when He bringeth again the first-begotten into the world, He saith, Let all the angels of God worship Him." The word "again" refers back to the first advent, and implies that the coming here foretold is that spoken of as the "second;" "again" denotes sequence, and does not allow of a previous coming between this and the first in lowliness, and so making this a third instead of the second. Then the Lord Jesus, as the risen one or "the first begotten from the dead," "the second Adam," will be introduced by the Father, as Jesus foretold when on earth (Matt. xvi., 27) in visible majesty. At this glorious appearing, not merely a multitude of the heavenly host but all the angels of God will worship Him. These words are quoted from Psa. lcvii., 7, which Psalm clearly proves that at this very manifestation Christ will judge his enemies and take possession of the earth. With this agrees 2 Thess. i., 7, "revealed from heaven with all his mighty angels."—B. W. Newton.

From Mrs. Frances D. Andrews.

East Boston, Mass., March 22, 1869.

Br. Storrs: Through your kindness and the blessing of God, the Herald of Life is received every week; for which I am thankful. I am very sorry I could not do more to help carry on the printing of it and the tract fund; but with God's help I expect to do more. I love the cause of truth. I found that I had long enough been reading the Bible in a spiritual way, and by so doing I could not understand scarcely any of it; and as regards the wonderful plan of redemption, I understood but a small part of it, but now, thank God, I can see Jesus Christ the elect, or chosen way purposed for our redemption from everlasting death before the world began. O what love had God for us when he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him might not perish but have everlasting life. I rejoice that my heavenly Father has put it into the hearts of his servants, in these last days, to bring forth from his treasure things new and old.

Since my husband and myself began to search the Scriptures for ourselves, we have found it altogether a new book to us; and we are trying to get others interested in believing these precious truths; such as the inheritance of the saints in the new earth; man mortal and dependent upon the Life-giver for a future life. How important that all should see these glorious truths, and the destruction of the wicked. The view that I once held of God's keeping poor sinful men and women in eternal fire in his holy presence, to burn forever and ever, why it was dreadful to think of; and I had no peace night or day on account of the fear I had of that dreadful punishment. When I would be trying to praise God, my praise would turn to groans and tears for my friends and neighbors; I do not wonder that many have lost their reason who held this dreadful view. Now I thank the blessed Saviour that I see the wages of sin is death; not life in misery and pain. I can work now for those who are out of Christ, and do it without such dreadful feelings; and when I think that God will, in his own good time, bring out his truth triumphant over error, my heart rejoices.

There are a few in East Boston and Chelsea who believe in no life in the future out of Christ: and we have hired a small hall at different times and held our meetings. There have been meetings at Brother Potter's, also at our house. Brother Moses Young, of Chelsea, is trying, with the help of the Lord, to spread these glorious truths in these parts. He has been wonderfully blessed in East Boston; he can see the fruit of his labors. He can remember when there was none of our faith but himself. Now there are several who praise God with him that they ever saw the wages of sin is death. And in Lynn he has been laboring, and there people receive the word with gladness. The good seed has also taken root in Chelsea. May it be watered of our Father in heaven, and bring forth fruit. Oh that we could see our brothers and sisters willing to have us come in with them, and grant us a hearing on this precious truth; but they will not, as yet. This looks to me as it was in the church that I united with when my husband and myself received light on Jesus' coming to remove the curse and to reign with his people on the earth. We felt it our duty to tell our brothers, sisters, and neighbors about it; but in the church they would not have it spoken of; and when we praised God that man was a mortal being, and that it depended on our being in Christ in order to obtain immortality at the last day; when, if in the grave, we would be brought forth immortal. This glorious truth was called damnable heresy. So we could not go in with our old friends and those we loved and proclaim it. So it is now, with our own people, in some places: they do not want us to tell what we have found so precious. When we held our meetings we invited them in with us, and they could speak as they believed and we could do the same and love one another with brotherly love. But I am sorry to say, they will neither come in with us nor let us go in with them, unless we hide our light under a bushel, and I do not think that any of us are willing to do that. We are willing to go, and pay as much as we are able to help sustain a place to meet in to hear the word of the Lord; but we will be free men and women. We have been bought by our blessed Saviour with his most precious blood and set free from sin and everlasting death; and if He has set us free, we are free indeed.

Brother J. S. Potter has been one of God's children, who has labored for years in East Boston, and tried to keep a little band together; but now, on account of his having introduced this view of man's being a mortal being, he finds his old friends and brethren are against him, so that they will not unite with him in holding meetings; but I thank God that if all the world forsake us we have a friend who sticketh closer than a brother. Br. Potter's work is not limited to East Boston; he can go abroad as he has done this winter, and spread the truth, trusting in him who has promised to give the increase.

I read with deep interest all the letters in the Herald; and I see that this truth is spreading and I rejoice. Let us take courage. Soon the Master of the vineyard will be here, and we will receive our reward.

From William R. Warner.

North Cambridge, Mass., Mar. 28, 1869.

Br. Storrs: I have just been to church (North Avenue Baptist), and heard a sermon on the resurrection. It was excellent; but not one word in the whole discourse referred to the resurrection of the wicked. This is as it should be. About six weeks ago I lent our yastor your work, "Life from the dead," which I think he must have read and pondered, for I never heard a discourse before on this subject handled in this way without some reference to the wicked. They seem to be left out altogether, as I think they ought to be. I am satisfied that these Campaign Documents are doing a great work; they lead people to "search the Scriptures," at least. A work on the resurrection is much needed; a tract not lengthy but to the point, which shall uproot the mortal resurrection theory, and show up the true teaching of the Bible on this important and fundamental doctrine. This is about the starting point of the error of our opponents. Will do my part toward getting out such a work.

The Lord has sent us another little responsibility, for which I am very glad. This makes us eight children living, one boy and one girl are dead, which makes ten in all. Our history is a little curious, and I sent a note of it in yesterday's paper. They cannot say that we do not keep up the number. Yours, in hope.

Note by the Editor.—The following scrap from the "Cambridge Chronicle" of Saturday, March 27th, is what Br. Warner speaks of at the close of his letter:

They Cannot Exterminate Them.—A lady on Cottage street, North Cambridge, last Saturday gave birth to a daughter, being the tenth child of a family of five boy and five girls, and, singular to relate, the lady is the oldest of a family of five boys and five girls—also the father is the oldest of a family of five boys and five girls, and a lineal descendant of John Rogers, the Martyr, who was burnt at the stake in England by the Romanists for translating our English Bible.

P. H. Wolfenbarger, Burr Oak, Iowa, writes: Having read the Herald of Life considerable, I have become quite absorbed in its grand and glorious truths. It advocates what appears to me to be the only sound doctrine taught in the Bible: it brings out the glorious fact that "God is Love." It was the love of God in sending his Son to die for the whole death-bound race of mankind; and when Christ found the race locked up in eternal death, if we believe on him, he will open the prison and take us out; if we do not believe, we will have to abide the consequences—lie eternally in death.

A letter from Florence says that it is proposed to hold a meeting of "the Freethinkers of the whole world in Naples, which is to assemble on the same day that the Œcumenical Council meets at Rome. Count Ricciardi, having written to inform Garibaldi of the project, has received a short reply, in which the General says, "May God bless this holy enterprise." The terms of the reply appear to have disconcerted the "Freethinkers" somewhat, and the narrator of the incident consoles himself with the reflection that it is impossible Garibaldi can have invoked the Almighty "in the same sense as the Pope or Antonelli." The prayer of Garibaldi is not half so cautious as that of the infidel sailor in a shipwreck, who cried out, "O God, if there is a God, save my soul, if I have a soul!"

"THE LORD FULFIL ALL THY PETITIONS."

BY MARIANNE FARNINGHAM.

WHENE'ER thou bendest silently in fervent thought of worldless prayer,
And dare not even breathe aloud the impassioned wish which none may share—
The want which burns as secret fire—God grant to thee thy heart's desire.

Whene'er from thy blanched lips shall come the startled cry of human pain,
Of grief that cannot be controlled, of tears and labor
 spent in vain,
The Lord come very near to thee, and hear and bless and answer thee.

When thou art weary and alone amid the dark and silent night,
And no loved voice shall bid thee hope, no kind hands
 lead thee in the light,
God listen to thy whispered prayer, and make thee
 happy in his care.

When a dear name is on thy lips, and thy great love has made thee bold
To ask God's richest, rarest gifts, his hidden wealth of gems and gold,
O, not in vain thy prayer shall be, for God, thy Friend,
 will answer thee.

When, knowing best the highest joys, thou dost not ask for wealth or fame,
But with strong heart and earnest eyes, pray, "Father, glorify thy name,"
God hear thee when thou thus shalt call, and grant thee this best boon of all.

And though the answer come by fire, in storm and darkness and unrest,
In strife of life and pain of soul, O child of God! thou shalt be blest,
No matter what may else betide, if God by thee is glorified.

So in his mightiness of love, God thy petitions all fulfil,
And (we would not dictate to Him) in ways according to his will,
Give thee always thy heart's request, until in him thy soul shall rest.

Children's Department.

LITTLE AMY.

"LOOK here, little one; where are you going? You should not be on the street alone."

Little Amy looked into the motherly face of the questioner, but she did not answer. She was a bashful little thing, only four years old. She scarcely looked three, she was so little.

"It is growing dark," continued the kind neighbor. "It will be night soon, and then you will get lost. Run home, that's a good girl."

"I is going after my papa," said the child.

"Oh! no; you can't find him. See how full the streets are. The horses will run over you. Let me lead you home to your mother. Your papa will come pretty soon."

She took the little cold hand in hers, but the child pulled it away, and pushing past her, ran rapidly down the street.

"Ah! well," said the woman, taking up a heavy basket of clothes that she had set down on the sidewalk while speaking to little Amy, "I have no time to run after her. She must take her chance. I hope she'll come to no harm, for—There! she's gone into Meg Quillan's rum-hole. She's after her father—the drinking wretch! — letting his family starve, and he earning more than any man on the street!"

The woman was right — little Amy was looking for her father; and, young as she was, a mere baby, she knew where to look for him.

He was sitting before the fire in the low drinking-house, half stupefied with the liquor he had taken since finishing his day's work. He was a large, strongly-built man, with an easy, careless manner, and a disposition almost hopelessly obliging. We say hopelessly, because it was this same amiable trait of character which made him an easy prey to the liquor-seller.

The rumseller, in this case, was a big, noisy Irishwoman, with a very red face and a very dirty cap. She had a loud, harsh voice, which was not at all mellowed by her own frequent visits to the demijohn. There were a number of men and women in the room, going through the various stages of intoxication; some silly, some sullen, some quarrelsome.

But the man before the fire, little Amy's father, sat apart from the rest, and did not seem to see or hear anything about him.

"Don't go to slape there, my man," said the landlady, giving him a rough push. "Ye'll be pitchin' on the stove next. Move, an' ye're alive, till I set off the kettle."

Little Amy stole noiselessly into the room and crept up between her father's knees just as the huge dinner pot was set on the hearth. The cover was half off, and the child, who had eaten nothing all day, gazed hungrily into it, with an intense longing for some of the contents. A large head of cabbage was simmering on the top, sending its appetizing odor out into the room, and giving a pleasant reminder to the fortunate idlers who happened to have any suppers of their own to partake of. They began to leave for their various homes, but little Amy's father did not stir. He knew that all his earnings—and they were not small—were spent in that vile room, and that the cupboard at home was empty. So he sat still.

Little Amy leaned over his knee to get a little nearer to the dinner-pot, and then—can you blame the baby-thief?—she reached out her poor little hand, and with her tiny fingers picked a bit of the cabbage.

A heavy blow from the woman's strong hand would have sent her headlong on to the hearth, if her father had not caught her.

"I'll tache ye to stale, ye beggar's brat," screamed the woman, catching hold of Amy's arm, and shaking her in spite of her father's hold on her.

He started up from his seat with a defiant look on his face that she had never seen there before. The man's soul was aroused.

"Let the child alone," he said. "Touch her again if you dare. Can ye no see that the lassie is starving the day?"

"An' who is to be blamed for that same, Terence Maloney? Who but yourself, ye born fool?"

"You say true, Meg Quillan," said the man, reaching for his hat, and buttoning his coat as he spoke. "An' it's the fool's wages as has paid for your cabbage this many a day. I'll do it no more. Coom, Amy, wisha; there'll be a cabbage for yees at home after this; and mate, too, I'm thinking."

A derisive laugh followed him as he took the child in his arms and strode out of the house.

"He'll be back for his dram directly," said the woman, laughing. "It'll be a long day before he'll go to bed without that."

But he did not come back. Day after day passed by and Terence Maloney did not once cross the vile threshold. Not a word did he say to his wife of his good resolutions. He watched her going and coming to her work with a worn and discouraged look on the face which was so bright and happy but six years ago; but he said nothing to cheer it until Saturday evening, when his wages for the week were paid.

Then, after sending home food and fuel, he entered his door with a feeling that he had recovered in part his lost manhood, and had a right to speak. Little Amy met him first. "O papa!" she exclaimed, "there's such a heap of good things come. But mammy says they can't belong to us."

"Arrah, but they do belong to us, alannah. They're all yer own, Norah dear," he said to his wife, who was drearily looking at the different packages—"ivery one o' them. The paper yon has the big cabbage for the dinner to-morrow. Ye'll not need to stale it, avick."

Amy clapped her hands, such little, pale hands, and laughed gleefully.

"Ye need not spare, Norah," he went on. "There's work in me arm and the will in me heart. I'll kape ye both illigantly, niver fear."

"Oh! thin, Terence, man," said Norah, bursting into a fit of mingled laughter and crying, "I'll jist die wi' joy."

"No, ye won't, nor of want aither; you'll see. It's the bit lassie's doing."

And then he told the mother the pitiful story of little Amy's theft and punishment.

"I'll no' let you starve to buy cabbage for Meg Quillan, the mane old critter!" he said, in conclusion.

There was not a happier home in America than was Terence Maloney's on that Saturday night. And it is pleasant to record that it was no transient reform which he experienced.

It is two years since he has entered a drinking-house, notwithstanding many a tempting offer of whiskey for nothing if he would return to his old corner at Meg Quillan's.

There is not a neater home in the town than the one-story cottage which he rents now, but intends to own.

Norah lives at home like a lady, as she declares. There is no more going out in the cold mornings to wash for other people. She finds plenty of pleasant work at home; for little Amy has a baby brother now, who is the delight of her heart. He is a big fellow for a baby, after the pattern of Terence, his father —too heavy for her to lift, but a perpetual fountain of joy notwithstanding.

Best of all, her parents lead her quietly into the house of God on the holy Sabbath, and listen themselves, with unquestioning faith, to the saving truths of the gospel of Christ. This is the sweet promise of their future.

I tell little Amy's story as I heard it myself, not a week ago, from a warm-hearted Irishwoman, who is my friend. She is unlearned, and I have been obliged to translate her brogue into plainer English, but I have given you the facts of the story without alteration.—The Methodist.

HOW IT COULD HAVE BEEN:

AND HOW IT WILL BE.

[Concluded.]

BEFORE stating the new order of things, we wish to notice two objections which naturally arise. 1. What will you do with the prophecies which relate to the rejection of the Saviour? We answer, that whatever God foresaw concerning the course of that people he did not suffer it to abate his desire for their acceptance of the proffered good even till the last moment of his long suffering was expended; for if at any time in their probation they had turned unto him he could have pardoned and blessed without doing injustice to any other party. This may be illustrated: A father buys for a beloved son a farm with excellent improvements, proposing after a certain time, if he conducts himself well, to make him the possessor in fee simple. To his sorrow however in a short time he finds him spending his substance in riotous living and debauch; while the estate goes to ruin. He remonstrates, he rebukes, he portrays the good to come from amendation of life, but to no avail: he beholds the ruin of his son, he speaks of it, and is compelled to give the estate in charge of strangers: leaving him but a small part of his former privileges, thinking thus to stir him to duty; finally he limits the time of his occupancy if there be no improvement; still his heart yearns over his boy: he begs, he entreats, and would gladly reinstate him in his inheritance at the very last moment, and finally when he sends him away he weeps over him saying, O my son! my son! would that thou hadst known, even at the last, "the things which belong unto thy peace! This is what I foresaw would certainly come as the result of your ways." Such has been the experience of many a kind father, and it is quite a faithful picture of God's dealings with Israel from the first till as a nation he would regard them no more. It was a grief to God to give the empire of earth into the hands of a beast, however noble (the lion). It was a necessity created wholly by circumstances which he could not control on the principle of man's free agency.

2. How would immortality have been brought in, in case of the Saviour's acceptance, seeing that the law pointed to a sacrifice, and redemption from the grave is to be by virtue of Christ's resurrection? We answer, according to present light it would have been as now, by the death and resurrection of Christ, because death was in the world before Abraham, and the "Word of Life" which was "made flesh" was promised immediately subsequent to Adam's sin.

Many suppose that Israel must needs be just as wicked as they were in order to bring about the death of the Saviour. This is far from the truth. Seeking the Saviour's life was their culminating sin: and Peter plainly tells them: "Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, (whereas ye should have left it for others to do;) and by wicked hands have crucified and slain;" Acts ii., 23. Moreover, his death even with all the wickedness that surrounded him was purely voluntary, as he said, "Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father." John x., 17, 18.

"Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels?" Matt. xxvi., 53. So his death and life would have been none the less efficacious had his life not been hunted by Jewish officials. This fact may remove the fear that many have, that Israel's faithfulness would have prevented God from manifesting a perfect Saviour. But at what time God would have raised the dead and glorified the living, if Israel had been obedient, the record does not state; no more than in case of Adam's obedience, for the "times" were changed again. Probation would have gone on in the flesh with Israel as well as with all the nations round about till a time appointed of God. Here we can see how the "sucking child" could "play on the hole of the asp" in the kingdom of God over Israel; and the "weaned child put his hand on the cockatrice's den." They would have been there by natural generation; by which we can see these sucking "little immortals" which some speak of, are not in God's plan.

The question now comes up, what of the new programme? We answer, in some respects similar and in some very dissimilar. We will briefly notice some. 1. The dissimilar: a. Jesus being rejected at his first coming necessitated his going into heaven, so instead of sitting on his own throne while the gospel invitation went forth to the Gentile nations around, he had to sit with his Father in His throne. b. Instead of Israel being the evangelists to the nations, a "royal priesthood" was instituted from among all all peoples chosen and ordained by the Holy Spirit, which are to preach the "gospel in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and and then shall the end (of Gentile nations) come," Matt. xxiv., 14. c. The house of God, instead of being "called of all nations the house of prayer," was in the days of our Lord made "a den of thieves," (Mark xi., 17;) and instead of Jerusalem being the throne of the Lord and the glory of all kingdoms through the Gentile times, it has been "trodden down of the Gentiles," which will continue "till the times (gospel privilege) of the Gentiles be fulfilled (ended)." Luke xxi., 24. d. Instead of the Gentiles coming in through Israel or the Jews, ("ten men of all nations shall take hold of the skirt of a Jew, saying, we will go with you; for we have heard that God is with you,"); the "middle wall of partition" has been "broken down:" (Eph. ii., 14;) so now the descendants of Jacob must come to God as the Gentiles come, by faith in the despised Nazarine, or find themselves without a Saviour in the last day; for now "there is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus: and if ye be Christ's (in the manner prescribed), then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs (of the land) according to the promise." Gal. iii., 28, 29. But there "is a great gulf fixed" (Luke xvi., 26), over which very few of Jacob will pass, and hence will be ground to powder beneath the "rejected' stone. Matt. xxii., 44. e. Instead of a gradual restitution of all things, till the earth would have been as the garden of God, the purgation of evil will be by "flaming fire" according to 2 Peter iii., 10–13, after which a new order of things will attain—a world—"wherein the righteous will dwell." Not but there will be wicked nations when Jesus comes to reign and plant his kingdom; but the "door" of preparation for the kingdom is "shut" then, according to Matt. xxv., 10; and the nations, instead of being evangelized, become as chaff and pass away—no vestige left— according to Dan. ii., where the new programme is eliminated in outline. 2. The similar. a. In the order of the kingdom there will be some likeness: The Revelator saw when all evil had passed away (Rev. xx.,) and the city of God in all its splendor occupied the site of the promised land, that the nations (people "ek—out of all nations" Rev. vii., 9) walk in the light of it: and the kings (over the "saved") of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it." Rev. xxi., 24–26. Again, "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions—margin, rulers—shall serve and obey him." Dan. vii., 27. From these texts we glean that the Lord will count when he writeth up the people (in the future, as he would have done), "that this man was born there," (Psa. lxxxvii., 6); so that all peoples will occupy the land of their nativity, and over them will be rulers or kings who will lead when they go up from time to time to see the king (Jesus) reigning in Mount Zion; to this agreeth: "in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall set in the throne of his glory, ye (twelve apostles) also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. ix., 28; Luke xxii., 29, 30. b. The duration of the kingdom. c. In the literality and materiality of all persons and things, and in the docility of all inferior creatures.

We wish now to cite two visions, one from the old, and one from the new scriptures, to show how the new plan fulfils and absorbs the old: Ezk. xi. to xlviii. inclusive, contains his vision of a city which "was round about eighteen thousand measures." It was four square, and the length of each side was equal; it had twelve gates, three on each side, and in them the names of the twelve tribes of Israel. In this city was the house of the Lord, and from under the threshold "waters issued out" which became a river of healing, and on each bank of this river were very many trees, which bore fruit every month; the fruit for meat "and the leaf thereof for medicine."

The vision also disclosed an altar for slain sacrifices with all the appointments of the rituals of the Levitical priesthood, beside dwelling-places for the priests as well as for the prince.

A little while after our Lord ascended into heaven, he received a revelation from his Father, which "he sent and signified by his angel unto his servant John:" among other things, John saw that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God. The measurement of this city was twelve thousand furlongs, it was four square, and each side was equal, with a wall one hundred and forty four cubits high. It had twelve gates, and on them the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel. In this city was the throne of God and the Lamb, out of which proceeded "water of life," and on the banks of this river was the tree of life which "yielded her fruit every month, and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." See Rev. xxi., and xxii.

But John said of this city, "I saw no temple therein:" he makes no mention of an altar for slain beasts, nor place to roast and boil their flesh, he heard nothing of the revival of the Mosaic ceremonies; but he heard the benediction that was pronounced upon all that had done his commandments; for they had "right to the tree of life," and were permitted "to enter in through the gates into the city."

The points of similarity in these visions are so marked, as to leave no doubt in our mind that the second was given in room of the first. Please notice: 1, The city; 2, the form thereof; 3, the number of gates; 4, the names of the of the twelve tribes written on the gates; 5, the healing or living waters; 6, the tree of life on each bank of the river; 7, the monthly fruit; 8, the healing properties of the leaves of the tree; 9, the city was the residence of the prince. Are these many points of likeness merely by chance? Can any one thus conclude? Do they not rather stamp the last as being in room of the first, reflecting the same great purpose, only in an advanced stage of completion?

As to the dissimilar, there was no temple, no Levitical priesthood, nor intimation of its service, while there was an addenda of the twelve apostles, of glory, riches and power: just the difference we expect between the past and eternal age.

Again, what is still more significant, the vision of Ezek. was, according to Usher, 574 years B. C., and while Judah was in captivity to Babylon; and hence was in keeping with the order of things that then existed; while on the other hand the vision of John is chronologically fixed by events now transpiring as being just before the church to-day.

The Revelator saw the career and consumption of the "harlot," and heard the song of praise over her desolation and burning, and straightway bids the church rejoice; "for the marriage of the Lamb is come." With these facts before us beside the fact, that all the discursive prophecies point to this as the time for the resurrection, which of these cities and attendant circumstances shall the church of to-day look for? We are to have one or the other; we can have but one at a time; for there is too much incongruity to locate them both at the same time. If we say Ezekiel's, the hope of the church must be deferred: if John's, Ezekiel's will never be built. The great apostle sided with us when he told the Hebrews, ye are not come to Mount Sinai; but to Mount Zion, the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem.

Now, dear reader, do you not see how God's great purposes of mercy, grace, and good will, spoken by the prophets to come upon Israel and Judah, and through them to Gentiles, he has incorporated in the new plan, beside adding glory, power and riches, as this vision clearly sets forth; thus bringing in a state of things which is as much superior to the first, as immortality is more excellent than this mortal stay?

We conclude by saying: God had a purpose to people this earth with never-dying obedient subjects, and he has carried forward this purpose against all the machinations of evil, devising and planing according as circumstances indicated. We believe this purpose is near to be consummated in the resurrection and translation of the saints, and in the destruction of his enemies. A world in revolt so long has grieved him sore. When the strife has ended, God will be glad; and from all lands thanksgiving and "the voice of melody" will arise while the first-born reigns gloriously in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem.

Then will mother earth put off her weeds of mourning, and dressed in her loveliest bridal robes roll on in space, freighted with the choicest that ever lay in her bosom.

A DOLLAR AND A THOUGHT.

A FEW days ago, one of God's faithful stewards, a man endeavoring to glorify his Heavenly Father with his substance, and to lay up treasure in heaven, made this remark to me: "I sat down a night or two ago, and calculated the increase of a dollar at compound interest, and found that, in less than two hundred and forty years, it amounted to more than two millions and a half of dollars. And I asked myself whether God would not make a dollar laid up for him grow as rapidly as it does by the laws of trade."

The arithmetical calculation, and the transfer therof to the field of beneficence struck me.

"Yes, my brother," said I, "we need hardly doubt. The word of the Lord is: 'Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven.' He has also said: 'He that hath pity upon the poor, lendeth to the Lord, and that which he hath given will he pay him again. The laws operating in the spiritual world must be, at least, as certain as those which operate in any other department of the universe. God is more able and willing to pay his debts than men are to pay theirs. You would not have my money as a loan without paying me interest, and God is more nobleminded than man. How certain and emphatic is the promise that he will pay it again! I have not the least doubt, dear brother, that in two hundred and forty years from this day, you will find every dollar you have laid up for the Lord worth more to you than two and a half millions of dollars. And, then, there is this to be thought of about the matter: if you put out your dollar on receipt, you must be certain to collect your money and its interest every year, and every year find a responsible borrower for the amount. When you give to the poor you lend to Lord, who keeps the accounts, and does the compounding for you."—Dr. Deems.

A DIVINITY DOCTOR WASHING SHIRTS.

"MR. DEMOND'S William's College Alumni Address contains this incident:

"After the battle of Antietam, a gentleman passing over the field of blood, saw a man washing at a brook; as he came near, he recognized a doctor of divinity, the pastor of one of the largest churches in Philadelphia, and a delegate. Said he:

"'Doctor, what are you doing?'

"The doctor straightened up, and pointing with his finger, said:

"'Over yonder are six hundred wounded men; most of them lying in the bloody shirts in which they were wounded. Our shirts are out, and we shall have none till to-morrow morning; so I thought I would take a few of the worst out here, and wash and dry them in the sun. Do you think there is any harm in it?'

"Said the gentleman:

"Doctor, I know God has blessed you abundantly in your work in Philadelphia, but I do not think the Master ever looked upon any act of your life with more pleasure than upon this.'

"'I believe it,' saith the doctor, and turned to his washing."

RITUALISTIC.

DEAN Boyd has been dealing with the Ritualists. In a sermon in Exeter Cathedral, he compared the errors of Ritualism to the religion of the ancient Pharisees. The Ritualists, he said, gave strange interpretations of the obscure mysteries of symbolism; they advanced reasons why a church tower should be built square, why the spire should point upward, why the presence of the Redeemer could not be found among His people unless there were two lighted candles upon the Communion table. Symbolism had passed into superstition. Error permeated the minds of the Pharisees; they passed from the religion of spirituality to the religion of ceremony and skepticism, and they scrupled not to put aside God's commandments. So it was in the present day. Just in proportion as men leaned upon ceremonies so far they forsook religion. Leaving spirituality, they were content with an easy life of ceremony. To mistake ceremony for religion was only to mistake bodily exercise for spiritual emotion. Instead of putting value on ceremonies, let them in God's name pay the inward homage of the heart to God.—London Watchman.

PRAYER is ever profitable: at night it is our covering; in the morning it is our armor. Prayer should be the key of the day, and the lock of the night.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the LIFE-GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. BY GEO. STORRS. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity," as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.—Immortality; The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEO. STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. POST D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. POST took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—" the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in thei order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION; in which the true teachings of the BIBLE is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED, OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY; by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY; OR THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN; by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTERS TO A CLERGYMAN; or Life only through Christ not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburg, Pa. Price 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are 16 pages octavo. They will be sold at $3 per 100, or, fifty cents per dozen, free of postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price 7 cents.

Unless attention is paid to all these matters confusion and delay are inevitable.

THE IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL:

AND ITS TRANSMIGRATION: THE ORIGIN OF THE DOCTRINE, ETC.

BY MARK E. GREEN, NEW YORK.

THERE has much been written on this all-important subject. I say all important, because the doctrine of the immortality of the soul invalidates the inspiration of the word of God and gives the lie to the gospel, which declares that "life and immortality are brought to light through the gospel."

Again: It makes the God of love the greatest tyrant that can be conceived of by mortal man. It drives thinking men to discredit the Bible, and others into restorationism; not only man but every creature that ever had a being, even the devils. The great Bishop Newton says, "To suppose that God, who knew the end from the beginning, would bestow existence on any being whose destiny he foresees and knows must terminate in wretchedness and misery without recovery or remedy, without respite or end: Imagine a creature, nay imagine numberless creatures, produced out of nothing, delivered over to the torment of endless ages without the least hope or possibility of relaxation or redemption: Imagine it you may, but you can never seriously believe it nor reconcile it with the goodness of God."

The bishop was in a predicament: he had been examining the different views set forth, and when he came to the doctrine of "annihilation" the thought chills his very being, as the most horrible of all belief. He finally gives his views. He sends the immortal souls to prison in company with the devils, to be chastised as a parent punishes a child until he repents and becomes obedient, and then they will be restored to the kingdom of heaven—devils and all the creatures that ever had an existence. He claims that men can repent in hell and backslide in heaven.

The bishop was no respecter of persons, and therefore the devil must undergo a chastisement and finally be sent back to heaven from which he fell. I think if the bishop is right we had better make friends with our enemy, the devil, as he is to be our companion in the future life; and when we pray, say, "Good Lord, Good Devil." . . "have mercy on us, miserable sinners."

Again: this doctrine not only drives men into all these foolish notions, but it causes the greatest distress and torture of mind. Take your place beside the couch of a dying parent, who really believes the orthodox views. See the anguish and torture of mind of her children, without hope of escaping this horrible place; and perhaps her dear companion whom she had buried, who died without hope; a kind good companion, over whose grave she had dropped the burning tear. Soon she expects to be carried into "Abraham's bosom," and casting her eye across the gulf between her and the beloved companion of her bosom, who is crying for one drop of water to cool his parched tongue, and she unable to grant him the least assistance. I say, could she enjoy herself even in this life, let alone a future one, with that cry ringing in her ears, from that place of torment? Could there be "fulness of joy" in such a condition? The heart sickens at the thought; and yet how many have died with all these imaginations on the mind.

I have given a few thoughts on the evils to which this horrible doctrine has driven men. I now purpose to trace it to its origin, and notice a few prominent characters that have been the means of filling the whole world with this dogma, and how it came to be a prominent doctrine of the professed Christian church.

Wm. Howitt, a celebrated historian, an Englishman, an opposer of priestcraft, determined to find its origin and trace it down to his time (he died last year, 94 years old) which he published years ago. It is headed, the "History of Priestcraft." In his first chapter we find the fact stated in these words—"But before they were thus scattered (speaking of the dispersion of men over the world from the building the tower of Babel) they had corrupted the religious doctrines they received from their great progenitor, Noah; or rather had set them aside in order to deify Noah and his three sons, whom they had come to regard as a reappearance of Adam, Cain, Abel, and Seth. The singular coincidence of circumstances between Adam and Noah forced this upon their imagination. Adam the first man and father of the first world, and Noah the first man and father of the second world, had each three sons conspicuous in history; and of these three, one in each case was a bad one: Cain and Ham. Led by this to consider the second family but an avatar (denoting the descent of a deity, or soul, in a visible form or incarnation) of the first family. They regarded them as immortal and worshipped them. From hence we have in all Pagan mythologies a triad of principle gods; one of whom, are in each case, in a deity of a dark nature, like Cain and Ham."

Here we find the first corner stone of Priestcraft built upon the immortality of the soul, laid soon after the flood. It is the best argument that I have ever yet seen put forth to prove the soul's immortality. But I expect that if the authorities had arrested Ham and accused him of killing his brother, Ham would have said, "You are mistaken; I am not the man, for they are yet alive." But this coincidence was sufficient to prove that the soul never died.

I am reminded of Dr. Watts, who claimed that the soul has nothing to do with the life of man; but that the soul can leave the man and visit some other place and the man still continue in his daily avocation; and he quotes Paul's being caught up to the third heavens as proof of his theory. (See Watts' logic). To enter into all the absurdities that have grown out of this foolish idea, that a man is more alive when he is dead, would make so many books, as the apostle John said, that "even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written. Amen."

The next prominent teacher of this doctrine was Pythagoras, a Roman citizen by adoption, who flourished 524 B.C.; a celebrated philosopher. He taught "metempsychosis, or transmigration of souls; which he made one of his chief tenets." He was finally, after his death, made one of the Gods to whom the Romans bowed the knee. He was born in Samos, in Grecia. He flourished about seventy-five years before Socrates. His views of the soul's immortality spread throughout the world.

Socrates was the next great advocate of the immortality of the soul; but he never taught the transmigration of the soul. He was born in Athens. He was a great philosopher and a great fanatic. Says history, "This philosopher believed in the Divine origin of dreams and omens, and was a supporter of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul." No man can read his life without being convinced of his honesty in what he advocated. He claimed that a man's conduct in this life would tell for weal or woe a future life. It is said that he wrote no books; but Plato, who was his pupil for eight years, wrote his life. Plato not only taught the immortality, but the transmigration of the soul. Like Pythagoras he made many converts, and his writings are to be found and his views advocated throughout the heathen and Christian world. If he had followed his teacher, Socrates, and "left no writings" of his behind, the world would have been better off. It was his works and teachings that were the means of corrupting the Christian church. There were but few, yes a very few, at the first Advent of Jesus that had any view of a future life except that which was obtained through the teaching of Pythagoras or Plato. The Jews, during their captivity, especially the Pharisees, fully adopted the Pythagorian doctrine. I know it is said that they believed in a resurrection, and Paul is quoted as proof on this point in Acts xxiii., 8, which reads, "For the Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel nor spirit; but the Pharisees confess both." Prideaux, in his remarks on this point, says, "The Pharisees confess both: that is, first there is to be a resurrection from the dead; and second that there are angels and spirits. But according to Josephus this resurrection of theirs was no more than a Pythagorian resurrection; that is, a resurrection of the soul only by transmigration into another body, and being born anew with it. But from this resurrection they excluded all that were notoriously wicked. For all such, their notion was, their souls as soon as separated from their bodies were transmitted into a state of everlasting woe, there to suffer the punishment of their sins to all eternity. But as to lesser crimes, their opinion was that they were punished in the bodies which the souls of those that committed them were next sent into."

Here is a full endorsement of Pythagoras, and Plato's doctrine. The disciples of our Lord were believers of this same doctrine, evidently; for they asked Jesus, "Who did sin, this man or his parents that he was born blind?" Well might our Saviour say, "Beware of the doctrine of the Sadducees and Pharisees." When our Lord said, after three days he would rise again, it must have sounded strange to his disciples holding the Platonic views of a resurrection.

It is often asked, How is it, if the soul is not immortal, that it was so generally believed in the Christian church during the lives of the so-called fathers? That question is easy to answer. We are told that while the blood of Jesus was still smoking on Mount Calvary, the Platonic believers began to corrupt the doctrines of Christ. They claimed to believe in Christ, and were very zealous, Mosheim says "Of all the different systems of philosophy that were received about the time of our Saviour, none were so detrimental to the Christian religion as the Oriental doctrine, which for the first three centuries perplexed and afflicted the Christian church."

These philosophers, during the apostles, day, did not succeed to any great length, but yet they overthrew the faith of some. By the second century these philosophers succeeded in being recognized as Christians. For some time when these Platonics applied to be baptized they were refused unless they would cast off their "Philosopher's Cloak;" but they being learned and talented it was thought best to recognize them as Christians. But before this they changed their name, and were known as "New Platonic."

"They believed that Jesus Christ was an excellent man; the friend of God; but denied, however, that Jesus designed to abolish the worship of demons. This doctrine was adopted by Origen and many other Christians." "It soon became a matter of controversy whether this philosophy was of utility in the Christian church; but the cause of philosophy TRIUMPHED. This victory was attributed to Origen, who, having been instructed in the Platonic schools, the fame of this philosopher daily increased among Christians. His method of interpreting Scripture became universal among Christians. He opened a secure retreat for all sorts of errors."

By the fourth century, (says history), the church was shrouded in mystery of iniquity. The most eminent Christian doctors interpreted the gospel by the rules of Platonic philosophy. It brought into the church the nobility, bishops and archbishops, until their tyranny became intolerable." By these facts, which have been quoted, we see that the corner stone, laid soon after Noah's day, upon which Idolatry was first to establish THAT abominable doctrine, the immortality of the soul. It had by the year A. D. 254 (for that is the year when Origen suffered martyrdom) become the corner stone of the corrupt Christian church, from which it has not recovered until this time.

The Reformation began somewhat to develop these errors. Luther, one of God's chosen messengers, boldly declared that the immortality of the soul was a "monstrous opinion to be found in the Roman dunghill of decretals." Since that time many eminent and learned men have abandoned this God-dishonoring doctrine. The truth has shed its light on this point in the Old World, and has accomplished much in this country. It is a rare thing now to hear a sermon on eternal torments. Hell fire has ceased to burn, in a great measure.

I have given a brief history of the origin of this doctrine, which is the corner stone of all the errors that have distracted the world and made the doctrines of the Bible a nullity. The coming of Christ the second time, as we learn from hearing funeral sermons by the orthodox, is when men die. One class fly off to Abraham's bosom, and the other is in company with the Rich man, crying for water to those or the other side of the gulf.

It is claimed that the most learned of every age were believers in the immortality of the soul. That learned men of every age professed to believe it, we have reason to believe; but like the priesthood, it was for a sinister motive. Gibbon, in his fifteenth chapter, says in respect to the immortality of the soul, "At the bar and in the senate of Rome the ablest orators were not apprehensive of giving offence to their hearers by exposing that doctrine as an idle and extravagant opinion, which was rejected with contempt by every man of liberal education and understanding." He remarks, in the same chapter, that the doctrine was propagated "through the influence of an established priesthood." History gives us the reasons why this doctrine was taught to the common people; and we know that it is the corner stone of the Romish Church. No immortal soul, no purgatory, no Peter's pence.

I cannot close this brief statement without quoting from the Elder Pliny, who flourished in the days of Nero: (Natural History, Book seventh, chapter fifty-six). "After burial come the different quiddities as to the existence of the manes or soul. All men after their last day return to what they were before; and after death there is no more sensation left in their body or in their soul than there was before their birth. But this same vanity of ours extends even to the future; and lyingly fashions to itself an existence even the very moment which belongs to death itself. At one time, it has conferred upon us the immortality of the soul: at another, transmigration; and at another, it has given sensation to the shades below, and paid divine honors to the departed spirits; thus making a kind of deity of him who has but just ceased to be a man, as if indeed the mode of breathing with man was in any way different from that of other animals; and as if there were not many other animals to be found whose lives are longer than that of man, and yet for whom no one ever presages anything for a like immortality. For what is the actual substance of the soul when taken by itself? Of what material does it consist? Where is the seat of its thought? How is it to see or hear or touch? And then, of what use is it, or what can avail, if it has not these faculties? Where, too, is its residence? and what vast multitudes of those souls and spirits must there be after the lapse of ages. But all these are the mere figments of childish ravings and of that mortality which is so anxious never to cease to exist. It is a similar piece of vanity to preserve the dead bodies of men. Just like the promise that he shall come to life again, which was made by Democritus, who, however, has never come to life yet himself. Out upon it! What downright madness is it to suppose that life is to commence at death; or indeed what repose are we ever to enjoy when we have once been born, if the soul is to retain its consciousness in heaven, or in the shades, or in the infernal regions. This pleasing delusion and this credulity quite cancel that chief good of human nature, death, and doubles the miseries of him who is about to die by anxiety as to what is to happen to him after it."

Will some of our immortal-soulists answer the questions here asked by Pliny? Of what material does the soul consist? Where is the seat of its thought? How is it to see or hear or touch? etc. Tertullian, of the Latin fathers, who lived about A. D. 200, claimed that the soul had a body; he says, "How, if the soul be nothing, can it be detained under the earth? for it is nothing if it be not a body, for incorporosity is free from all kind of custody and incapable of either pain or pleasure,"—(Lord King's Apostle's Creed). Origen denied the resurrection and taught the doctrine of going to heaven at death. He says, "Before the death of Christ the souls of all the patriarchs and saints went to hell (meaning hades), where they remained in joy and happiness till our Saviour's death, when his separate soul came into those infernal regions; and, breaking the bonds, he freed those captive souls, and at his resurrection triumphantly led them into heaven; unto which place, the departed souls of all believers do now immediately go." (Lord King).

I should suppose if a man or his soul was in the "infernal regions," where the soul of our Saviour went, there could not be in that place "joy and happiness." Epiphanius, who lived in the fourth century, one of the fathers, says, "Our Lord descended with his soul into the nethermost parts of the earth, where Death and Hell, being ignorant of his Divinity that accompanied him, assaulted his soul, thinking to have conquered it, as they had the rest of mankind before; but they were mistaken because of his Deity." Here we have, in the place of the departed, a battle ground between wicked spirits, who had always conquered all until the chief Captain stepped in and put them to flight; and of course he let out (as Origen says,) all the captives and carried the keys of the prison house with him.

I quote these few extracts to show the fanaticism of the so-called fathers; and yet how often we are referred to "the fathers" for proof of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. Well may we say with Pliny, "Out upon it. What downright madness," the "mere figments of childish ravings." That is, it originated with and is believed by crazy men.

The question is often asked, "Why do our learned men, with all these facts before them not believe?" Pride is at the bottom. They are unwilling to believe that they have "no preeminence above the beast; that they all have one breath, and all go to the same place; as one dieth so dieth the other." Professor Whiting, when asked why the learned did not embrace the second coming of Christ? answered, that they had more difficulties to overcome than the unlearned. He has proved his assertion true, for he still clings to that "Infernal region" of "Joy and happiness" between death and the resurrection. The old saying is true: "That which is born in the bone is hard to be got through the flesh."

THE SATANIC HOBBY.

WHAT object the Christian Advocate of this city could have had in putting into its columns such a caricature of "satan" as the following, we do not know; but we can hardly see how they could have more effectually shown that the fancied spirit-devil was the offspring of a diseased or superstitious brain than the representation or history of his various chamelion colors or forms in which he has appeared.

SATAN.

Since the meeting of Mother Eve with the devil her sons and daughters have felt more or less interest in the seducer, and their imagination has formed various conceptions of his character and appearance. The old plays, the witch excitement, childhood's fears, the painter's fancy, the poet's frenzy, and the theologian's philosophy, have all endowed him with various and peculiar attributes, as different as the dispositions of those who conceived them.

In the "mysteries and moralities" Satan was the buffoon, the clown, the "lubber fiend," of satyr appearance and Falstaffian disposition, as jolly as he was wicked, making Cain say his prayers backward to the Almighty, or disputing with Vice, and when worsted in argument using physical force with his opponent.

In the witch excitement he was the grim woodman with the black book, using black cats as his ministers of state, and weak-minded old women as his general agents, while he manifested his influence in cows and children.

One of the master painters represents him with a brimstone complexion, an expression half that of a Malay pirate and half that of a Yankee pedlar, hair of ropes and serpents, winding around horns like those of an old ox, and eyes like those of a coal-digger, with more of craftiness expressed in their glance.

Another of the masters paints him like a prize-fighter or a Hercules, his naked form displaying the perfection of physical development and power, while a serpent twines around him like a sash, and his eye flashing defiance to heaven, his whole mien proclaiming universal hate and unbounded confidence.

Still others imagine him an animated skeleton; a shadow endowed with life and form; a loathsome beast or reptile; a cruel bird or rapacious fish, with the Indian's guile rather than the Arab's courage in his depredations; a trapper rather than a hunter; a wolf in sheep's clothing rather than that straightforward and robber creature, the bear; an assassin rather than a soldier. And so the list might be prolonged; for fear in the wicked, detestation in the good, contempt in the brave, and fancy in the superstitious, look through the colored glasses of their own feelings, and each sees a different representation of the "King of Evil," "the Father of Lies."

In some there is too much earthy to the conception; in some as great a preponderance of spirit. Byron's Lucifer is, perhaps, the most noted representation of this being, after excepting those of Milton and Dante. To him the poet makes blasphemy as familiar as household words, and hate his vital breath. He rouses a "pleasing fear," and is "a shape like to the angels, yet of a sadder and sterner aspect;" but, like the other characters of this poet, he is only Byron exaggerated, his misanthropy made more devilish, or he is Tom Payne, the reasoning skeptic, shrouded in mystery, half a human infidel and half a spiritual terror.

He argues, but does nothing, like a talking soldier who never goes into the fight; he does not boldly "defy the Omnipotent to arms," but excites others to mutiny. The very personification of fallen ambition, he fears his rival, but calumniates him; feels his inferiority, and therefore desires to disaffect others, and gain lesser beings as worshippers; and in his proselyting, Satanic reasoning produces defiance, defiance murder, and murder fathers remorse, thus perpetuating the terrible pedigree of horror.

The devil of Burns is quite a different being:

> O thou, whatever title suit thee,
> Auld Hornie, Satan, Nick, or Clootie,
> Wha in yon cavern grim and sootie,
> Closed under hatches,
> Spairges about the brunstone cootie
> To scaud poor wretches.

Theologians consider him as an omnipresent (?) angel of darkness, infecting books, pleasures, and even religious forms with his poisonous influence, and going about like a roaring lion, or a noisome pestilence, seeking whom he may devour; or again, as a being without personality, and merely another name for human depravity. But the former is the more general and reasonable view, having revelation for its foundation, as it certainly does. They think of him as the moving force of the hypocrite:

> And the devil did grin,
> For his darling sin
> Is pride that apes humility.

Those who make the Bible their standard consider him an insidious tempter, an arch traitor to God, a deadly enemy to man, an influence that made men tear themselves, and swine commit suicide; that assailed with boils, and not by open war; that made maniacs, not warriors; that roused, and should still more rouse abhorrence, rather than pity or admiration.

But amid these various ideals of the devil, Milton's Satan towers unrivalled, the grandest production of genius, brave, terrible, without a peer. Conquered, but confident; defeated, but still defiant; punished, but none the less insolent. By his side Prometheus, from which he is doubtless copied in part, is but the dotage of a bravado, the "Lucifer" of Byron is only a spiritless bully, and that "auld Hornie" of Burns is but a parasite.

He is cast down from heaven, but his courage, eloquence, and perseverance prove him "scarcely less than archangel ruined" as he breathes forth "high disdain" and "immortal hate." He wishes to try the fate of arms once more against Almighty power, but willingly accepts a proposition to subdue a new order of beings on the earth, desiring to lord it somewhere. "Better to rule in hell than serve in heaven," he said; and better, he argued, to have the worship of man than to worship God. He is above the legions on the fiery marl, not only in authority, but he is also above them in courage; and when the dangerous mission to the distant planet can find no other executors, he himself undertakes the journey. Grand is his eloquence:

> I give not heaven for lost. From this descent
> Celestial virtues rising will appear
> More glorious and more dread than from no fall.
> War, then, war,
> Open or understood, must be resolved.

We unconsciously admire his whole character, as we would that of a persevering general, stained though he be with innocent blood. Perhaps this is the greatest fault of Milton, that he has endowed his Satan with too much of Roman valor and Roman eloquence; rousing on that account anything but devilish feelings in the reader in connection with his devil.

For years was Milton in the gloomy shadow of this terrible creation, contemplating, studying, imagining, but always surrounded by this terrible personification of sin, as the mountain is surrounded by the cloud.

Young wrote his "Night Thoughts" amid the inspiring gloom of midnight; but this wild, dark thought of Milton, in which he dwelt as he wrote of the dim unknown, and impressed upon his page the phantasies that hovered before him, this garment of immensity and strange imaginations was darker than midnight, and the darkness could be felt. We wonder as we see the offspring of his genius, and esteem him the sublimest poet of the world.

TRIBULATIONS:

"THE WISE SHALL UNDERSTAND."

Tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil; of the Jew first, and also of the Gentiles. Rom. ii. 9.

THESE words are a prediction concerning the judgment that was to come upon the Jew and Gentile nations. History shows that this prophecy was uttered a good many years before its fulfilment commenced upon the former; and we think there is good reason to believe that so far as the prophecy refers to the Gentiles, their days of tribulations may not yet have fully commenced, and were not to have been until the latter times of their existence, when they should be visited by the sword, etc., in somewhat the same manner as were the Jews.

We think it is quite clear to every reader of the Scriptures that the terrible visitation upon the Jews was on account of their rejection of Jesus and his kingdom: they refused to acknowledge the kingdom of God, and to receive His chosen King. And as the words spoken against the Gentiles were directly connected with those spoken against the Jews, we believe that the tribulation predicted as coming upon them is for the very same reason, viz., the rejection of Christ, who is the King and only Potentate chosen of God to reign on the earth, to whom all nations are to render a welcome to that throne of glory, as did the few followers while entering the city—"Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord: Hosannah in the highest: Peace on earth," etc.

When Jesus came to occupy that throne, and take the rightful possession, the application was made in this wise. "The time is fulfilled, the kingdom of heaven is at hand;" (or, the King hath arrived). The messenger, —John—however, made the proclamation beforehand, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of Heaven is at hand." The government and nation, however, did not pay much attention in this matter, being beneath the notice of that aristocratic body of rulers, on account of the humbleness the outward show proved itself to be. They received him not; and their failing to do so was what brought upon them their utter disruption as a government and tribulation as a nation. For they knew not the time of their visitation. The time of this visitation was at the expiration of the symbolical days spoken of by the prophet as being the time intervening till the coming of the Messiah.

Now this same prophet (Daniel), who did prophecy to the Jewish nation, "how long it would be to the coming of the Messiah," did, in connection with that time, predict the length of time that the "Most High" had allotted to the Gentiles to bear rule in the earth; which time is to fill up (we believe) the longest portion intervening between the first and second advent of Jesus for the purpose of beginning his reign. Now, we are furthermore informed that "at the time of the end, the wise shall understand." Understand what? That we may know the exact time or day in which the King will come? We think not. What then are the wise to understand, at the time of the end? This seems to be as yet one of those passages of Scripture the meaning of which in our mind is unsatisfactorily explained to me, and the most light I have upon it leads me to think that the wise are to understand, from that prophecy, the vicinity of the fulfilment of time allotted to the Gentiles to rule. And our mind in this is strengthened by the fact that the understanding of the wise at the time of the Lord's first advent consisted in their having been "taught of God"—studied the prophets; and by so doing learned that the time had arrived when they were to watch, expect, and wait for the consolation of Israel

—the Messiah to come. In other words, they understood by the prophet's exposition of time, that they were then living in the vicinity when the King should be born: and no doubt rejoiced in the hope of further manifestations of that glorious event. They were not disappointed. The King came. They believed in him as the anointed One; and although they did not then see the kingdom established, all things were made plain unto them; so that they were fully instructed into the kingdom: and that when the Lord would return, it would be set up, and his authority would be extended to the ends of the earth. And when the desolation of Jerusalem took place (the commencement of tribulation) they escaped it, and the terrible calamities resulting, because the anointed One had given them a full knowledge of those events and how they should escape. We are told that "whereas in times past God spake to us through the prophets, he has in these last days spoken to us by His Son Jesus." Some of the things spoken by the prophets relating to the latter times—or the times of the Gospel dispensation—are repeated in the word we have heard from His Son; for the times spoken of by Daniel, in so far as they bear upon the Gentiles, are no doubt the same as those made known unto us through His Son in the Revelation of St. John.

Now as regards the duration of that time, we think that, according to the best and most consistent exposition that can be made of them, they have expired, and that, no later than 1868, possibly before that; and if so, then we are most certainly living in the time of the end, when the wise may understand that we are now living in the vicinity and times in which the setting up of Jesus' kingdom may be looked for. And as the world seems to be in utter darkness, and that wilfully, for the proclamation that Jesus is coming has been sounded forth to the nations for twenty years and upward, we surely believe that the rejection of that kingdom, or a want of faith that God's own King is coming to rule, by the governments and nations of the earth, known as Gentiles, is to us a sure indication that their tribulation and utter desolation is at hand; and they will "be broken as a potter's vessel is dashed to pieces;" and "blessed is he that keepeth his garments (free from the spirit of war—or upholding these Gentile governments, which is contrary to God's will) lest he walk naked," when the day dawns and Jesus "will be seen coming on a cloud, with power and glory." There will be many (pretended followers of Christ) who will be found fighting against the establishment of Christ's kingdom—fighting under Antechrist, and so are walking naked in the end.

Such, in our humble opinion, will be the case. And, with the present light we have, we think the "understanding of the wise" consists in nothing more than a knowledge of the times in which Jesus is to come, and their standing aloof from the attempts, and wars which are now apparently so imminent, for the upholding of the Gentile governments. If this be the meaning of that passage, then nearly all of those who are looking for the speedy coming of the Lord are walking with their garments on. Such we believe to be the case.

Let us all watch and pray, and wait for the kingdom, keeping our garments clean from the tumults of the world; so shall we be acceptable to Jesus in that day: for, "unto them that look for him, the second time, will he appear without sin unto salvation." Come, Lord Jesus.

THE SEASONABLE WORD.

"I WANT to tell you," said an American minister, "what a layman did for me in Greenfield, Mass. I was only sixteen years old. My mother had died the previous December. I was driving the cows home toward evening through a slight rain. A man with an umbrella overtook me, and, holding it over me, said, 'My boy, those are fine cows.' 'Yes,' said I, 'they are fine.' 'Why, that one with the short horns and broad back is a Durham!' His interest in what interested me won me. After a while he asked,

"'Have you got a mother?'

"'No, sir,' said I, 'she died last winter.'

"'What was the last thing she said?'

"'O, sir, the last thing she said was, May God have mercy on these children!'

"'Well, my boy, ain't you a Christian?'

"No, sir."

"Why ain't you?'

"'I expect it is because I love sin so much.' Fixing his eyes earnestly on mine, and shifting his umbrella so as to grasp my hand with his right hand, he said—

"'What, my boy, and you not a Christian?'

"'No, sir,' said I, with streaming eyes, 'but I want to be.'

"'And then he talked with me so gently and kindly that I never shall forget it. O the power of a seasonable word! It was lay preaching."

PORT RICHMOND, STATEN ISLAND, N. Y.

OUR friend T. M. SOTHER, of the above place, has prepared a place for public services there for LIFE BELIEVERS. We suppose this has been done wholly at his own personal expense. The House is to be opened next Lord's day (April 11th), by himself, giving a statement of the object he has in view by this effort. In the evening, it is expected the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE will preach on the Life views. The public are invited to attend.

"BUSINESS MATTERS."—We are compelled to omit that department till next week, by Br. Burbank's absence.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, APRIL 7, 1869.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"DEVIL,—SATAN,—DEMONS:"

AN INVESTIGATION, Showing what these Terms properly imply, and their relation to Temptation and Transgression: Scripturally and Rationally Considered:" by "GEO. STORRS, Editor of Herald of Life."

The above-named work is now printed and in the Binder's hands. We expect it brought to our office in a day or two at farthest, and we shall send it to those who have ordered it, immediately. It is a pamphlet of 48 pages, with cover. Price 5 cents per copy, and postage, if sent by mail. The postage on a single copy is two cents: three copies can be sent for the same postage as one.

ZION'S HERALD; "CAUGHT AGAIN."

AFTER several weeks "Zion's Herald" has noticed our response to its article of March 4, headed "Caught." We think that paper caught itself, and not us. But of that others will judge. Its reply to our response appears in its columns of the first inst., and is headed "Caught Again." We agree to the title, but as before we think itself is the "game." It opens as follows:

> "It is dangerous to express an opinion on any matter in which our Annihilation brethren are concerned. If we say one word they reply with a hundred."

That is a little singular, but there are two ways of explaining it. In the first place—LIFE BELIEVERS (for that is the name we substitute for their term "Annihilationists") have a hundred "Thus saith the Lord" to our opposers' one; or, to use a military phrase, we have a hundred "batteries" to one of the believers in inherent immortality. They cannot produce even "one" expression from the Bible that man has an immortal soul, or a deathless spirit. No such language was ever used by an inspired writer.

But there is another reason why we are compelled to use more words than our opponents: they have the popular side; hence what they say, however weak and inconclusive, is accepted as a wonderful argument. They occupy the ground the papacy did in the time of the reformation. The reformers had to use many more words than their opponents, because, the ipse dixit of the latter answered all purposes with the masses, who had been taught that those who dissented from "The Church" were all infidels and bad men, whose teaching led straight down to eternal torments. To reply to such kind of opposition necessitates the use of many words, oftentimes. Thus much for our prolixity in responding to "nutshell arguments."

Though the replies of "Zion's Herald" have not reached as many words as our responses, they seem to be accumulating, and we hope may yet give still fuller evidence that Life principles have not been set before our respected opposers in vain. "Zion's Herald" says:

> "We like these brethren, but wish they would not be quite so hungry as to snap at any crumbs, and then knead them over into their own dough, and serve them up in their own fashion as our bread."

If any have done what is stated in the last part of this sentence, they have certainly erred, and should make amends honorable; but we plead "not guilty" to such a course. As to the first part of the sentence: If a man goes to angle for fish he is glad to see them "so hungry as to snap at any crumbs" on his hook: and certainly he should not feel displeased when he has "caught" that for which his "nutshell" bait was intended. We cannot see why he should regret his success, unless his fish is too large or too slippery to handle; or, may be, he thinks of Jonah. If people go fishing with such things as nutshells, and fish are "caught" by them, it must be a cheap method to replenish one's stock, and is a matter of rejoicing, not of complaint.

As "Zion's Herald" proceeds, it says,

> "The lost spirits in hell, as in Gadara, beg their Creator not to destroy them. Whoever laughs at such a truth, laughs at the Word of God, and the instincts of the immortal soul."

Several things are noticeable in this item: first, the idea that eternal torments is a less punishment than utter destruction: thus, our brother being judge, our view of the end of the wicked is more fearful than that of "orthodoxy." We hope hereafter to hear no more of Life Believers' views taking away the element of terror from the minds of sinners.

Second: whoever laughs at the idea that the spirits in hell had rather be tormented than destroyed, "laughs at the Word of God.' As we know of no one that does laugh at such an idea, except such as claim to be "orthodox," we hope they will take warning, and not be guilty of reproaching those whom they call "Annihilationists" with lessening the punishment of the lost. We have often been told by "orthodox" people that it would be a comfort to those in their theological hell if they had any prospect that they would ever be annihilated; and they have quoted Rev. ix., 6, to prove their position, "In those days shall men seek death, and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them." But Br. Haven tells us, "the lost spirits in hell beg their Creator not to destroy them." Thus orthodoxy has come to be "a house divided against itself," and so "cannot stand."

As to "the instincts of the immortal soul," our brother speaks of, we think any one who laughs at such a thing must belong to another species from us, for no intelligent being will laugh at a nonentity. It has never yet been proved that such a thing as an "immortal soul" exists. The Bible is silent so far as to giving us any such information; it employs no such language; it is purely of heathen and uninspired origin.

We shall give "Zion's Herald" further notice next week.

INHERENT IMMORTALITY:

THE BLASPHEMY OF THE THEORY.

THE following inscription is taken from a marble slab in a graveyard:

> "Death is the crown of life. Were death denied, poor man would live in vain. Death wounds to cure. We fall—we rise to reign—spring from our fetters, fasten in the skies. Life makes the soul dependent on the dust—Death gives her wings to mount above the spheres. Death gives us more than was in Eden lost. This King of Terror is the Prince of Peace."

Such blasphemy as this is worthy of the source from whence it emanates. The notion of an immortal soul in man begat and nourishes this robbery of God and his Christ. If "death is the crown of life," who puts it on our head? Answer, "Sin:" for "the wages of sin is death." Rom. vi., 23. And as Christ is to "destroy death," it follows that Christ is to destroy "the crown of life!" But Jesus saith, "I will give thee a crown of life." But this immortal-soul theory saith, "Were death denied, poor man would live in vain." Did Enoch and Elijah "live in vain" who were "translated that they should not see death?" Did they miss "the crown of life?" Will all such as "are alive, and remain unto the coming of the Lord," who are then to be "changed in a moment" to "immortality," and so not die, miss "the crown of life?" Have they lived "in vain?" Strange havoc does this theory make of the truth of God. But death is made the great Physician—"Death wounds to cure!" Death, then, is the healer, and sin brings the medicine. Here is robbery of Christ and blasphemy against him! Next, "life" is blasphemed. How so? "Life makes the soul dependent on the dust—death gives her wings to mount above the spheres." Thus life is condemned and death glorified.

Moses saith, "I set before you life and death—choose life, that thou mayst live." But, Moses, didst thou not know life makes the soul dependent on the dust, while death gives it wings? Surely, Moses, death is by far the most desirable.

The next point in the blasphemous inscription is, that "Death gives us more than was in Eden lost." Now, God gave Eden, with life and all its joys and pleasures, but informed man that he should lose it all, as a punishment, if he sinned. But immortal-soulism saith, "thou shalt not surely die," and affirms the soul gains by sin; and that the death threatened brings more to man than he lost in Eden! Thus death was a blessing, and exclusion from the tree of life a reward to be coveted, as death is to give more than was in Eden lost!

But the blasphemy stops not here. It puts death in the place of Christ, and openly steals the peculiar title of the Son of God. Death, saith immortal-soulism, "is the Prince of Peace!" Truly, this blasphemous railer could go no higher. Christ came to "destroy death"—i. e., to destroy the Prince of Peace! The last enemy to be destroyed is death (1 Cor. xv., 26), but then, according to this blasphemy, the Prince of Peace is destroyed!

If such doctrine is not putting darkness for light, and calling light darkness—if it is not calling evil good, and good evil, then we may defy language to tell us what is. But it is the natural and legitimate fruit of the doctrine of a natural immortal soul in man. The resurrection is of no use—is a fable—and would be a positive evil according to the sentiments here commented on. Yes, according to this theory, the work of Christ, to raise the dead and give life again, is all an evil work; and the whole scheme of redemption, or deliverance from death and corruption, is a work utterly useless and pernicious. Alas, for a theory which contemns God, deifies death, and exalts sin, which brought death. Truly, immortal-soulism stands out in its genuine character as a robber of God and his Christ—as the betrayer and murderer of the Son of God. The only testimony in favor of the natural immortality of man, in the Bible, is in Gen. iii., 4, "Ye shall not surely die." If that testimony is good and true, then is that theory true, and the writing on the marble slab true, and all the blasphemous assumptions therein contained must stand as truth against all the claims of Jesus Christ, and redemption by him.

Our heart sickens within us whenever we contemplate the fatal and destroying delusion of immortal-soulism, and trace out its legitimate consequences. We believe many sincere souls are entangled in its meshes, and fear to allow themselves to think of the possibility that they may be in error. Time-honored error has more charms to them than careworn, slighted, and contemned truth. They fear to look truth in the face, lest they may be deceived by her. We can sympathize with them in some degree, but hope they will yet see that to receive honor of men is the way to shut out truth and faith from their hearts. "How can ye believe that receive honor one of another?" said the beloved Saviour, and it is just as solemn a truth now as in the day he uttered it.

PROBATION IN THE NEXT AGE.

IN relation to our Lord's words, Luke xx., "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world"—aionos, that age [i. e., of Messiah's reign,] "and the resurrection from the dead," etc., we say: the next age, or age of Messiah's personal reign on the throne of his father David, will open with a resurrection of all the sleeping saints who have suffered with or for Christ in this or the previous ages: such "shall reign with him:" see Rom. viii., 17; 2 Tim. ii., 12; and Rev. iii., 21. These having suffered with Christ, and overcome the seductions to abandon his cause, will "together be made perfect" in body and mind. Compare Rom. viii., 23; Phil. iii., 20, 21; 1 Corth. xv., 23, 51–53; 1 Thess. iv., 13–17, with Heb. xi., 8–10, 13–16, 39, 40, and Heb. xii., 22–24, reading the 22d verse, Ye are to come; or, ye are coming; for that is clearly the sense of the original word here; and it removes all obscurity from the text and makes it harmonize with the inspired testimony in the previous texts to which we have called attention.

That there will be more than two classes of men on the earth at the opening of the next age, or at the second advent of Christ, to us is clear. Those who have suffered tribulation for Christ, and those who have contributed to produce that tribulation, form two classes. These two classes have lived together: both have heard the gospel—one class has obeyed it; the other has not obeyed: and therefore know not God; and have been troublers of them that did know him and obey the gospel. Such troublers of God's people shall, in the time of Christ's personal administration, "be punished with everlasting destruction:" for them there is no more trial or probation. But there is a third class of men, viz., Those "that have not heard God's fame, neither have seen his klory," etc. See Isa. lxvi., 18, 19. This class constitutes by far the largest part of the present inhabitants of the earth. If any object to this, that the gospel has been preached in all nations, we demand the proof. Even if it had, it has been done in so corrupted a form as to make it "another gospel!" than "the gospel of Jesus Christ;" and it is those who have not obeyed "the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ:" not the gospel of Plato, of Moloch, of Papacy, even though under the improved name of Protestantism.

Who they are, and how many of the human family will be the subjects of trial under Messiah's personal reign, we do not pretend to determine; but one thing, to us, is clear, that none who have had the gospel in its purity will be of the number; and yet it is equally clear that there will be "left of the nations" [Zech. xiv., 16,] and that such will be in a state of trial, or probation. That violence is done to a large portion of the Old and New Testaments, by an opposite view, is to our mind apparent; and yet far be it from us to accuse any of intending to pervert the words of God; still we know from past experience that strong attachment to the theory of an entire new creation at the second advent of Christ, imperceptibly biases the mind and prevents its feeling the force of texts that would otherwise be conclusive and irresistible.

HERALD OF LIFE FOR "MARCH 24."

WE thank our friends who have returned that number of the paper; but we are still lacking some thirty copies to supply those subscribers who had not received it. We would be glad, therefore, if others may be returned to us of that issue. Remember it is March 24. Please direct them simply "HERALD OF LIFE, New York City." Just as fast as they are received we forward to such as we had failed to supply.

IS DEATH SUSPENSION OR DESTRUCTION OF LIFE?

PERHAPS no subject has been such a fruitful source of discussion as the nature of death; and many very erroneous conclusions have resulted from the various and strange suppositions made concerning it. Many of these errors have from time to time been exposed, but truth is generally so unwelcome that many "love darkness rather than light." Very many, with wonderful tenacity, still cling to the supposition that death is "the suspension of life," and therefore as all die alike, they will all have life restored to them again. Many seriously stumble here. All we can know in truth respecting death or the doom of the ungodly, is plainly set forth in the pages of inspiration. Outside of this we are like a vessel upon the broad deep without chart or helm.

We often read and hear much about the "Adamic law," "Adamic death," etc., and one writer advances the claim that "the Adamic death is apparently a calamity to the human family, because the innocent as well as the guilty suffer it." This leads us to inquire:

1. What is the nature of the Adamic law? Are the entire race under the Adamic law? These questions must be settled before we can draw any conclusion regarding the nature of death. If the race are under the Adamic law, then, of course, they are liable to the infliction of its penalty. If they were never under this law they cannot suffer its penalty.

The Adamic law was applied as a test. It required obedience to God on the part of Adam in the performance of a certain thing, and a positive penalty was set before him as a punishment for disobedience. We challenge any one to show that there was any possible way set before him whereby he might escape the infliction of that penalty after he had committed his act of rebellion. The moment he disobeyed his Creator the decision stood recorded in the court of heaven, "Thou shalt surely die." It came under a positive law, and if his posterity had come under this law, there would have been no future life for any. The penalty for his rebellion was executed, and Adam returned to the dust from whence he was taken, and there the Scriptures leave him in eternal oblivion. But his posterity, though they inherit a nature subject to death, have a remedy or hope which Adam did not possess. Through the promised Seed, and only through him, they are offered a way of escaping the eternal state of hopeless darkness to which Adam was consigned. According to the decree of the Almighty, Christ came to bring "life and immortality to light," which is made manifest in the gospel—the good news of life from the dead to those who by faith and obedience have become united to the LIFE-GIVER. Therefore, as in Adam all die—i. e., by possessing the Adamic nature all the righteous die, but death will not eternally hold them, for by a spiritual connection with Christ, the second Adam, they will all be made alive; and being delivered from death they will die no more, being "equal unto the angels."

2. What is the nature of death? This has been a point of much controversy. Not now stopping to notice the arguments of our orthodox brethren, we will notice a supposition which is rapidly gaining ground among many who believe in the unconscious state of the dead.

If death is simply the suspension of life, as some suppose, then of course mortal life will be restored to the race at the resurrection. If this be true, then Adam will live again, though not a word to this effect is hinted in the Scriptures. The fact that the whole book of inspiration stands arrayed against the supposition that mortal life will be restored to any at the resurrection, is an insurmountable barrier to this theory. "It is sown a natural body, it is raised a SPIRITUAL body," is the emphatic declaration. This shows conclusively that death must be different from a "suspension of life." On this subject we like the pointed words of Dr. Merrill, while editor of the "Methodist Quarterly Review." He says:

"All death is eternal in the nature of things. This is implied in the fact that it is the destruction, and not the mere suspension, of life. It must be so, unless there is something in it that will destroy itself, and bring back the life it took away. But only having a negative existence, it can have no such power. Stripped of the trappings of fancy, which lively imaginations have gathered around it, death appears without form, attribute, quality, or being. It is an effect, and not an agent. Hence, if death once occur, whether in the vegetable, animal, or spiritual kingdom, it will reign forever unless arrested by divine power in the production of a new life."

These are noble words from a Methodist D. D., and they are in harmony with both reason and revelation.

"The wages of sin is death." "Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." The penalty is not dying, but death; not a condition, but a state. The punishment for transgression is an eternal loss, and the reward of the righteous an eternal gain, being a gracious gift from God. The wicked suffer an eternal loss of life; therefore the penalty is death; and as death in its very nature is eternal unless arrested by divine power, in their case it will reign forever, because they rejected the only remedy—Christ—whereby they might escape its eternal chains, hence they will "remain in the congregation of the dead." They go down to the grave without any means of deliverance, because death never ends of itself.

All deliverance from death must be by "the production of a new life." Hence the gospel makes a resurrection from the dead conditional. Obedience to the claims of Jehovah is the test. In all dispensations in the past, this has been the test of salvation. Faith and obedience are the gospel conditions, and a disregard of these conditions by a rejection of Christ, who is "the resurrection," consigns men to an eternal and hopeless state. All mortal life ends in death, and therefore all who shall live again will live by the production of a new life. "How be it, that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual." 1 Cor. xv., 46. Throughout this chapter Paul contrasts "natural" with the "spiritual" life. Natural life terminates in the grave; but the "children of God "will live again by the production of a spiritual life. "IT IS SOWN A NATURAL BODY, IT IS RAISED A SPIRITUAL BODY." "And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." By this we understand that as we have borne the image of Adam in partaking of his mortal nature, we shall, by being "born again"—born from the dead—partake of the immortal nature of the second Adam; for we shall be "made like unto his glorious body." Hence, Adam stood at the head of this life, and Christ stands at the head of the future life. To assume that the wicked will live again, is to assume that they will partake of the new birth, and be raised by the power of a spiritual life, and therefore, being "the children of the resurrection," they could not die. This assumption, if true, would prove universal salvation.

But we must not pursue this interesting theme further now. Oh, how glorious the wise and gracious plan of God for man's redemption looks! May we not shun his gracious offer of "life from the dead" by a rejection of Christ, who will soon bruise the serpent's head, and unlock the gates of hades, and bid the captive heirs of glory come forth.

THE ENGLISH MIND IN MOTION.

THE IMMORTALITY QUESTION.

THE writers of the ten works enumerated, while differing among themselves on some points of detail, and in regard to the interpretation of a few texts of Scripture, are thoroughly at one in their enunciation of the three following general conclusions:

1. They all maintain, in the first pl[illegible]at MAN is as to his whole nature, a mortal creature, and that no satisfactory evidence in support of the "orthodox" doctrines of the immortality of the soul, and the necessary eternal existence of all men, can be adduced, either from reason or revelation. "When a man seriously asks himself," says Mr. Dobney* "why he holds that all men, without exception, will live forever—that every creature that has had the human form will be coeval with him 'who alone hath immortality' he replies that everybody believes it of course, that philosophers have constructed famous arguments that demonstrate it, and that Scripture abundantly proclaims it. But, in the mood I have suggested, this obvious reply will not satisfy as it once did; for, as to the arguments of the schools, he knows that it is impossible logically to prove the immortality of man, and that he has only to throw the most famous arguments, from the days of Plato downward, into their logical form, for the fallacy lurking therein to become patent. Besides, as a Christian man, recognizing the sufficiency of the Scriptures and devoutly accepting the Sixth article of the Church of England creed on that subject,† he considers that he is not bound to linger in the schools, or to be biased by the teachings of philosophers—who moreover argue some one way and some another—before placing himself at the feet of those 'holy men of God who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost,' and, above all, at the feet of our blessed Lord himself.

"The men of whom I am speaking, coming afresh to the study of the Scriptures, have been struck with the silence of the Bible on this point of an absolute and unconditional immortality for all men. They find nothing in the book at all akin to the popular language on the subject. In company with prophets and apostles alone, they breathe quite another atmosphere, and find quite other light shining on their path. For, from the first page of Genesis, wherein they find the man assured by God that if he eat of the forbidden tree he shall 'surely die,' yet credulously listening to the serpent's lie, 'YE SHALL NOT SURELY DIE,' and subsequently removed from the garden 'lest he put forth his hand, and take of the tree of life, and live forever;' I say, from the beginning to the end, they think they find the Scriptures adopting one uniform tone. Simply disembarrassing themselves of the portentous assumption of a universal and uncontingent immortality (originating to some extent possibly, in man's pride), they find themselves free to interpret the Scriptures more naturally than before. Instead of obscurity, there is plainness, instead of apparently hopeless contradiction, there is agreement; for they say that 'death' is death, and 'life' is life, and 'destruction' is destruction, and that 'perishing' means perishing." (pp. 19, 20.)

"Search the Bible from beginning to end," writes Mr. Davis, in his small but weighty volume, "and nowhere will you find sinners addressed as immortal beings. I do not mean as beings who survive the grave, but as absolutely immortal, or endowed with eternal life. Common as it is to do so in sermons, they are never warned in Scripture as they value their immortal souls, to repent and believe in Jesus Christ. The Great Teacher, who came down from heaven, did on no single occasion address men as naturally imperishable; neither did any one of his apostles." (p. 19.)

But it may be asked, "If this be so, how did the popular doctrine ever originate, and how came it to be so universally accepted in the Christian church?" The answer is given by Mr. Constable in his most admirable and masterly pamphlet.

Misapprehensions:

Conditional Prophecy.

We were interested in reading the articles recently published from the pen of our brother "E. W." While we do not feel that our investigations of the subject of a future age of probation are sufficiently extended to render us competent to discuss it, pro or con, we confess to an impression that some writers on the negative of the question labor under certain misapprehensions that give rise to some confusion. Among these are, first, the idea that God's plans have sometimes been frustrated, necessitating the institution of new ones. It is remarked by the author of "How It Could Have Been; And How It Will Be," for instance, concerning the "fall," "we dare not say it was God's plan to have such a state of things as has existed since; we think it impeaches his character; but how, or at what time he would have brought in immortality, had man remained innocent, the record does not tell, because he was necessitated to start a new plan." We cannot see how the expression of a conviction that such a state of things did enter into God's plan is any more an impeachment of his character for goodness, than to say he projected and instituted a plan which rendered the existence of such a state of things altogether probable. Neither, we think, is near so strong an impeachment of his goodness as an assertion that he could not foreknow Adam's course would be of his wisdom; and yet such an assertion is, by implication, virtually made. We would not be understood as intimating that God willed Adam's fall; but that the plan did anticipate and embrace the contingency of failure on the part of Adam is evidenced by the fact that a penalty was announced for violation of the law. When laws are given, penalties are annexed, and the act of annexing a penalty is an acknowledgment of the possibility—in most cases the probability—of violation. To say, therefore, that God provided for a circumstance which did not at all enter into His plan, is almost to express a contradiction of terms. If it should be suggested that the plan embraced on the one hand Adam's faithfulness and its consequences, and on the other his failure and its consequences, the determination between them to be made by him, acting as a free agent, and that God chose not to foreknow which course Adam would pursue, it would not be very inconsistent with the conclusions of some who have thought much on the subject.

The cause of difficulty on this point we conceive to rest in the assumption that God learned something by Adam's trial. The trial could not have informed God as to whether Adam would keep the law, for, being God, He could know that from the first, whatever was the design of the trial, the result of it showed to Adam his own weakness, and demonstrated alike to himself and to the race that should come after, all having the same nature, their incapacity, unaided by divine power, to keep, under the less favorable circumstances to which the failure subjected him, the simplest divine law. Does it not amount to a denial of God's omniscience to intimate that he cannot form designs which man, as a free agent, cannot frustrate? It is sometimes urged that if Adam could not keep the law, the trial was a farce. To have required him to keep a law he had not power to keep, even should he desire to do so, would, we cheerfully admit, have been a practical denial of his free agency; but it should not be forgotten that the mere enunciation of a just law more than implies both free agency on the part of the subjects, and ability to obey; and we know God's laws are always just. If, therefore, the Creator knew Adam would not keep the simple law given, it does not follow that he could not keep it. God is both infinite and infallible. By reason thereof, His plans never fail. Men, being unable to comprehend His ways, may think He has failed in some of His plans and has accordingly instituted others, but we may rest assured that all His dealings with mankind, from creation down, are parts of one gigantic scheme to secure, upon principles of free agency, a people who have proved their delight to glorify Him. "These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

Another misapprehension seems to be that prophecy is, or may be conditional. God's more important dealings with certain peoples, as revealed in his word, are expressed in three forms, viz., laws, promises, and threatenings. Of the first we need not here speak. Although there may be instances of the two latter being unconditionally made, they usually stand connected, with their conditions either expressed or clearly implied. Prophecy, on the other hand, is a foretelling of what takes place. It has been rightly defined as history written beforehand.

Prophecies cannot, therefore, properly be said to be God's dealings with men; they are rather the predeclared results of His dealings. Of necessity, promises and threatenings sometimes partake somewhat of the character of prophecy, and vice versa, but so distinguishable are they that they need not, we think, be confounded with it. The word of God by Moses to the Israelites, recorded in Deut. xxviii., 30, are promises, purely conditional as the appended threatenings plainly show; and like all divine promises, they were made "in good faith," consequently it was the "privilege" of the subjects of them to enjoy the designated blessings. On this ground it is urged that "we at once must come to the conclusion, there would have been no division of the tribes; . . . no Babylonian captivity, hence no prophecies concerning their return and subsequent union and prosperity; neither would the prophet have written, "Remove the diadem, and take off the crown," etc. This conclusion would be correct upon the assumption that they availed themselves of the privileges. The fact is, they did not observe the conditions upon which only the blessings were to be had. In consequence thereof they were not blessed; there was a "division of the tribes;" there were captivities; there are "prophecies concerning their return," union, etc.; and the prophet wrote "Remove the diadem, and take off the crown." Of course, these facts did not exist in accomplishment at the giving of the prophecies, else would they have been no prophecies; but God, knowing all things beforehand, revealed to his servants the prophets, the facts as they did then exist in the divine mind, and as they will exist in actual accomplishment when fully worked out by that people in the exercise of free agency. A determination against acceptance of the conditions of a promise cannot jeopardize the stability of prophecies relating to it, neither do the prophecies in the least affect the determination, for the prophecies are given because God knew the events would transpire, and the events transpire because free agents so elect.

It is sometimes urged also that had the Jews accepted Christ "he would have been a king," and his kingdom would have been then established. If this be true then the prophecies relating to his sufferings, death, second coming, etc., would have been set aside, at least in some of their particulars. The fact is overlooked that the event of their acceptance of him would have been foreseen, and hence no such prophecies would have had existence. But assuming the view to be correct, it follows that Christ, by his death, accomplished nothing for his people which would not have been accomplished without it. This, however, we conceive to be entirely inconsistent with Scripture teaching; See Isa. liii., 5, 6; Heb. ii., 14, 15, and other texts to the point. Says Paul, "every priest standeth daily ministering, and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices, which can never take away sins: but this man (Christ) offered one sacrifice for sins forever." To meet this, it is said that had the Jews accepted Christ, and made him king, he would have been slain by others.

Is not this wholly assumed? Where is the Scripture testimony that even intimates it? Think of the king of the whole earth being dragged from his throne and killed! Once exalted to the throne, he was to "order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice, from henceforth even forever." He was without "comeliness" that "we (Jews) should not desire him; he was despised, and we (Jews) esteemed him not." We cannot think Christ uttered unmeaning words when he said to his disciples, "it is expedient for you that I go away."

In appropriating prophecy, we think it eminently safe and propper to accept it as a truth that there is no conflict in this department of Scripture. If one's system of application involves it, one's system is wrong. Hence the fixing of any point in the past as the time for fulfilment of a prophecy which was not then fulfilled, and which, if it had been, would have rendered the fulfilment of other prophecies, reaching beyond that time, an impossibility, is sufficient evidence of misappropriation. This error is committed by some "conditional prophecy" writers. It is thought, for instance, that Isa. xi., 1–10, and ix., 6, 7, find their proper place at the first advent. Compare these prophecies with some by the same prophet, having reference to our Lord at his first coming. "He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief . . . surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows . . . But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: The chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed . . . He was oppressed, and afflicted; yet he opened not his mouth . . . He was taken from prison and and from judgment," etc. Isa. liii., 3–8.

Now, there can be no question as to where the latter prophecy belongs; that is demonstrated by fulfilment. Applying the former there also, brings them in direct conflict with it. The one is all humiliation, sorrow, and suffering; the others all triumph and glory. Of course the spirit contemplated one event in each of the two necessarily pertaining to the first advent, viz., the birth of the child. None can fail to see that these three prophecies cannot all refer to the first coming of Christ, for the fulfilment of the one rendered the fulfilment of the two at that time a matter of impossibility. That part of the glorious prophecy in chap. xi., which foretells the coming "forth of a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a branch out of his roots," has been fulfilled; if the rest of it has not also been, it surely will be, for God's word is sure. In determining then, this prophecy question, the point to be settled is, are these prophecies yet unfulfilled? If so, then just to that extent precisely are there those yet to be fulfilled, for anything short of this would be an overthrow of the stability of God's word.

Finally, the impression seems to exist that advocates of a future age of probation for certain of the human race hold that God is under obligation to present the gospel to all who do not hear it in this age; that it is to be preached to the heathen then, because they do not hear it previous to the coming of Jesus. This, so far as those of them are concerned whose views are presented through the columns of our paper, we do not understand to be true. If we comprehend their position on this point, it is that whatever is done subsequently to the return of our Lord, to benefit and exalt any people, will be done purely through favor; that God has a right to build up and to destroy, and is consequently under no obligation to any of His creatures except so far as He has voluntarily assumed it in giving His word that certain events will transpire. They claim that God has given His word of promise and of prophecy respecting certain dealings with Judah, Israel, and the heathen round about, after Christ's return, and that that word "will not return unto" him void, but "shall prosper in the thing whereto" he "sent it."

If it has occurred that the conditional prophecy position is a necessity in opposing "age to come" arguments, the fact will go far toward shattering our already shaken confidence in the soundness of the more popular theory. If we make prophecy conditional, of what value to us to-day would be that God-given chart? How could we know our whereabouts upon the great sea of time? From that chart our bearings have been taken, and we all believe we are nearing port; but, our calculations being based upon fulfilment of prophecy, might not our faith be vain? Is it urged in reply that we know where we are by prophetic events already transpired? True, but how shall we know some unforeseen contingency may not arise to make "void" some prophecies lying ahead? Who could say that a postponement of the coming of Christ would not thus occur? Let us not of any prophecies make phantoms floating about in the very atmosphere of truth, beguiling the weary traveller into dangerous ways, and ever and anon wooing him up to the very pinnacle of some fond hope only to plunge him into bitter, overwhelming disappointment and consequent woe. ## Return of Jacob's Posterity.

To us it is incomprehensible how any believer in the literal destruction of the wicked can doubt the literal return of Jacob's posterity. The principle of interpretation is the same in both cases; at least, so it seems to us. Drive us from this principle, and we should find no difficulty in going over to spiritualism in regard to the return and reign of Christ, and kindred subjects.

We have not space, at present, to remark on the words of James, Acts xv., but by turning to the prophecy from which he quotes, it is evident that a clear distinction is made between those who are concerned in building the tabernacle of David, and the heathen that are called by the name of the Lord. It is found in Amos ix., and reads thus—"Behold, the eyes of the Lord are upon the sinful kingdom, and I will destroy it from off the face of the earth; saving that I will not utterly destroy the house of Jacob, saith the Lord. For, lo, I will command, and I will sift the house of Israel among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall on the earth." . . . . "In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof; and I will raise up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old: that they may possess the remnant of Edom, and of all the heathen that are called by my name, saith the Lord, that doeth this." . . . . "And I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel, and they shall build the waste cities and inhabit them;" . . . . "and I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land, which I have given them, saith the Lord God."

It seems to us, no unprejudiced mind can question that this is clearly a prophecy, the latter part of which is to be as literally fulfilled as we know the former part has been; and any transferring the promises here made, to Gentile Christians, destroys the harmony of the word; for those Gentile Christians are distinguished from the "house of Israel" in these words of the Lord. They are expressly named as the "heathen upon whom MY NAME is called" in distinction from the "they," who are employed in raising up the tabernacle of David.

Will All Men be Saved?

"Yes!" say our Universalist friends, and "yes!" say some of our Adventist friends. Again: some of our Adventist friends claim that the wicked will have a temporal salvation while the righteous will enjoy an eternal salvation. Our Universalist friends hold that all mankind will have eternal salvation. The following are proof-texts used by both these classes: "God . . . who will have all men to be saved." "Who is the Saviour of all men, especially of them that believe."

We sincerely believe that both parties are mistaken in their convictions. The words of Jesus, as recorded by John in chapter vi., of his Gospel, give us the correct view of the subject. He there says "My Father giveth you (addressing the unconverted Jews) the true bread from heaven. For the bread of God is he which cometh from heaven, and giveth life unto the world . . . I am the living bread (bread of life) which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread he shall live forever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world."

If we quoted no farther, these texts might appear to harmonize with the ideas of our Universalists and Adventist friends; for they might assert that as Jesus giveth LIFE unto the WORLD, and giveth his flesh for the life of the world, all the world will have life; or, in other words, will have salvation. But Jesus says something more, which effectually overthrows their position; for he declares, "As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father so he that EATETH me, even HE shall LIVE by me." Thus, though Jesus is the bread of life, giving life unto the world, yet none can have life except they eat of that bread. He also declares "Verily, verily, I say unto you, except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." Then the Saviour himself has decided that no man can have life except by eating of the bread of Life. Concerning those who do eat of that bread, he says, "Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life, and will raise him up at the last day." These ideas are also expressed by Christ in the following language; "And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son and believeth on him may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day. Again, he says of others, "If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins."

Thus we learn from Christ the fact that God is the Saviour of all men, from his declaration, that he gave Christ for the life of the world, or, in other words, he has proffered life to all the world. Then the world in order to have life must eat of the bread that is proffered them, or else they will surely die in their sins and perish.

We read in one place that God "is not willing that any should perish;" yet the Saviour, in addressing the unconverted Jews, said, "Think ye those eighteen men upon whom the tower of Siloam fell were sinners above a'l men? I tell ye, Nay! but except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish."

"What must I do to be saved?" "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." "By grace are ye saved through faith." "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved; for with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."

Yours in hope. F. H. Burbank.

From R. Cadwell.

Cortland, N. Y., March, 1869.

Br. Storrs: I have been thinking a little of the eldest son's revolt from "his Father's house," or backsliding Israel's repentance, and return to the true God—the God of their fathers; and you will do with it as you like.

The Saviour, in his history of the Prodigal Son, gives but little account of the elder brother, in the narrative; only, when his father had received the youngest son safe, who "was lost," and there was heard music and dancing, he seemed to have been offended, and would not go in, and his father came out and entreated him to go in; but he would not. And according to after account of him, as given in the Rich Man and Lazarus, and the "Unjust Steward," he soon found himself in the condition his youngest brother had been in—standing in need of the blessing of the truth of the gospel, or the knowledge and light of God's favor, as his brother had formerly been, on him from the God of all grace, and the servants of his father's house. And there is much in the Scriptures which unequivocally declare Israel's blindness and unbelief shall be taken away. Moses predicts Israel's rebellion, and foretells his return, though he should be driven out to the uttermost part of heaven, (this is often repeated; the same is found in Solomon's prayer, and in the prophets. Deut. xxx., 1–10; xxxii., 36, 45; 1 Kings viii., 49, 50;) if they did repent and turn to the Lord, and seek him with all the heart, he would turn their captivity and bring them into the land of their fathers, and do better with them than at the beginning.

And the same Scriptures inform us, God would bring them into such circumstances, as that they would seek him and turn unto him, and be accepted. Hosea ii., 6–23; v., 14, 15; vi., 1, 4; xiii., 7–10; xiv., 1–9. To my mind, the second and last chapters of Hosea manifest more fully the wisdom, power, mercy, and enduring compassion of God to Israel, the eldest son, in his being recovered from his simple apostacy, and brought back to the favor and blessings of God's love (on account of the heinousness and multiplicity of his sins) than was exhibited in the return of his prodigal brother from his state of alienation. Though both were no more than dead, yet his coming to life was attended with more aggravating circumstances of regret and sorrow than the latter. But he that is forgiven much will love much. How many, like Israel, have lost their first love, and wandered far off from the path of wisdom and of peace? How many have forsaken the fountain of living waters and hewed out cisterns, broken cisterns, which hold no water? How many have turned to worship the things of their own hands, and idols, human, made of clay? How many have trusted in themselves or relied upon others for help and comfort, and found, though late—"cursed is man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm?" How many have been stubborn under the providence of God, and sought to have their own desires and their own ways, and not willing to accept the punishment of God for their sins, which were designed to bring them to repentance? How many have found their way to be hedged up so they could not find and enjoy their idols, or their earthly lovers; have been disappointed, and have felt themselves fatherless, and orphanized in this world. And nothing but the extremity of human misery has prevailed to drive them, (and happy are they it does) to find a source of help and comfort; if perchance there might be even yet, some pitying eye or guiding hand to lead his wayward child out of this wilderness lost state, and soothe the fearful and desolated; and bind up the spirit of the broken heart; and have found that pitying eye and guiding hand to lead, to comfort, and to save.

And they have been enabled composedly, and with penitent, filial confidence, to say

All on earth I've loved, or trusted,
Take them; only be thou near,
On the spot, where they have perished,
Father, let thy love appear.

I will follow at thy bidding,
Only make the path way plain,
Let me know that Thou art leading
I will never doubt again.

Let us notice in the last chapter, the perfect discernment of the Spirit of what is in man, and the working of the inward heart life; what its needs are and what will quiet it under trouble, free it from the fears, and bondage of sin, and give it lasting peace. Then with David it can say, Thy loving kindness, Lord, is better than life, and there is none in heaven but thee, and there is none on earth I desire besides thee; and though my heart and flesh (and all sources earthly) fail, thou art my strength and my everlasting portion.

Let us observe the two first words (with others) of salutation—"O Israel"—pity, solicitude, and love, seem to mingle in its utterance. Oh! lost and benighted one, in deep affliction—not knowing distinctly where to turn from impending evils, and the Spirit whispers, "return to (him who deigned to call himself in former years) the Lord thy God." Well, I am deeply convinced there is none can help me but the Almighty God. But what has been the cause of all these calamities, and afflictive providences, that have been over my life long? Why didst thou allow thy creature to have a being? Oh despair! one here is the cause of thy trouble, and thy calamities—"Thou hast fallen by thine iniquities." Ah! I see them; my life long. What can I say? I am condemned. What can I do? "Woe is me, for I have sinned, therefore mine eyes are dim, and my heart is faint."

"Take with you words" (as you return to the Lord) and "say unto him; take away (a part? no), all iniquity, and receive us graciously, so shall we render the calves (sacrifices) of our lips."

But now, Ashur—the Assyrian, proposes to help and deliver us. Ah me! his promises of good have often been flattering, but he is "treacherous," and we have learned by bitter experience it will not do to lean on him, or on earthly resources, or in mortal man, they cannot save us. Neither will we look to the strength of horses to "ride" in battle. Neither will we say any more to the work of our hands, ye are our gods; they have failed to help and save us in our trouble, they are vanities. And since they have failed us, and we had renounced the God of our fathers, therefore we find ourselves entirely fatherless; though we may have earthly fathers in this world.

Here now, in the right time and place, the blessed Spirit has brought to my mind that blessed promise, "in God the fatherless findeth mercy," and I am just the one described. Oh how good this sounds to my orphanized, desolate heart.

But the evils of my transgressions are great, my bad habits are strong, I am polluted and defiled in heart, my physical evils are great, and I am on the remnant of my life. Is there a perfect remedy? "I will heal your backslidings." Can that be possible? I know all things are possible with God, and I know I need love and pity. Can I expect this love, only as it is best, or necessary, for my Father to love? "I will love you freely:" and now, I know, though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortest me. Isa. xii., 1. Before this, thou wast unto me as a lion, and as a young lion to the house of Judah; thou didst tear me, and go away; thou didst take away and none could rescue me; but in the day of my affliction, thou didst cause me to seek thee early. Hos. v., 15. And now I see always that the Lord "in the day of his rough wind, stayeth his east wind;" and by this, hast thou (truly) purged the iniquity of Jacob. And this is all the fruit (or cause) to take away our sins, when he would make all the stones of the altar as chalk stones (stones on which we made offerings to our gods), but now they are beaten as chalk stones, and the groves and images are destroyed. Isa. xxvii., 5–10. For now the Lord hath said, I will be as the dew to Israel, and he shall grow as the lily; his branches shall spread, and his beauty shall be as the olive-tree. For the Lord will rest in his love; he will joy over thee with singing. Zeph. iii., 17.

Therefore let all who fear the Lord praise him; and glorify him, all the seed of Jacob. For he has not despised nor abhorred the affliction of the afflicted, neither hath he hid his face from him; but when he cried unto him, he heard. Psa. xxii., 23, 24.

Thus it is, by these means, the Lord will fulfil his precious promises to Israel, and all who shall by these return to the Lord their God. And hereby will be fulfilled this that is written—I will betroth thee unto me forever; yea, I will betroth thee unto me in righteousness, and in judgment, and in loving kindness, and in mercies. I will even betroth thee unto me in faithfulness; and thou shalt know the Lord.

These promises, though connected with judgments or tribulation, surpass every thing else in beauty and excellence. They are like the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion, where the Lord commanded his blessing, even life everlasting. The spirit of love and tenderness that breathes through them is not exceeded, perhaps, by any thing in the Bible. And as addressed to penitent ones—the forsaken, the sorrowing, lone, and broken-hearted—are more sweet and soothing than the kisses of the warm genial zephyrs to the opening spring buds, shining beneath their dewy tears; and winter's long day is done—gone, forever gone.

Who is a god like our God, who pardoneth iniquity. He will not always chide, neither will he keep his anger forever; for he delighteth in mercy. And thus he still invites. Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth, for I am God, and there is none else.

'Tis thus the Lord his love reveals,
To call poor wanderers home:
More than a father's love he feels,
And welcomes all who come.

From Emeline Wood.

Albany, N. Y., March, 1869.

Br. Storrs: My heart goes out with gratitude to God and our precious brethren and sisters holding the Life views, for their sympathy for me in my affliction, for I felt assured that they interceded for me. How true that if we have that pure love fervently for each other, then we can say, if one member suffers all the members sympathize with it. I praise God that I have part with this precious band. God has answered our prayers, and has fully restored my sight. Some time since I was awaked one morning out of sleep by a voice saying, "If you abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you." O how my heart did rejoice. I held on to the promise. My mind ran after the afflicted ones, and then I thought of myself, and said, "Jesus, I do believe that thou canst heal me now." I felt a sensation run all over me, and I could see as well as ever I did. O that God would enable his children to exercise faith. Brethren and sisters pray for the afflicted. I wish I could express my gratitude to God and to you. My heart overflows with love. If God so loved the world as to give His Son to die for us, will He not with him freely give us all things? Is it not some of the "all things" to heal us if we are his children?

I have had some most cheering letters from some of the afflicted ones, and almost forgot myself in pleading for them. Then the comforting words of Jesus, "If two of you are agreed as touching anything, it shall be done for you of my Father," etc. I am holding on for the afflicted ones believingly. One dear sister has to go on crutches and do all her work, and has done so for two years. Remember her at a throne of grace. She is a Life believer and away from all who hold the Life views. Let our sympathy and prayers go out for her. How blessed for us who have no sympathy for the theology of the day to have the Bible and the Herald of Life to cheer us on our pilgrimage, and to feel that the home Jesus has gone to prepare for us, where afflictions come no more, is near. Praise God, O my soul. I wish I could do more for His glory. I bless the Lord for letting this glorious light spread. There are some that are searching for the truth, and it comes up like pearls before them and makes them rejoice. I hope this will be one of the best years that has ever been known for the cause of truth. May God send it where it will be received in good and honest hearts. The Lord help us all to do what we can for this end.

Standing Fire.

A young soldier, going to his barrack room to sleep for the first time, quietly knelt down to pray in the presence of his comrades. This act was the signal for a storm. Hisses, shouts and whistlings filled the room with hideous noises. Belts were thrown at the kneeling soldier, and one man leaped upon the bed and shouted in his ear. But he was unmoved to the end of the prayer, when he arose and quietly went to his repose. The next night his comrades eagerly watched to see if he would dare pray a second time. To their surprise, he again dropped on his knees, and they saluted him with the same noises as on the previous evening. He did not flinch, however. The third evening he kneeled down and prayed, regardless of their continued mocking and noise. On the fourth evening the noise was less; on the fifth it was still less, and on the sixth, one of the soldiers exclaimed—"He stands fire, he stands fire. He's genuine." After that no one disturbed him. He had overcome opposition—he had won respect.

Be Still.

"Be still, and know that I am God;"
The way is dark and wild
Through which thou goest, my child;
I cannot promise thee a stormless path,
For lightning's scath
And thunder's roar the pilgrim's journey hath.

"Be still, and know that I am God;"
The elements are mine;
It is a hand divine
That guides the whirlwind in its awful course;
The mystic force
Of hail and tempest finds in me its source.

"Be still, and know that I am God;"
In danger's hour be calm;
This is thy secret balm,
To know that thou art safe when I command:
Then only stand
And see deliverance by my mighty hand.

"Be still, and know that I am God;"
Ask not the reason why
I weave such mystery
Through all the warp of thy frail life below;
For thou shalt know,
And read the plan in heaven's serener glow.

"Be still, and know that I am God;"
Through storms and fears be still;
Only thy part fulfil,
And as thou walkest I will shelter thee;
Thy foes shall flee,
And thou shalt journey all the way with me.

"Be still, and know that I am God;"
'Twill be enough at last,
When all thy warfare's past,
Star-crowned thy head and in thy hand a palm,
To sing thy psalm
Where storms of earth end in eternal calm.

Children's Department.

To the Children, by the Editor.

Dear Ones: We sometimes almost wish we had some little ones of our own; but we have none, either children or grandchildren, so we must be content to minister to those of others, and hope that many of our little readers may grow up to have part in the kingdom of God when he comes to reign as King on the earth, who once said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for, of such is the kingdom of God."

But we took our pen to tell you that we have several little periodicals in our "exchange list" that we would be glad to know you had the privilege of reading. We do not say that we approve of all there is in them, but the same is true of any other reading we find, except the Bible. Some of your friends write stories for you about Bible characters, but there is one character presented in Genesis that we have thought cannot be improved by anybody: that is "Joseph." We have had two or three stories written about him and sent us for the Children's Department; and although well written and well-intended, they fall so far below the history of him in Genesis that we feel to publish them would be a waste of labor. Nothing in human language can be compared with the plain language of Scripture in relation to Joseph. When you want an interesting story, children, turn to Genesis, chapters xxxvii., xxxix., and onward to xlviii., and read the whole, or get your parents to read to you, and you will not lack for entertainment, and profit, too.

But about these little magazines, we have by exchanging our paper for them. We said, we have several which we wish our little readers had access to. We do not know which we could recommend most. The interest in them would depend something on the age of our little friends. For the more advanced ones, "The Little Corporal," published at Chicago, Ills., might suit best. For the very youngest, "The Nursery," published in Boston, Mass., is excellent. As a medium, "The Children's Hour," published in Philadelphia, Pa., by "T. S. Arthur & Son," is very fine. As we have never seen this till lately, and have not spoken of it before, we will say, it is a beautiful monthly at $1 25 a year; 32 pages per number. To finish our remarks this week will give you the following short story from the April number:

Bertie's Mistake.

BY M. J.

"Mamma is very busy, and I'm going to help her," said Bertie, resolutely, to himself. "Let me see—what will I do? I'll wind the clock, first thing—and then—"

Bertie pushed a chair up to the table, climbed into it, and from it to the table, and succeeded in reaching the clock. He opened "the funny little door," and after watching the pendulum two or three minutes, took out the key. When he thought the clock was wound enough, he tried to get down, wondering what he should next, when the chair tipped and over he went. Mamma came running in; and there was a great bump for her to bathe—a pair of blue eyes that looked like violets full of dew, for Bertie was a little boy, and could not help crying—a little heart to be comforted. Mamma did it all, and went back to her work, and Bertie out-doors to play, and nobody thought any more of the clock till she put her head in at the door an hour later, glanced at it, and turned back with a little sigh of relief. "Not so late as I thought, by at least an hour. I'm so glad! I shall get through in nice season."

"Mamma," said Bertie, by and by, "I'm hungry; may I have a lunch?" Mamma put down her pie-plates, spread a large slice of wheaten bread with butter that morning churned, and had scarcely resumed her work when she heard a well-known footstep, and in a moment:

"What, bread and butter at this time of day!" Bertie, boy, couldn't you wait five minutes for your dinner?"

"What does that mean?" thought Bertie's mamma, as she went hastily across the room, and opening the door looked at the clock. There were the hands pointing to ten—just as they had been when she looked before.

"I am very sorry," Bertie heard her say to papa; "but I have never known that clock stop in all the time we've had it. I'll hurry dinner all I can."

"Haven't you a little cold meat of some kind?" he asked.

"Yes," she replied. "I was going to mince the corned beef, but the potatoes are not boiled enough yet."

"Never mind," said he; "give me a couple of slices of bread and butter with cold beef between them, and a cup of tea, if you can get it quickly; for I must take the early afternoon train for Milford, on business. I did not know it when I left home this morning."

Mamma boiled her kettle as soon as possible and made the tea.

While waiting, papa went into the sitting-room to set the clock, and the clock wouldn't go. It was out of order; and little Bertie, sorry and ashamed, but honest, told about his trying to wind it.

Papa at first looked rather serious, but he knew his little boy's word could be trusted, and that he had not wilfully done wrong, so he only said, in a gentle tone:

"Remember this, Bertie, and when you want to help any one again, look for the right way to do it. You meant it well, but you see that you have made mamma late with her dinner, and it will cost a dollar or more to repair the clock."

Bertie's lip quivered, and tears rolled down. "Please, papa," he said, "take the money in my bank to pay for the clock—there's enough, isn't there?"

"Papa doesn't want it, darling. He wouldn't take it for the world. He only tells you about this to have you careful in time to come."

And Bertie was careful. The next time he tried to help his mother he asked her what he should do, and this he found much the best way. Bertie had begun to learn a truth that we are all of us, little folks and grown folks, very apt to overlook—that in order to be "harmless as doves," we must try to be "prudent as serpents."

If you practise this while you are children, you will form the habit, so that it will be far easier to do so when you are grown up. It will keep you from doing harm, help you to do real good, and save you many a heartache.

Restitution.

"Lord, wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" When it is restored, we shall find, 1st, The territory to be the land of promise, the land God promised to "Abraham and his seed." The territory of David's dominion was from the river of Egypt to the great river, the river Euphrates; but there is another promise. Abraham is the Father of many nations, and in him, and his seed, all the families of the earth are to be blessed, "For the promise that he should be the heir of the world was not to Abraham or his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith." Rom., iv., 13. Thus, the world is the land of promise to Abraham and his seed; but not in its present corrupt, wicked state or condition; for he "desired a better country, that is, an heavenly." Therefore, the promise of the heirship of the world is given to Christ, the seed of Abraham, and heir of David's Throne; for we read in the second Psalm, "Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion; I will declare the decree, the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."

2d. The heirs. Now God called Abraham out from his country, and from his father's house, "and told him that he should be a father of many nations; and Paul says, he is the father of the faithful; and those that be of faith will be blessed with faithful Abraham." Now who are the heirs? Let us listen to Paul while he argues the case. First he lays down a principle of law, that a covenant once made and confirmed cannot be changed, though it be but a man's covenant. To whom, then, does the original deed or covenant conveying the land of promise belong? Hear Paul again: "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made; he saith not, and to seeds, as of many, but as of one. And to thy seed, which is Christ." But the Jews lay claim to it on the ground of the law, that under the law of Moses God gave it to their fathers.

But Paul answers—"That the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. For if the inheritance is of the law, it is no more of promise, but God gave it to Abraham by promise. Wherefore serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made. Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ. But after that faith is come we are no longer under a schoolmaster. For ye are all children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Baptized into Christ by the baptism of the Holy Ghost, the body of the Christian is as literally a temple of the Holy Ghost, the seed and principle of eternal life, as our natural bodies are the temples of the blood of Adam, the principle of our mortal life. We shall be filled with and quickened by the Holy Spirit, in the resurrection, as we are now filled with and quickened by the blood of Adam: for God has made of one blood all nations of men that now dwell upon the earth.

He will then make of one Spirit all who will dwell in his kingdom. "The first Adam was made a living soul, the last Adam was made a quickening spirit." As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God. It must be our mortal bodies quickened by the Spirit that raised up Christ from the dead; for Paul says, "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies, by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Hence, all who have in them that Spirit by which Christ was quickened from the dead, have put on Christ, are members of his body, are Abraham's seed, and will be heirs according to the promise. May we all be baptized by one Spirit, into one body. Amen.

Your brother in hope of Eternal Life through Jesus Christ, B. Browne.

The Shadow of a Great Rock.

How delicious are the figures of the Bible? Fitting the age and land of their origin, they nevertheless adapt themselves to all lands and ages. In that hot clime, with the sun pouring its fulness of flame on every spot, the open country becomes a land of intolerable weariness. The air glistens with heat. A blur of fire seems to fill the eyes,—a fog of flame. The traveller must push across the burning ocean. Duty and destiny compel the journey. But how shall he endure the sun-heated furnace? He wraps his head in the fleecy turban. He covers his eyes with darkening shades. He wets his brow with cooling drops. He spreads the umbrella against this shower of fire. Yet all these are but feeble protections. Turban, water, parasol,—the true meaning of this word, warder off of the sun,—all are insufficient for his comfort and safety. Across the blinding desert, he sees the tall, dark rock arise. Black, treeless, waterless, perhaps, it has one excellence—shadow. He pushes on, over the crackling soil, touches its mass of darkness, drops under its anti-sunward side and bathes himself from brow to feet in its refreshing coolness. The eye of the sky glares on him in vain. He looks out from his retreat over the blazing land, and feels yet more from very contrast his comfortable estate. The rock is not treeless and waterless. It drips its cooling waters to his thirsty lips. Grasses spring from its base, mosses creep out of its crevices. Shrubs rustle their leaflets in delight, and mayhap even trees under its protection have grown up to maturity, and

"Clap their little hands in glee
With one continuous sound."

Thus have we seen and felt the delicious refreshment of the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. So has every Christian felt the more than fulness of this symbol in his journeyings through the weary wilderness of time. On this path he must travel. Necessity is laid upon him. He cannot escape it if he would. The heats of temptation fall fiercely on him. The blight of death changes the garden of the affections into a desert. Failure of cherished plans, in which fortune and fame are mingled, casts its ingredient into the cup that he is compelled to drink. Strong delusions rise and rage upon him like desert simooms of stifling dust and heat, sure death to him who breathes their mixture of hot passion and hotter lie.

Amid these bewilderments and weariness, faith in the Lord our Saviour rises before the devout Christian. The great Rock, of the earliest formation, before the foundations of the world, stands out above the hot and flinty earth, higher than the heavens whose blaze is enshrouding the soul. How gloriously it lifts its head into the fiery sky. It is dark with excess of light. It is solid as the nature of God. The heart of man hastens to it and throws itself, weary to exhaustion, under its cooling cliffs. What refreshment steals over his spirit! Brooks trickle down its sides, rivers flow at its feet, grasses gladden its meads, and forests tower by its water-courses. The whole landscape is

"With sudden green and herbage crowned,
And streams are murmuring all around."

So goes the traveller from the blazing Sinai to the refreshment of the Jordan Valley, with its cliffs and brooks and flowers and shade. So goes the traveller in Africa from the burning desert to the ravines of the mountains. So hies every weary, sin-sick soul to the Lord our Righteousness.

Blessed relief! Have you sought and found it, bewildered wanderer? Or are you seeking it sorrowing? Are you blinded by popular fashion, whether of doctrine or of passion? Does false opinion wrap your mind in its sheets of fire? Does sinful indulgence pour its bright and burning solicitations upon your fevered soul? Is the theatre alluring above the church, the novel more than the Bible, the ball-room more than the class-room, the card-table above the Lord's table, the cup of delirium more than the cup of Christ? Are your passions burning up your soul? Does Spiritualism attack you on the two most naked sides of the soul, love for the dead and lust for the living? Does Rationalism offer its false reason as better than the revealed reason of God? Whatever delusion assails you, hasten to the shadow of the Great Rock. All other preventives will avail naught. This only affords full and eternal relief. Under its shadow naught can blind or harm. It threads the light of truth with its darkness in a happy blending. It covers all the earth and all the future in its calm. All your mortal journey can be performed in its comforting shadow. Your eternal life may be along the same celestial hills. Hasten, weary one, to Christ. Fly to His shelter, to His refreshment. Lie down in His arms. Dwell in His presence. Walk in His truth, and your soul shall bathe in the fulness of His love here and delight forever in the shadow and sunlight of His countenance divine.—Zion's Herald.

Discoveries in Jerusalem.

Recent intelligence from the Palestine Exploring Expedition adds two more contributions to our knowledge of the city in which all Christendom feels so deep an interest. Lieut. Warren has sunk a new shaft through the rubbish of earth and stones near the south east corner of the ancient temple area, now called the Haram, on its outside eastern face, to a depth of 70 feet below the present surface. He reached at that depth the wall where it rests upon the solid rock, and three letters, about five inches high, (supposed to be Hebrew or Samaritan) were found painted in red color upon one of the stones, also broken pottery, and a lamp in a small hole scooped out of the rock. Two more red letters were afterward found on another stone, and a deeply engraved mark something like the Roman numeral II.

But the more interesting discovery was in the extreme north end of the Haram enclosure, where Lieutenant Warren, descending through the narrow opening of a tank or cistern some 42 feet, came to water three feet deep. Standing in this, and lighting a magnesian wire to illuminate the surrounding space, he was astonished to find an apartment much like a church, 63 feet from north to south, and 57 feet from east to west, and 28 feet to the roof which is arched. Along the two sides are piers with lower arches 14 feet high, dividing the space up into little bays or side chapels. In one place a small opening in the north end, two feet by one, and 14 feet up the wall, lets in a dim light along a passage from the side of the so-called Pool of Bethesda, which is 23 feet six inches distant. This may have been made to let off superfluous water, if this place was meant originally for a tank, which Lieutenant Warren is disposed to deny.

Thus every week the researches are bringing to light new antiquities—to make an Irish bull. They must be prosecuted diligently and thoroughly while the authorities are well disposed. Surely the deep interest in Palestine manifested by Americans in their travel and in their reading, will come to the aid of the exhausted funds of the Exploring Committee. As stated last week, we have been requested in their behalf to transmit funds, and wish to send not less than a thousand dollars, as a first remittance, in a short time. Let rich and poor forward donations without delay to this office.—The Advance.

The Effect of Mercy.

A soldier in the —th regiment of our army, a fine, gallant fellow, heard of the severe sickness of his wife. He applied for leave of absence, but was refused. The officers of his regiment then made a new application in his behalf, which was again refused. He left the army, but before he got away was retaken and brought in as a deserter. He was tried, found guilty, and summoned before the commanding officer to receive his sentence.

He entered the tent—a fine, tall, soldierly-looking man—saluted, and stood perfectly unmoved, while the officer read his fearful doom—"To be shot to death with musketry on the next Friday." Not a muscle of his face twitched, not a limb quivered. "I deserve it, sir," he replied respectfully; "I deserted from my flag. Is that all, sir?"

"No," replied the officer; I have something else for you," and taking another paper, he read aloud the doomed man's pardon. The undaunted spirit, which severity had failed to move, was completely broken down by clemency. He dropped to the ground, shaking, sobbing, and overcome; and being restored to his regiment, proved himself grateful for the mercy shown him and was soon promoted for good conduct.

There are many who say, "We are not going to be frightened into religion," and who profess to be too brave to fear God's wrath. But will you withstand the proffers of his grace? If you shrink not from the curse of the law, will you not hear the tender entreaty of the cross? Ah! if, like the deserter, you really heard the sentence ringing in your ears; if like him you really felt that you deserved it; if you knew that the execution of it was near at hand, like him you would be broken down by the voice of Jesus saying, "Thy sins are forgiven thee;" gladly would you welcome the gracious pardon. Shut not your ears to that compassionate voice. Throw yourself at Jesus' feet, take the forgiveness he freely offers, and let your life henceforth show that his grace has not been bestowed in vain.—American Messenger.

There are those who know not how to judge of merit but by success, and who therefore blame the leader of an enterprise for a defeat, when the fault was not in him, but in themselves, the instruments he worked with.

Cast a Line for Yourself.

A young man stood listlessly watching some anglers on a bridge. He was poor and dejected. At last approaching a basket filled with wholesome looking fish he added:

"If now I had these I would be happy. I could sell them at a fair price, and buy me food and lodgings."

"I will give you just as many and just as good fish," said the owner, who chanced to overhear his words, "if you would do me a trifling favor."

"And what is that?" asked the other, eagerly."

"Only to tend this line till I come back. I wish to go on a short errand."

The proposal was gladly accepted. The old man was gone so long that the young man began to be impatient. Meanwhile the hungry fish snapped at the baited hook, and the young man lost all his depression in the excitement of pulling them in; and when the owner of the line returned he had caught a large number. Counting out from them as many as were in the basket, and presenting them to the young man, the old fisherman said:

"I fulfil my promise from the fish you have caught, to teach you, whenever you see others earning what you need, to waste no time in fruitless wishing, but to cast a line for yourself."—Home Monthly.

Blessed to Give.

People like to have things given them. It shows love and kindness; it shows we are thought of and cared about. In that respect God is like us. He likes presents. Can we please God by giving him? he who owns the world and the sun and all the stars. O yes, because he says so. Hear him: "My son, give me thy heart." And one who knew something about the mind of God says, "Present your bodies unto God." That must mean that we are to give ourselves entirely to him. Our tongues must praise him, our hands must work for his poor people, our feet must run to do good, our eyes must read his word, our knees must bow in prayer, our ears must hear his holy instruction, and, above all, our hearts must love him. That is what God loves to have us do. Does it seem that he who owns the world would care so about our poor gifts? But he does. O, let us then hasten to lay them at his feet. Let us now, to-day, give ourselves away to that blessed One who loves us with the best and tenderest love.—Child's Paper.

Look to Jesus.

Blessed words are these to the Christian's heart. How they comfort and encourage the drooping spirits of the weary ones struggling to win a crown of life. It is like a look to Calvary itself. It is like the blessed teaching of the Great Teacher to that little band who followed him through evil, as well as good report. Do we, as His servants, realize the sacredness of the privilege which we enjoy of looking to Jesus? When the tempter makes one feel that his labor has been in vain, and that souls, despite his efforts, are perishing around him; then, O then, how sweet to look to Jesus, and catch His smile of approval. When the clouds of affliction lower around the soul, and there seems no light for him, then he looks to Jesus, and immediately sees that "behind a frowning providence He hides a smiling face." How many a sufferer's heart has been made to rejoice, when in poverty he has looked to Jesus, and drawn supplies from the Bank of Heaven. Blessed be God, Christ recognizes every humble Christian draft on that bank, and none go empty away.—Zion's Herald.

John F. Roworth, St. Louis, Mo., writes: I have desired for some time to write to you, but being a stranger to you I have refrained. I trust we are not strangers in the Lord, though such in these earthly tabernacles, where we are separated far apart in this wilderness of sin and death. But in Christ Jesus, at his second coming at the last day, we may be raised up from the sleep of death to meet each other, and be one in him, to dwell forever in that tabernacle He has gone to prepare for those who love him. It is about two years since I first began to read the Herald of Life, which was sent me by my grandfather, William Roworth. From that time to this, I feel that I have gained strength from it. It has enabled me more fully to understand God's word; and as I have gained strength from time to time, I have endeavored to show it to those around me, and have received great encouragement from the acknowledgment of some in the belief that the wicked die an eternal death, instead of lingering in suffering in eternal torments. Yours, in hope of inheriting eternal life through the resurrection at the second coming of our Lord and Saviour.

Anecdote of Harrison Gray Otis.—Mr. Otis first studied divinity. He stated to a friend that the way he gave it up for law, was this. He commenced preaching, and, on one occasion having supplied a vacant pulpit in the neighborhood of Boston, he preached twice upon the Sabbath, and was waited upon on Monday morning by a deacon of the church, who asked him what he should pay him for his services. "Oh, I don't know," replied Mr. Otis, "give me what they are worth." The deacon gravely handed him a pistareen! Thinking if two sermons were worth but that, he had better turn to some other profession, he abandoned theology, and turned his attention to law.

Love is the golden threat that runs through the Gospel: God's love to us, ours to him, and one to another.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. Earth, not Heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. The Soul Saved or Lost. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

THE ENGLISH MIND IN MOTION.

THE IMMORTALITY QUESTION.

[The reference to Mr. Constable's pamphlet concluded the last insertion. Mr. Constable speaks as follows:]

"BEFORE the preaching of the gospel, the highest order of heathen intellect had framed for its satisfaction a theory of the immortality of the soul. While the generality of heathen philosophers taught that death was for all an eternal sleep,* there were 'high spirits of old' that strained their eyes to see, beyond the clouds of time, the dawning of immortality. Unable, as we are able, to connect it with God as its source, and with his promise as our assurance, they framed an idea of an immortality, self-existing in the soul itself. Plato, in his Phœdo, has given us the marvellous reading of Socrates, and Cicero has exhibited the argument in his Tusculan Questions. According to it, the soul is possessed of an inherent immortality. It is of necessity eternal. It could have no end: no death. What was true of one soul, was true of all souls alike, whether good or bad. They must exist somewhere, be it in Tartarus or Cocytus, in Pyriphlegethon, or the happy abodes of the purified. This sublime philosophical idea passed readily and early into the theology of the Christian church. We find it running throughout the reasoning of Tertullian and Augustine. Heedless of Paul's warning voice against philosophy, they became the feeble apes of Plato. They applied their theology, as he his philosophy, to all souls alike—to those of the reprobate as of the redeemed. They taught that the life of the former must be as eternal as that of the latter.

"To this view the declarations of Scripture relative to future punishment were attached, and by it these declarations were moulded. The eternity of this punishment, and the many passages which speak of life and pain as existing, at least in some classes of the damned, in hell, were joined to the heathen doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and hence was formed the plausible and generally accepted view, that not only was future punishment eternal, but that it also consisted in eternal life spent in eternal pain. The fears of mankind, and the laudable desire, on the part of Christian teachers, to warn by the most terrible of all denunciations, filled in this awful description of the future of the lost. The utter callousness to suffering, produced by the long reign of heathen cruelty, and shared to some extent even by the Christian mind of the period, bore it without a shudder if not with positive satisfaction.

"The foundation of this theory was a mere fancy; that which gave continuity to its parts but a rope of sand. The essential immortality of the soul was, as Pliny called it, a figment. Its inherent fallacy will be to us apparent from the fact that it involved of necessity a past eternity of the soul as much as a future. Cicero gives it expression when he says of the soul, 'It can neither be born, nor can it die.' Some of the Fathers, shunning the first part of the proposition, eagerly adopted the second. They were just as wrong as, only less consistent than, the heathen thinkers. Others, judging more truly, rejected all idea of any essential immortality of the soul.† Scripture denies the entire proposition: its second part as much as its first. It tells us, indeed, that the soul does not die when the body dies. To our aspirations for eternity it answers by the promise of eternal life through Christ Jesus, but there it stops. All essential immortality of the soul it denies as explicitly as it denies it to the body. To one Being only (to God), does it allow to have 'life in himself;' of one Being only (God) does it allow immortality; i. e., the absolute incapacity of death (aphanasia), to be an attribute. John v. 56; 1 Tim. vi., 16. And here, as in everything else, Scripture is the book of the highest reason. That which has had a beginning may have an end. That on which God has bestowed life he may and can inflict death. The highest intelligences, as much as the lowest, must depend on him for the continuance of their life. Let him withdraw his sustaining power and the mighty archangel becomes a thing of naught as completely as the insect which dances in the sunbeams for an hour and then passes away forever." pp. 8–10.

The result of this adoption and absorption of the heathen doctrine of natural immortality into the Christian church has been most disastrous. As Mr. Minton well says: "To a heathen it was little matter whether he believed in the immortality of the soul or not. Christianity was poisoned by the infusion." And "there must, in truth," to use the words of Mr. Barlow, "be divine vitality in the Christian faith, when in the face of such a creed as this, it has been able to survive."

The charge of "novelty" brought by some of the more ignorant opponents of the doctrine held by the writers before us, cannot be sustained. Besides the references given by Mr. Constable to Justin Martyr and Irenæus, the fact is, that the Apologists, as a class, did not believe in the natural immortality of the soul; and from one of their number, Theophilus, Bishop of Antioch, writing in the second century, we have a statement of this "novel" doctrine as precise and explicit as can be found in any of our recent publications. The passage is so admirable and so important, that we cannot refrain from quoting it. "But some one will say to us, Was man made by nature mortal? Certainly not. Was he, then, immortal? Neither do we affirm this. But one will say, Was he, then, nothing? Not even this hits the mark. He was by nature neither mortal nor immortal. For if he (God) had made him immortal from the beginning, he would have made him God. Again, if he had made him mortal, God would seem to be the cause of his death. Neither, then, immortal nor yet mortal did he make him, but, as we have said above, capable of both; so that if he should incline to the things of immortality, keeping the commandments of God, he should receive, as a reward from him, immortality, and so become God; but if, on the other hand, he should turn to the things of death, disobeying God, he should himself be the cause of death to himself; for God made him free, and with power over himself. That, then, which man brought upon himself through carelessness and disobedience, this God now vouchsafes to him as a gift* through his own philanthropy and pity, when men obey him. For as man disobeying drew death upon himself, so, obeying the will of God, he who desires it is able to procure for himself life everlasting. For God has given us a law and holy commands, and every one who keeps these can be saved, and, obtaining the resurrection, can inherit incorruption.†

We cannot now examine in detail the various arguments for the natural immortality of the soul, and endeavor to estimate their real value, but we may, perhaps, be allowed to indulge in a brief reminiscence of mental experience. We have a still vivid remembrance of the occasion, long years ago, on which the first tangible doubt regarding the popular doctrine of human immortality was injected into our mind. Not from the reading of any book, nor as the result of any train of abstract ratiocination, did this doubt arise, but while walking hastily through one of the poorest and most degraded districts of a great city. From the tolerably wide, but mean and squalid thoroughfare we traversed, numerous narrow and unsavory courts branched off which seemed the chosen haunts of misery and crime. Disreputable and shameless girls and women passed along, brutal-looking men lounged about the low public houses, or gathered in groups with the women at the entrances of the courts, from which groups many an obscene expression and foul oath fell upon the shrinking ear, while blighted, filthy, and half-naked children crawled upon the pavement or dabbled in the gutter. A miasma of moral as well as physical pollution seemed to fill the murky air; compassion and aversion struggled together in the breast; when, in a moment—by one of those lightning flashes of thought which reveal the deepest recesses of the soul—the question suggested itself—Are all these immortals? Is this (excepting the small minority whom divine grace and human charity may rescue from their present condition) what, morally and spiritually, it can accord with infinite wisdom and love to perpetuate to all eternity? That thought was a seed planted in the soul, which neither the traditions of the past, nor the cares and sorrows of the then present, had power to kill: it lived and grew as time passed on, it led to deeper and more earnest searching into the teaching of the inspired word, issuing finally in our present assured conviction that neither from reason nor Scripture is there any sufficient evidence of the tremendous dogma of man's natural immortality to be discovered.

Years afterwards, while reading a thoughtful book, we met with the following passage, and recognized in it a gratifying identity of mental experience:

"The hardest trial to our faith is the actual aspect of the living multitudes of mankind. Looking round the world, it is very hard to find one's immortals or celestials, that are to be. Not always do men seem worthy of living on this earth, which one might imagine to more like heaven, than they are akin to angels. Sometimes it rather seems as if the earth were waiting for its fit inhabitants, than that its present inhabitants were entitled to spurn the world beneath them in their haste to ascend into a better.

"I raise my eyes from my paper, and what a beautiful vision lies before me! The blue sky reflected on these ample waters gives me a double heaven—one above, and one beneath me; and those islands of enchantment, Ischia and Capri, seem to be suspended, floating midway between them. And now the whole surface of the sea is glowing like an entire sapphire, on which a thousand rainbows have been thrown and broken. 'Surely,' I exclaim, 'here, if anywhere, man might have been immortal!'

Yet, if I descend from my solitude and pass through yonder neighboring city, I shall find myself amid a noisy, quarrelsome multitude, each one of whom would think it the grossest insult if I doubted that he was an immortal spirit, waiting to put on his angelic nature 'in another and better world.' Pity he cannot put on a little of it here.*"

For Mr. Grant*—about whose book we shall have something to say presently—in the teeth of such a testimony as this to assert, that "we have no evidence that any of the Fathers of the first four centuries embraced the doctrine of Annihilation;" and again, that he "cannot find that it had a single advocate of any note during the Patristic period of ecclesiastical history" (pp. 6, 4, m. i.), is simply to manifest either his total ignorance as to the facts of the case, or his utter disregard of truth. We much prefer to accept the former supposition, yet to do so involves the necessity of also concluding that he had never read the book he mentions, and whose arguments he undertakes to disprove.

THE HUMAN NATURE OF CHRIST.

BY REV. W. DELOSS LOVE.

IT is a favorite method with some at the present day, to dispose of the difficulties of the doctrine of the Trinity, by denying the human mental nature of Christ, and asserting that he was only God in a human body. The doctrine is not new, but has come round again in the revolving cycle of human opinions.

That he had a human nature of some sort, none who believe the Scriptures will deny; for we have his own declaration more than sixty times repeated, that he is "the Son of Man," and one Apostle calls him, "the man Christ Jesus." The only question is, what was, and is, the nature of his humanity. "Jesus increased in wisdom and stature." The "stature" refers to his human body, the "wisdom" certainly to his mind, for wisdom is in no sense an attribute of the body, but always of the mind. If Jesus' mind were only divine, it could not be true that he increased in wisdom, for the infinite God never learned anything new, and never can increase in wisdom. Is it said that God was only mentally beclouded by taking the human form, and that increase in wisdom was rising from the cloud into light? Then who ruled and held the universe in the meantime? It is unreasonable, and doubtless impossible for Infinity to negative itself. Our God does not sleep. It is said that the language describes only the appearance to men? It is not appearance but reality that is spoken of, else the language is fitted to deceive, which cannot be.

"Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham." Certainly, God was not the son of David. That would be as bad as the Catholic doctrine that Mary is the mother of God. Christ was the son of David and of Abraham in a human relation alone. But, was his human sonship simply in his body? What do we mean when we speak of a son? Is it only body without mind that constitutes sonship? When we stand over the coffin and speak of the dead as the son of such an one, do we mean only the body by the term son, or the soul also? Certainly the latter. When Jesus spoke of himself so many times as the "Son of Man," his words were fitted to deceive his hearers, and all after generations that read the Scriptures, if he did not imply that he had a human mental nature. He was not properly the Son of Man if he had no human spirit.

"He took on him the seed of Abraham." It follows that he took the common nature of man. But, does "seed" mean bodies, or bodies and minds both? Can we go to a Jewish cemetery, and there in a fresh grave find the "seed of Abraham?" Or must we go to the living men? "Seed" implies souls. The next verse: "Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren." This means that he was made like unto his brethren, the "seed of Abraham." He was so much like them as to correspond to them in all essential parts, though being more than they. He had their likeness, their nature. But was Christ like the seed of Abraham if his spirit were only Deity? Is man like Deity in a human body? Away with so shocking a thought! When the "Word" became like man, he took man's mental as well as bodily nature.

"We have not a high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." The priesthood of Christ is founded on the fact of his similarity to man, for whom he becomes high priest. His sympathy for mankind is based especially on his likeness to them. He is touched with the feeling of our infirmities. But if he had no human soul, how could he be affected with the peculiar sense of our infirmities by his own experience? How is His sympathy commended to us if He had not our mental nature? "He was in all points tempted like as we are." The body was not tempted. Was God tempted as we are? The Scriptures tell us that He is not tempted of evil. But Christ was tempted of evil. He was tempted to ambition, though he yielded not. He was tempted to distrust his Father, yet without sin. In God's perfection and infinity, temptation would seem to be impossible. It must be that Christ had a human mind that was tempted.

Yet again: Christ often addressed his Father, "O righteous Father." "Thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee." The Father also spoke of his Son. When Christ was baptized, and when he was on the mount of transfiguration, he said, "This is my beloved Son." But if Christ were only God in a human body, with no human soul, all this language, all these acts of address, were only scenic, fictitious, fitted to deceive us. Did Jesus, when he addressed his Father, address only himself? He did only that, on the theory we oppose.

Christ is now exalted to the right hand of the Father; he is the glorious Advocate with the Father for his people. Does that mean that it is only a human body glorified, that is the Advocate? It means just that, if Christ were only God in a human body. Or, Christ the Advocate with the Father—is that simply the Father the Advocate with the Father? If so the Bible language is fitted to mislead us. Are we not driven to the conclusion that such a theory of the Redeemer is wrong, that it brings unutterable confusion into the Scriptures, and cannot with any propriety be tolerated an instant! Will not the great community of Bible readers always concede, that Jesus Christ was human as well as divine, and that his humanity consisted in something else than a mere fleshly body? Will they not say, that to be the "Son of Man," and to take upon him, not the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham, means that he took with his divine spirit a human body and a human soul?

—The Advance.

JACOB'S LADDER.

BEFORE entering on the history of Jacob we should bear in mind what the Lord said to his mother Rebekah before he and his brother Esau were born, Gen. xxv., 23. Here we find the declaration of the Lord, that Jacob and Esau are two nations, and two manner of people. This fact should not be lost sight of in the history of Jacob as an individual: for his history is not only the history of an individual, but it is at the same time a history of a certain nation, or manner of people. He is the father of a people called Jews, noted for their shrewdness in driving a good bargain with little regard to moral honesty; and who very naturally inherit the qualities and natural disposition of their father, who, on making his first bargain, that we have any account of, Jewed his own brother out of his birthright. Next, by a most consummate falsehood, he Jewed his poor old father out of his brother's blessing.

But this second act of dishonesty cost him some trouble. Esau, justly resenting his injuries, threatened his life; whereupon he found it necessary to flee into Mesopotamia, to his uncle Laban, his mother's brother. And, having again received his father's blessing, he left Beersheba and set out on his journey toward Haran: and as night came on he took up his lodging near a place called Luz; with the naked earth for his bed, the starry heavens for his blanket, and a hard stone for his pillow. But he was Jacob, whom God had blessed, "yea, and he shall be blessed."

And under those apparently adverse circumstances he slept sweetly, and dreamed he saw a ladder set upon the earth, the top of which reached to heaven; and on it the angels of God were ascending and descending; and on the top of it appeared the Almighty: who, after assuring him of all the blessings he had before promised to Abraham, and to Isaac his father, closed in these words, "Behold, I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest, and will bring thee again into this land; for I will not leave thee until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of."

Here let us pause a moment and contemplate this mysterious ladder, which reached from earth to heaven, with the messengers of God passing to and fro upon it, and the Almighty above it. This is the connecting link between heaven and earth: and the same infinitely good and wise being, at the top of the ladder, overrules all in both places. But we, too often, looking only through the dim spectacles of doubt, and seeing only the lower rounds of the ladder, murmur and complain of adversity; forgetting that all things work together for good to those who trust in God.

It is only when we can look through the far-seeing telescope of faith that we can see to the top of the ladder, and behold the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and of Jacob above it. Then we can smile at adversity, and sinking into a calm and pious resignation, exclaim, "Not my will, but thine be done."

As our readers are generally familiar with the history of Jacob during his stay with Laban, we shall pass over it, merely remarking that he was the same Jacob in Padan-aram that he was in his own father's house. And although Laban had changed his wages ten times, yet Jacob got the better of him every time; and came so near Jewing him out of all he had, that Laban's boys complained to their father that there would be nothing left for them.

And it appears that Laban himself began to think so, too; and that it was about time to dismiss him. This Jacob perceived; and to avoid the chagrin and mortification of being turned off, concluded to steal away unbeknown to Laban. So taking advantage of Laban's absence, he put his design in execution, by hastily gathering together his whole substance, and set out toward his fathers land.

Laban, however, pursued him, (as Pharaoh did his posterity when they went out of Egypt), and overtook him: and a sharp conflict of words ensued between them; each accusing the other of many grievous things. But finally the anger of both parties so far abated that they became friends again, and entered into a solemn covenant of peace with each other; and after having signed it they raised a heap of stones as a perpetual memorial of the happy event, and each party went his own way.

A few words concerning this heap of stones, and we will pass on. We have shown by the word of the Lord that Jacob represents one class of people, and Laban here represents the other, who are Gentiles; for he was one in the strictest sense, worshipping a plurality of gods, which Rachel stole from him. Suffice it, therefore, to say, the time will come when both Jew and Gentile will become one in Christ, and all former prejudice and hatred, on both sides, will forever be forgotten.

But to return to Jacob. He was not long without further trouble. He had sent messengers to Esau, to conciliate terms of peace, who had returned with the unwelcome intelligence that Esau was on his way to meet him with four hundred men. In great fear he now found himself unable to cope with so formidable a foe, and too much encumbered with flocks, herds and baggage to retreat. In this sad dilemma he very wisely had recourse to the dernier ressort, and looked to God for help. And there came an angel, no doubt in the likeness of a man, and wrestled with him until the break of day. And when he would have departed, Jacob refused to let him go until he blessed him. Then said the angel, What is thy name? and he said, Jacob. Again said the angel, Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, (or, more properly, not only Jacob) but Israel: for as a prince hast thou power with God, and with men, and hast prevailed.

This brings us to the most important part of Jacob's history. On this point his fortune turned, and on this point, also, turns the future destiny of the people whom Jacob represents—a down-trodden people, most highly renowned of old: a people whom God has blessed. Yea, and they shall be blessed. Gen. xxvii., 33. It is very evident, from all we can learn of the man, that he very evidently sustained the character indicated by name, from the time he first made his appearance in the world, holding on to Esau's heel, until he prevailed with God and became Israel.

So his seed will retain their present character, which they inherit from their father, until they prevail with God and become Israelites indeed. And when are we to look for such an event?

It must be borne in mind that in Jacob's dream of the ladder, the Lord told him he would be with him, and would bring him back into the land whereon he lies, and that he would give it to him, and to his seed. As this promise reaches to his seed, God will hereafter bring it back into the same land. And on their way back, like their father Jacob, fearing their former enemies, and perceiving they cannot prevail in their own strength, they will seek unto God for help, and will, like their father, prevail, and will be changed from Jacobites to Israelites, and so be gathered to their own land, as was their father before them.

Paul makes the Christian hope hang on the promise made of God unto the fathers. See Acts xxvi., 6, 7, 8. These promises were all of a duplicate import. "To thee, and to thy seed." They were fulfilled to the patriarchs personally: that is, to the—"To thee," and then left as a sure pledge, to be fulfilled to the—"Thy seed," through Christ. For instance, the promise to Abraham that he should have a son, was fulfilled to him personally, (To thee) in the birth of Isaac. But the same promise reached to the "Thy seed," and was fulfilled in the birth of Christ, who is verily the Son of promise, as foretold by the prophets. The same is true of the promises to Isaac and to Jacob.

Therefore, as the promise that the seed of the patriarchs should inherit the land, has never been fulfilled through Christ, it is certainly future. I am aware that some maintain that as the name Abram was changed to Abraham, that the promises pertain to the Abraham only, and not to the Abram: and in support, argue—"If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." But it so happens that the promises were made to Abram before his name was changed to Abraham; and are, therefore, good to the natural heirs of Abram. And through Christ, Gentiles become adopted heirs of Abraham. And it is very certain that there is no law of justice by which an adopted heir can disinherit a natural heir.

The same is true of Jacob. The promises were made to him also before his name was changed to Israel, and, therefore, are good to the Jacobites, who are not yet changed to Israelites. The Lord said to Jacob, at the ladder, "And behold I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest, and will bring thee again into this land." That all this was fulfilled to Jacob personally, no one will doubt. But it is equally evident that God has been, and still is with the scattered and dispersed seed of Jacob, and wonderfully kept them through all their various afflictions. It is, therefore, equally as certain that he will yet gather them again to the land of their fathers, as it is that Jacob returned from Padan-aram.

This is emphatically the hope of Israel; and we have shown that Paul makes it his hope, and this when he was a Christian; and as the Christian has but one hope, this is the true Christian hope.

So if the hope of Israel fail, the hope of the Christian will fail also, and we are left without hope only in this world; of all men the most miserable. But it cannot fail, being founded on the immutable promise of God, and is equally sure to Br. Paul, and to his brethren and kinsmen according to the flesh, whom he denominates the true Israel.

As to the prophetic proof of the return of the present Jacobites, I leave it to an abler pen than mine. I refer to the very able series of articles in the HERALD OF LIFE on the "Literal Fulfilment of Prophecy."

ASHTABULA, OHIO, April, 1869.

"SETTLED: TENT PITCHED."

"WHEN will a man be settled? When will a man pitch his tent?"

The above interrogations I recently received, from a minister of the Free-will Baptist order, whom I have been endeavoring to enlighten on the Life question.

In reply, I would say, that so long as I have a battle to fight, or a race to run, I do not intend to "be settled," or to "pitch my tent," but hope to dwell in "the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched and not man." Heb. viii., 2.

I, like most others, have had a little experience in the "tent" business. I joined that of the Free-will Baptists when about eighteen years of age; and about eight years subsequent began to preach, but soon became satisfied that the "tent" was pitched partly on the traditions of men, instead of the word of God. I very frankly told them of my discovery, and read many passages from the Bible relating to the subject. But I soon found, to my surprise, that it mattered not whether the tent was on the Bible or not, nor did any one attempt to convince me of error, or disprove anything I had stated, but contented themselves by passing resolutions condemning my course, and commanding me to preach only the doctrines of the sect, on pain of being published in "The Morning Star," their organ.

But I continued on, and the Lord brought all their counsels to naught, and I was not published, and nominally continued with them and preached about five years more, when I asked, and obtained a letter of dismission.

My only wish, in relation to the subject is, that I had more light and more mental and physical strength to use it, but I cannot feel that my labor was in vain in the Lord during those years of labor, sacrifice, and trial; and I have become thoroughly convinced that the sect, as such, is "settled" that their "tent is pitched." But I mean to "stand fast, therefore, in the liberty, wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage." Yes, I want the liberty to "search the scriptures" for myself—to grow in knowledge—to grow up into Christ my living head in all things; and sometimes to bring out of the treasury of truth something new, as well as old, instead of being tied to a dead creed, made two or three hundred years ago in time of darkness and superstition.

How the various sects are expecting to gain the promised Canaan, while they are settled and their tents pitched still in Egypt, is hard for me to see.

In many of the Eastern nations we may see some striking examples of being settled; we find their manners, customs and superstitions the same as two thousand years ago; but we do not feel like adapting their manner of life, notwithstanding its stability. We prefer our own country, where science and art are fairly free from their bondage and rid of their persecutors; where discoveries are continually being made, and new and useful inventions are constantly being added to the thousands already made. In a word, where we are not settled, where the tent is not pitched.

Oh! that religion was as free. Oh! that the creed-bondage was broken; that all were as free to investigate and embrace religious truths as those of science. Then should we see "a nation born in a day," and "the earth filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the mighty deep." Therefore I intend to labor on, without caring for a tent until I enter a building of God, a "house not made with hands, eternal and in the heavens." HORACE STORY.

SUGGESTIONS.

"Every one members one of another."—When the Victoria Cross is given to any man, it is not the hand that struck the blow which is honored; it is not the brain that planned that is honored; it is not the foot which scaled the wall, not even the breast which bore the scar, which is honored—but, it is the whole man, and he goes away glorified.

"Looking into the perfect law of liberty."—"Stooping down and looking in" says the original Greek—as the disciples looked into the tomb. There we behold no longer the body of the dead Christ, but the emblems of His resurrection. No longer a law of death, but a Gospel of life. No longer visible fear, but invisible love.

"The sacrifice of praise to God continual-ly."—Sacrifice is still essential to religion. We may not need to offer the firstlings of the flock, but we still have to offer the first-born of hopes, of ambitions, and of desires on that altar which sanctifies the gift.

"There is forgiveness with Thee that Thou mayest be feared."—Justice and mercy are God's two eyes wherewith in every place He looks upon the evil and the good. With one, He sees all there is to condemn—with the other, all there is to pity. With both, He takes the stereoscopic view, so to say, and beholds one to whom He can be just and yet whom He can justify through His grace in Jesus Christ.

The present need holds a magnifying glass over the principles of Scripture. How often it happens that we are dim sighted in our service, and without this would fail to read aright.

In every flock of the Lord there are "ring-streaked, speckled and spotted" ones, and these are to be considered the peculiar portion and care of the under-shepherd.

Which shall we regard as the true stream of a Christian life—the little bays and eddies where the current makes in on the banks, or the strong full river which runs beyond? So, shall we not better judge men by the deep inner purpose, instead of the various and shallower impulses?

Remember that God has no truth which is lame of a leg, blind of an eye, deaf of an ear, or crippled in a hand.

P. FLICKNER, Delton, Wis., writes: I have been sending out some of those Campaign Documents, and would like to send more if I had the means to pay for them, but at present I have not. O how thankful I am to learn that truth is advancing, and that our precious HERALD OF LIFE is finding a greater circulation and its readers increasing day by day. The Lord grant the day may not be distant when it will not be necessary to ask, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" but that all may understand as the Lord designed. Our prayers are with and for you in all your labors. Yours, hoping for eternal life through Jesus Christ alone.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—We hope yet to be able to supply those who are willing to circulate the Campaign Documents, but are unable to pay for them. We have already sent out many to such persons, and the work bids fair to accomplish much. Let it go bravely on: we trust it will. As to the HERALD OF LIFE, its circulation is constantly increasing. We have received more new subscribers the month past than in the same time in any previous month, "and still they come." If we "have a mind to work," we need not fear the "indignation" of the "Sanballats," nor the contempt of the "Tobiahs," who say we are "feeble," and "that which they build, if a fox go up, he shall even break down their stone wall." Many a crafty "fox" has tried the experiment and failed; and though we may be accounted by these light-footed animals as the most feeble and the "fewest" of all the believers in our Lord's return, yet the Lord can make "a little one to become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation; the Lord will hasten it in his time." As yet, our enemies have not been able to make a breach in "the wall" we are building to the honor of GOD and our LIFE-GIVER. Let us go steadily on with our work, looking to God to direct us in all things; so shall we prosper in his work, and vindicate his glorious character from the reproach cast upon it by good and bad men. "Fear not, little flock: it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

THE PASSOVER SUPPER:

COMMONLY CALLED, "THE LORD'S SUPPER."

LIFE BELIEVERS in this vicinity will celebrate this annual feast, this year at the COOPER INSTITUTE, Room 18, corner of Fourth Avenue and Eighth Street, New York City, Monday evening, the 26th inst. Exercises to commence at seven o'clock. All who love our Lord Jesus, who is "our Passover, sacrificed for us," are cordially invited to meet with us on this anniversary occasion.

Those in the city or country who are so situated as to be unable conveniently to meet with others of like faith, can keep this memorial feast alone in their own houses or places of residence: they are not dependent on priests to consecrate or otherwise assist in this remembrance of Christ's death. Our Lord will meet with and bless every soul who attends thereto, whether alone or in company.

ZION'S HERALD: "CAUGHT AGAIN."

WE made an introduction to this subject last week, and now resume it. That paper next moves on us in the following language:

> The Herald of Life, in attempting to escape from our "nut-shell argument," plunges into yet more perilous heresies. It now seems to declare that Christ Jesus had no full Divine power, till after His resurrection, though it may avoid this conclusion by pressing unwarranted distinctions between the humanity and the divinity of the Blessed Lord. Because Christ says after His resurrection, "All power is given unto Me in heaven and earth," it thinks that he did not have that power before; and thus God could, must, and did raise Him, a helpless and unconscious creature, from the grave, and clothed Him, a creature, thus raised by a power and gift outside of Himself, with Omnipotence.

The "perilous heresies," if they exist, will be found in our brother's own statements, as we trust to show before we have done with the matter. We are personally involved in this friendly controversy, as the Editor of "Zion's Herald" called us by name in his previous article, and gave some account of us, and said, "he" ("George Storrs") "jumped at this bait"—the "nutshell argument." We have not the slightest objection to this use of our name, and only mention it as an apology for the use of his name, being more convenient than the name of his paper.

Br. Haven, in his "nutshell argument," used the expression "the man Christ Jesus." We accepted that expression, and entered on our response with that single idea. The idea was a scriptural one and expressed in scriptural language. Both parties, it seems to us, should have confined ourselves to that point. Br. Haven now tells us, that we "seem to declare that Christ Jesus had no full Divine power, till after His resurrection, though" we "may avoid this conclusion by pressing unwarranted distinctions between the humanity and divinity of our Blessed Lord."

Will our Br. tell us wherein we made unwarranted distinctions? Does he really believe that the Godhead had a "death and resurrection?" If so, why ask us if "the man Christ Jesus was unconscious between His death and resurrection?" Why not have omitted the words which apply only to humanity? If an unwarranted distinction has been made, did not our respected Br. H. lead in the work? and shall we be condemned and he go free? Had "the man Christ Jesus" "full Divine power" when "laid in a manger" at Bethlehem? Had He when he "increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man?" Luke iii., 52. Can the fulness of Divine power "increase in wisdom?" Did "the man Christ Jesus" have "full Divine power" when upon the cross, he said, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit?" Luke, xxiii., 46. Does our brother deny that God raised "the man Christ Jesus," up from the dead? Was "the man Christ Jesus" praying to himself at the time of His crucifixion, or at any other time when He prayed? If you answer No, Do you not make him dependent on another? if yes, Do you not involve Him in something that looks like hypocrisy, or dissimulation? This truly would be a "perilous heresy." That "God did raise the man Christ Jesus from the grave" is a truth attested by "a hundred" texts to your "one" that He raised himself. Br. Haven says:

> The Herald of Life seems to think if, He inherited no evil, He did weakness. He was not able, though He over and over declares that He was, to deliver Himself from the power of the grave.

"The man Christ Jesus," Paul tells us, was "made like unto his brethren:" Heb. ii., 17. Were his brethren possessed of "weakness?" And is it a heresy to say, "the man Christ Jesus" was, also? Does not Paul say, "He was crucified through weakness; yet He liveth by the power of God?" 2 Corth. xiii., 4. Where did "the man Christ Jesus" assert "over and over" that he was able, of himself, "to deliver Himself from the power of the grave?" The most you can claim is "one" text, and your construction of that contradicts "a hundred" others declaring that "GOD raised him up from the dead."

Saith Br. Haven:

> Death had dominion over Him according to His own consent and will, no more.

We are happy to agree with our brother in this sentiment. His death was voluntary: He died by his own consent; and He consented to be under death's "dominion" just "three days," and "no more." He went under that dominion with the pledge of God the Father that He should be holden no longer: for, said "the man Christ Jesus, THOU wilt not leave my soul in sheol; neither will THOU suffer thy Holy One to see corruption." Psa. xvi., 10.

Again saith "Zion's Herald:"

> This death was neither unconsciousness nor annihilation. It was the experience unknown to us, and to every creature, by which He laid down His life and took it again, in His own time and way.

If His "death was the experience unknown to us," etc., then our brother cannot know that it was not a state of "unconsciousness." How can he know it was not, if it was "unknown to us" in what His death consisted? Can Br. Haven know what is "unknown to every creature?" That "the man Christ Jesus laid down His life and took it again, in His own time and way" is true; and it is equally true that the time and way was that appointed of the Father, so that He was in all things obedient unto the Father: for, when He prayed, "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me." He immediately added, "nevertheless not as I will, but as THOU wilt." Matth. xxvi., 39. Here are two wills. Will Br. Haven tell us if two wills exist in the Deity? We have always supposed such a thing was impossible; but "the man Christ Jesus" clearly had a will separate from the will of the Father, though not oppose to it, as the prayer above shows.

Our excellent Br. H., in concluding, uses the following language:

> A theory that compels its advocates to deny the Deity of Jesus Christ, that makes Him the helpless and unconscious victim of the grave, that declares He only attained to Divine power subsequent to His resurrection, is akin to that which unwisely contemplates death as always meaning extinction or suspension of conscious being—a state it never naturally nor necessarily means.

Here are several mistakes our Br. has made in his earnest zeal to sustain his side of this question. We do not "deny the Deity of Jesus Christ:" that is a pure assumption, unsupported by "one" word that we have said. We do deny that "the Deity," or Godhead suffered or died in any sense. Does our brother believe it did? If not, then why drag that point before his readers to create prejudice against our views? Our friendly controversy has been, on our part, wholly confined to what was done and suffered by "the man Christ Jesus." As a man he was born, cradled in a manger, increased in wisdom and stature, ate, drank, slept, wept, was sorrowful, his soul was made an offering for sin, He poured out his soul unto death—died; but died with the Divine pledge that He should live again in three days: which pledge God, His Father, faithfully fulfilled by bringing "again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep," etc. Heb. xiii., 20. These remarks may answer for our reply to the first mistake in the foregoing extract.

The next mistake is, that we declare by our theory that Jesus Christ only attained to Divine power subsequent to His resurrection. He possessed and used Divine power before His death, that is, He wrought works "by the Spirit of God" (Matth. xii., 28) which "descended and abode upon Him." John i., 32, 33. But that He had "full Divine power," that is, "all power in heaven and earth" till at or after His resurrection, no text, quoted by our brother, asserts. Br. Haven had said, (in his remarks, in reply to our request to tell us where "the man Christ Jesus" had "a commandment to use all power in His own person" before His resurrection from the dead) "Christ declared this power inherent in Himself long before His death." In proof of this he cites a text in John iii., 35, as follows: "The Father loveth the Son and hath given" (not will give), "all things into His hand." In the first place, it may be questioned whether these words in the most literal sense imply "all power in heaven and earth." If so, why does He ever pray again? Surely He can have no more given him. But in the next place, the words no more necessarily imply that all (that is, unlimited) power was then in his hands than "He hath poured out his soul unto death" (Isa. liii., 12) implies that Messiah had done so at that time. It settles the fact that He was to have "all things given into His hands," and He tells his disciples when it was done, viz., at His resurrection. Till that time He was subject to sorrow, suffering, or death: then death, "the last enemy," was triumphed over, and "the man Christ Jesus" became "Head over all things to the church." Eph. i., 22.

When did this transpire? Read the context; "The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him: the eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of His mighty power, which He wrought in Christ when HE (God the Father) raised him up from the dead, and set him at His own right hand . . . and hath put all things under his feet," etc. Eph. i., 17–23. Do not all see, this was "at or after His resurrection from the dead?"

Our brother speaks of our theory making Jesus "the helpless and unconscious victim of the grave." We wonder that he does not stumble at Jesus' being born of a woman, and a helpless victim of infancy; or a victim of scorn and contempt, etc. Is one more marvellous than the other? Trul your brother seems astonished where we see no cause for it, more than many other things connected with our Lord's birth, life, and death. We confess that we are stumbled at our Br.'s idea of Christ's death; or rather, his no ideas; for he says, "His death was the experience unknown to us," etc. Then how are we to know what His resurrection was? And if we know not that, how do we know what our own is to be? Paul saith, "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Bring with him from where? Where did God bring Jesus from? Let the same apostle tell us: "The God of peace that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus," etc. Compare 1 Thess. iv., 14, with Heb. xiii., 20.

Again Paul tell us, "Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept . . . afterward, they that are Christ's at his coming." 1 Corth. xv., 20–23. If His "death was an experience unknown to us," so must His resurrection be, in like manner. In fact, we know nothing about His death and resurrection. How then is He the first-fruit, the sample, the pledge, of our resurrection? What propriety in Paul's saying, "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him"—"from the dead?"

Resurrection implies death; for there can be no resurrection till there has been first a death. If "the man Christ Jesus" did not die, or was not dead, a resurrection was impossible, and there was none. Orthodoxy maintains "the soul is the essential man." Thus, if the soul does not die, really, truly, then the essential man never has, and never can have a resurrection from the dead: consequently, "the man Christ Jesus" never was raised from the dead; and the discussion about who raised Him from the dead is all labor lost, for He was not and could not be thus raised, because the essential man was never dead; and the talk about His dying for our sins and being raised again for our justification is all a hallucination, a phantasm—a thing of appearance; and not a reality. Here we kindly retort on our brother of "Zion's Herald," "A theory that compels its advocates to deny the" death and resurrection of "the man Christ Jesus," and that "makes" His great death and life work only an "unknown" something that seems to be death and resurrection, while in fact it was "neither," looks to us as if it was "akin to that which" is real "infidelity." We would not, even by insinuation, have any one suppose that the excellent conductor of Zion's Herald is an infidel: he abhors infidelity as much as we can; but his "narrow though honest views lead" him into that company by denying the real death and resurrection of "the man Christ Jesus." Not that he denies it in words, intentionally, but he does in fact, as much, and indeed more, than he supposes we "deny the the Deity of Jesus Christ;" for we made no such denial in words nor by implication, because that was not a matter of discussion; it was simply what took place in relation to "the man Christ Jesus." Whatever may be true in relation to the Godhead was not affected by anything we said, unless that died as well as the Manhood, which our brother will not pretend; nor do we believe he can show any "unwarranted distinction," in any of our responses, "between the humanity and divinity of the Blessed Lord." We have just such a distinction as he himself clearly made when his "nutshell argument" challenged a solution, on our principles, of the death of "the man Christ Jesus." Why speak thus, if he intended to embrace "the Deity" in his aforesaid "nutshell?"

Our brother seems now to intimate that we have no right to make a "distinction between the humanity and divinity of the Blessed Lord;" and that any such distinction is "unwarranted." Is he willing to be judged by this rule? Does he really believe God was born of the virgin Mary? If such an idea is inadmissible in his mind, Does he not admit what he calls our "distinction," etc? If this is true, is it any more "unwarrantable" to make the same "distinction" in His death? If he does not allow this in His death, then it is not allowable in His birth. Then what follows? "God was born of the virgin Mary." Then, why not adopt the papal dogma—"Mary the mother of God?" If it was "the man Christ Jesus" that was born of Mary, it was "the man Christ Jesus" that as really died as that He was born: to deny the death is to deny the birth, or else to make an "unwarrantable distinction" in the matter. Let us not "strain at a gnat and swallow a camel."

We have not yet quite made out "a hundred words" to our brother's "one," but we cannot close without giving one more extract from his reply to us. It concludes thus:

> We hope our old advocate and associate will see whither these narrow though honest views lead, and escape from a theory that makes the Lord Jesus Christ the powerless subject of the most powerless of His creations—death.

We thank Br. Haven for these kind words; and respond by saying, "We hope our" beloved brother "will see whither these narrow though honest views" he holds, concerning the death and resurrection of "the man Christ Jesus," "lead, and escape from a theory that makes" void both the death and resurrection of our Redeemer; and that he may yet become an "advocate and associate" in proclaiming the great truth that "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures," which say, "He poured out his soul unto death," (Isa. liii., 12); "and that He was buried, and that He" [the personality—"the man Christ Jesus"] "rose again the third day according to the Scriptures," "THOU wilt not leave my soul in sheol, nor suffer thy Holy One to see corruption." See 1 Corth. xv., 3, 4, and Psa. xvi., 10. To such labor and suffering we would gladly welcome our brother of "Zion's Herald" whenever he is convinced that such is the truth.

Jesus prayed to His Father, concerning His disciples, "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth." John xvii., 17. Let us be as concerned for "the truth" as we are to make men "new creatures;" for however we may flatter ourselves that we can bring men "to the cross" savingly, unless they yield their hearts to "the truth as it is in Jesus," we may be disappointed. They may have "a name to live" and be in the way to death. We are not among those who think men must have the same view of what is truth that we have to find salvation. We know not how much or how little truth may prove saving to individuals; but we are quite sure, a wilful rejection of truth is not likely to promote the salvation of any one, even though they may think they are "doing God service." Truth is truth, whether few or many receive it as such. Nor is the sower of the seed of truth to grow weary, though he may have toiled long with little apparent success. Jesus himself after the whole period of His life on earth, of more than thirty years, appears to have had but few real disciples. Our brother has not forgotten how ourself, and a few others in the M. E. Church, labored to get that body to embrace a great truth, and that our names were cast out as evil, and we were bid to "preach the gospel and let that other work alone:" but we held on our way, and have the satisfaction, after thirty years, of seeing the truth for which we labored and suffered, incorporated in the faith of the whole body of that church. Seeing these things are so, and having obtained help of God, we have kept right on our way, following truth wherever it leads, and proclaiming the same, assured in due time we shall reap if we faint not.

We might say much more on our brother's position; especially, that "death" is one of Jesus Christ's "creations;" but that, probably, was a slip of the pen, and we let it pass, hoping that nothing in this controversy may be said to interrupt the good-will and love that exists between us. May our gracious LORD and LIFE-GIVER guide us each and all His friends into all truth, and bring us through His abounding love and mercy to His eternal kingdom and glory.

P. S.—Will our friends please read an article we have transferred to our columns, from "The Advance," on "The human Nature of Christ," written by a Congregational Minister of Milwaukee, Wis.

WE THANK our friends who have helped us to supply our subscribers with the number of the HERALD OF LIFE for "March 24." We have now sent to all such, so far as we know, who failed to get that number at the time of its issue. Some of the papers were worn, through use; but we did the best we could.

ORTHODOX RESURRECTION.

THE following article we copy from the "Advent Herald" ("orthodox" Adventist.) The first paragraph is Editorial in that paper, so that the remarks that follow are impliedly indorsed. We have attached notes at such points as we wished to call special attention to:

THE RAISED BODY OF THE BELIEVER.

A local preacher of the Free Methodist church, having in a communication to the "Free Methodist," taken the singular position that the souls of the just in Paradise (1) being now invested with outward forms of life the resurrection is not to be anything else than a general and simultaneous advent of human souls in these heavenly bodies, the editor in reviewing the article justly remarks:

"The idea that the resurrection is nothing more nor less than the simultaneous advent from heaven of all the saints at Christ's coming with such bodies as they are supposed now to possess, is certainly a novel and strange one. In that day the saints are to come forth from their graves, and the 'earth shall cast out its dead.' (2). Christ tells us that those who have done good shall come forth from their graves unto the resurrection of life. John v., 28, 29. But according to this theory they are simply to make their advent or come forth from heaven itself. Are the grave, therefore, and heaven, identical? are they one and the same place? A theory that involves such absurdities should be hastily abandoned." (3.)

"When the apostle says, speaking of sowing wheat or some other grain, 'Thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain,' and goes on to say, 'God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body,' and hereby illustrates the resurrection, he evidently does not mean to be understood by the phrase, 'thou sowest not that body that shall be,' as teaching that the same body will not be raised, but only that it will not be raised in the same condition in which it was laid down. Upon this thought he enlarges thus: 'It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption: it is sown is dishonor; it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power: it is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body.' The natural body is the body in its present mortal state. The spiritual body is the same body changed and made 'like unto Christ's glorious body'—the same in substance but not in condition. In the Bible both these terms—'natural,' 'spiritual'—are applied to men in this life. Before regeneration the man is natural; after regeneration he is spiritual (see 1 Cor. chap. ii., and various other places.) Is he, therefore, not the same man? Certainly he is, but oh, how changed in condition! A spiritual body is not an ethereal, intangible entity, or sort of spirit body (a contradiction of terms), as seems to be imagined in the article under review, but simply a human body redeemed from the curse by the atonement and made all glorious and immortal by the power of the Holy Spirit. The term 'natural' applies to man in Adam, or in a state of nature; the term 'spiritual' applies to man in Christ, or in a state of grace or favor with God. Now, as the body cannot be brought, into this state in this life it awaits the change of the last, or resurrection day. Then it will be a 'spiritual body,' but a body nevertheless, and the same body. That is very justly termed natural which is in nature without the work of the Spirit through the atonement. That is very justly termed spiritual which is the fruit or result of the working of the Holy Spirit through the atonement. The resurrection is of this nature, hence a spiritual body. The expression, 'flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God,' is explained by 'neither doth corruption inherit incorruption.' That is, the body will not then be as it now is. Exactly what it will be we cannot tell. 'Now we see through a glass darkly.' It doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when He shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is.'"

NOTES BY THE EDITOR OF HERALD OF LIFE.

(1.) This is truly a "singular position;" but its singularity consists in "souls" being "in Paradise" before the resurrection, at all. But such is the creed of "orthodoxy." If they are, they would seem to need some kind of "invested form," otherwise they would be invisible, if they are what orthodoxy generally represents.

(2.) That is good, sound, Bible doctrine. Mark you, "The saints are to come forth from their graves:"—not out of "Paradise." Till that time the saints "sleep in the dust of the earth:" Dan. xii., 2. Will orthodoxy tell us if they believe the bodies are "the saints?" How often have we been told "the soul is the man." If that is true, and the soul is in Paradise, when the saint is dead, it strikes us, it is a difficult matter to get "the saints" out of "their graves," where, according to orthodoxy, they never were. No wonder a thinking "local preacher," holding to orthodox souls for his faith, should come to the conclusion above stated. Such a conclusion was perfectly natural from the premises.

(3.) "Physician, heal thyself." It would be a strange "theory," truly, that represents the saints in heaven and at the same time in the graves. But such seems to be the theory of the "Free Methodist," and indorsed by the "Advent Herald." So we respond to them,

"Is the grave and heaven identical?" Mark well, these orthodox papers say, "the saints are to come forth from their graves." Yet they would have us believe the essential saint is in heaven, or paradise! Do we not well to say, "Physician, heal thyself?" If the "local preacher's" theory is an absurdity, does not your own involve a greater one? We think it does, and "should be hastily abandoned."

The remainder of the article we let pass as being near the truth, though we dissent from the idea that the resurrection body is necessarily "the same body" that was laid in the grave. The "same" man is the subject of the resurrection: but "thou sowest not that body that shall be," saith Paul, . . . "but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body." 1 Corth. xv., 37, 38.

Port Richmond: Staten Island.

We spent last Sabbath at the above place. Our excellent friend, T. M. Sother, residing there, has purchased and fitted up in a neat manner, a house, which will seat some two hundred and fifty persons comfortably, for a free promulgation of the Life views as held and promulgated by Life Believers. He has done this at an expense of over two thousand dollars, as his own private enterprise. Last Sabbath it was occupied for the first time. He conducted the morning services himself—gave his reasons for what he had done, and his object in doing it.

In the afternoon and evening the Editor of this paper occupied the pulpit and "held forth the word of Life" to attentive hearers. May the Lord prosper the work in that place, and abundantly reward him who has, from the funds the Lord has given him, taken the noble stand of the ancient Bereans, determined that the Bible shall speak for itself, untrammelled by human traditions.

The Tract on the Devil.

This tract is now ready. It contains 46 pages of reading matter, and is a very important addition to our list. Let it have a wide circulation. Doubtless it will be an efficient agent in overcoming the popular superstitious notions of possession by demons, etc. Many of God's dear children are as much in the dark concerning this question as the Jews were in the time of our Saviour. Give the people light.

The price of the tract will be found in the price list on the last page of the Herald.

The following article is an extract from Bishop Law's works, whose position on this question is precisely like our Editor's. Bishop Law was Bishop of Carlisle in the English Church, and in his day he caused the popular notions concerning man, devils, etc., to shake from cap-stone to foundation.

F. H. Burbank.

New York, April, 1869.

Matt., x., 28. Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: (after that have no more that they can do. Luke xii., 4) but rather fear him which is able to destroy both body and soul in hell.

"This is so far from proving such a distinction between soul and body as implies any separate existence of the former from the latter, or its being capable of suffering in an intermediate state, that it seems only intended to point out the great distinction between this and the next Life; when, in the common language, soul and body are reunited . . . It may be observed here, once for all, that when Christ uses the common distinction of soul and body, he may be conceived to adapt himself wholly to the popular language and ideas, without giving any confirmation to the truth or justness of them; as when he says a spirit (i.e., according to your own notion of it) hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have. Luke xxiv., 39, without determining the reality of such a phantom: which popular way of speaking, used then on all occasions as the most agreeable and most intelligible, should be more carefully attended to by us, in order to guard against all such chimeras as are too often grounded upon it.

"In the same popular manner do the Evangelists treat some of Christ's miraculous works, when they describe them just according to the vulgar apprehension; v. g. Luke vi., 19, 'There went virtue out of him to heal them all'—and Mark v., 30, 'Jesus immediately knowing in himself that virtue had gone out of him, turned himself about in the press, and said, Who touched my clothes?' intending to denote his consciousness of the infirm person's wanting to be cured in a private way, and accordingly making use of the superstitious means, vulgarly deemed effectual to that purpose, of secretly touching some of his garments; which desire of hers, Christ was determined to comply with (but not till he had opportunity of producing her in public) and thereby instantly rewarded her faith in his miraculous power, notwithstanding the improper manner in which she had been induced to solicit it, as if such healing virtue could have been produced in, or elicited from Christ either magically or mechanically, and without his knowledge . . .

"The same observation has been made on the vulgar notion of possession by devils so very prevalent among the Jews about Christ's time; where he really cures each disorder without controverting their opinions on the subject (which would have been endless, and answered no good purpose) but rather allows and argues from them occasionally, ad homines; casts out these devils, as the Jews themselves frequently attempted to do, and is said to rebuke them, (Mark i., 25,) in the same manner as he rebukes a fever (Luke iv., 19) or the winds and sea (Matt. vii., 26.) . . . On the same principle also several parables seem to be founded, as that of the Rich Man and Lazarus; . . . that of unclean spirits walking through dry (desert) places; and numbers of them entering into one man, and dwelling there."

Will the Wicked Dead be Raised to Life?

"He that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."—John iii., 36.

This text answers our question with great distinctness and assurance. We do not see how the question could be more definitely answered, and yet it may be needful, in order to understand and appreciate more fully the correctness of the sentiment expressed in our text, to examine a few points which have a bearing upon this question.

1. The law given to Adam for the government of his race does not require anything of the sinner after death.

Death terminates the jurisdiction of that law over man. Gen. ii., 17, "Thou shalt surely die," nothing beyond. After Adam sinned, the Lord explained the penalty of his law. Gen. iii., 17–19, "And unto Adam he said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, thou shalt not eat of it: cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

According to this explanation, all the sorrow to which man will be subject, will be experienced before death. Death will terminate life, so that man will return to dust. Nothing is said of anything beyond death. No claim whatever is made upon man after death. To secure the execution of this penalty, Adam was excluded from the tree of life, "lest he should eat of it and live forever." And when Adam died it is said, "All the days that he lived were nine hundred and thirty years, and he died." He died so as not to live.

Paul applies this death to all men, Rom. v., 12, "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men for that all have sinned." All men, then, are subject to this penalty of death. God's law requires that all wicked men shall die, so as not to live; but it does not require anything of wicked men beyond this death. Wicked men must not live again. Hence "he that believeth not the Son shall not see life."

2. The gospel does not propose to change, or to correct, or to supersede God's law; but to reconcile the world to its authority.

"Christ came in his Father's name," not to destroy his law, but to destroy the rebellion against it." "He came not to condemn the world, but to save the world,"—"not to destroy men's lives, but to save them."—"He came not to do his own will, but the will of the Father which sent him." And Christ said, that "this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." As Christ is subject to the Father, so the gospel of Christ is subject to the law of God. The law dictates to the gospel, but the gospel does not dictate to the law. The gospel is to the law given to Adam what the physician is to the laws of life and health; neither proposes to change the laws, but their office is to restore.

As the physician may not change the laws by which health is governed so the gospel may not change the law which God gave to govern the world. Hence the gospel cannot add another death to the penalty of the law. If this is so, then the wicked cannot see life.

3. There will be a judgment of the dead, as such, in distinction from the living.

Some of the dead will be worthy of a resurrection, so that they can die no more: therefore there must be a judgment of the dead. I will quote a few passages in proof: Acts x., 42, "And to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead." Rom. xiv., 9, "For to this end Christ both died and rose and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living." The next verse speaks of Christ as the Judge. 2 Tim. iv., 1, "I charge thee, therefore, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." 1 Pet. iv., 5, "Who shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead." Heb. ix., 27, "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment: (that is, after death). Rev. xi., 18, "and the time of the dead, that they should be judged." Rev. xx., 12, "And the dead were judged out of the things which were written in the books according to their works." Thus we have a judgment of the dead distinctly affirmed.

4. The result of the judgment of the dead.

(1) The result to the righteous. Will they live again?

Job xix., 25, 26, "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the last day upon the earth; and though after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God. Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another." Job felt assured that when the Lord should come to judge the dead, he should live and see God. Psa. xlix., 15, "But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave, for he shall receive me." David expected to be redeemed from the grave and to be accepted of the Lord as the result of the judgment of the dead. Isa. xxvi., 19, "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise." When the Lord shall judge the dead, then those who are the Lord's will arise and live. Dan. xii., 2, "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting life." When the dead are judged, the righteous will awake to everlasting life. John v., 29, "And they that have done good unto the resurrection of life." In this judgment all that have done good will be rewarded with life. John vi., Christ gives assurance, all through this chapter, "that of all the Father had given him, he would lose nothing, but would raise it up at the last day." This is a cheering result. Luke xx., 35, 36, "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead . . . can die no more." Rom. viii., 11, 23, "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies." "They who have the first-fruits of the Spirit groan within themselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of their bodies." Phil. iii., 11, 20, Paul strove to attain unto the resurrection from the dead, so that his vile body might be fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body. 1 Corth xv., 20, 23, 51, 54; All of whom Christ is the first-fruits will be made alive and put on immortality when the Lord comes to judge the dead. Rev. xx., 15, And whosoever was found written in the book of life was not cast into the lake of fire.

Thus we have a description of the results to the righteous of the judgment of the dead. If those who are to be raised from the dead to life must be worthy of such resurrection, then no others will be raised to life. If it was necessary for Paul to strive to attain unto the resurrection from the dead, will those who do not strive for it attain unto it?

(2) The result of the judgment of the dead to the wicked.

Will the wicked dead live again?

Job xxiv., 19, "Drought and heat consume the snow waters, so doth the grave those which have sinned." Isa. xxvi., 14, "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise." Psa. xlix., "Like sheep they are laid in the grave, death shall feed on them, . . . they shall never see light. Man that is in honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish." Prov. xxi., 16. He "that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead." John iii., 16, 36, "That whosoever believeth on him should not perish." Those who do not believe on him will perish. "They shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on them." 1 John v., 12, "He that hath not the Son of God hath not life." John v., 29, 40, "And they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation:" (not the resurrection of life). "Ye will not come to me that ye might have life." John vi., 53, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." Rom. vi., 23, "The wages of sin is death," (not two deaths). 1 Cor. xv., 18, "Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." The wicked will perish if there is a resurrection: but if there be no resurrection the righteous will also perish! they will perish as the wicked perish. James i., 15, "Then when lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." 2 Pet. ii., 12, "They shall utterly perish in their own corruption, as the brute beasts perish." Rev. xx., 15, "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."

Thus we have a description of the results of the judgment of the dead to the wicked. There is no life in it for them.

The difference in the awards of the judgment of the dead.

In every instance the righteous receive life. In no instancedo the wicked receive life; but instead, shame, contempt, condemnation, and the second death. The wicked, then, will not live again.

5. The second death: What is it?

When the question is asked, what is the second death? a ready and unhesitating answer is almost always given, "To die the second time." So universal is the impression that this is a correct answer, that very little thought is given to the subject. Many rest their whole faith in the doctrine that the wicked will live again upon this one view of the question. Say they, "There can be no second death without a second life; therefore the wicked dead must be raised to life."

Let us, then, ask the book of Revelation, (as it is mentioned nowhere else in the Bible), what is meant by the second death? The answer to this is given distinctly in Rev. xx., 14. "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death." What is the second death? Death and hell were cast into the lake of fire: This is the second death. Is this all? This is all. All that makes up the second death is contained in this transaction. Death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is all. Nothing more is needed to complete the second death. If the wicked dead were never cast into the lake of fire, it would not in any way render the second death incomplete. Then, the second death does not mean to die the second time. Did death and hell die a second time? Were they made alive in order to be cast into the lake of fire? Whoever becomes subject to the second death, must be subject to it as death and hell were. They must stand before God, as death and hell stood before him: in the same sense. They must be cast into the lake of fire as death and hell were cast into it: in the same sense. It is just as easy to see how the dead, small and great, can stand before God and not be alive, as it is to see how death and hell can stand before Him and not be alive. It is just as easy to understand how the dead whose names were not found written in the book of life were cast into the lake of fire, as it is to understand how death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. It is all done in the same sense, and for the same reason. The second death, then, is just such a death, as Death and Hell suffered when they were cast into the lake of fire. It is such a death as the dead, small and great, whose names are not found written in the book of life, may suffer without being made alive. It is the award of the judgment of the dead, to the wicked. Then surely, "He that believeth not on the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."

Recapitulation.

The argument we have adduced on the question under consideration stands thus:

1. The law of God does not require anything of the sinner after death.

The jurisdiction of the law ceases at that point.

2. The gospel is a provision, not to change, or to correct, or to supersede the law, but to restore, to reconcile to its authority. Hence it cannot add another death to the penalty of the law.

3. The gospel has a claim upon all the dead whose names are found written in the book of life; and is pledged to raise them to life. Hence the necessity that the dead should be judged.

4. The results of the judgment of the dead are, to the righteous, life; and to the wicked, shame, contempt, condemnation, and the second death.

5. That the second death is a death which the dead, small and great, whose names are not found written in the book of life, may be subject to without being made alive.

Therefore, our text is literally true, that "He that believeth on the Son, hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."

My Testimony.

"ye are my witnesses."

For the few months past my health has been very poor, and I have often felt that my work was about finished, and that I must soon go down to rest among the sleepers, but for some reason I am spared. I have been almost entirely deprived of the privilege of meeting with the people of God, yet with my Bible and papers, the family altar, my closet, and occasionally the company of some of like precious faith, I have not had a very sorry time after all. My mercies and blessings far outnumber my trials and afflictions, and even those, I have reason to believe, are working for my good, and will eventually work out for me "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

When I contrast my position with that of the multitude around me, and of some with whom I sometimes converse, I am led to praise the Lord for his love and goodness to me. Many are shaken and unsettled in their views, while beneath me is a foundation firm, and broad, and deep. Many are completely adrift; I have an anchor, sure and steadfast. Many are groping in darkness; the light shines upon my pathway, and grows brighter and brighter. Many are in doubt and fear; I am resting in faith. Many are hopeless; I have a hope that is big with immortality—"a hope that maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad" in my heart, by the Holy Spirit. Why may I not rejoice and be glad?

What a great thing and blessed it is to be in Christ. And does not that cover the whole ground? "Having promise of the life "that now is," no good thing withheld, and also "of that which is to come." What more can I ask?

"How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in his excellent word!
What more can he say than to you he hath said,
You who unto Jesus for refuge have fled."

Louisa J. Beach.

New Britain, Conn., Apr. 3, 1869.

Gathered Thoughts.

"The truly good are of one language in prayer. Whatever lines or angles of thought may separate them in other hours, when they pray in extremity, all good men pray alike. The Emperor Charles V. and Martin Luther, two great generals of opposite faiths, breathed out their dying struggle in the self-same words.

"There be many tongues and many languages of men,—but the language of prayer is one by itself, in all and above all."

"The darkest hour heralds the dawn. Forget not the Jewish proverb, 'When the tale of bricks is doubled, then Moses is sent.' To prayer and patience no cause is lost."

"It is easier to set a man against all the world than to make him fight with himself." —Tillotson.

"Sin is never overcome by looking at it, but by looking away from it, to Him who bore our sins on the cross. The heart is never won back to God by thinking we ought to love him, but by learning what He is, all worthy of our love. True repentance begins with the love of God."

Says Martin Luther. "God does not measure his pity by what our sorrows are in themselves, but what they are to us. Are we not all children in his sight?"

We cannot comprehend God out of Christ. In Christ will you find what God is, and what he requires. You will find him nowhere else, whether in heaven or on earth."—Dr. Stanpitz.

"The best ore cannot look like gold until it is fused." "The way to fight the world's great battles is for each one to conquer the enemies of God in his own heart and home."

"Hours of contemplation are more blessed for the very trials and occupations which seem to hinder them." "It is a terrible and perilous thing to take the training of our souls out of God's hand into our own. The pruning knife in his hand must sometimes wound and seem to impoverish; but in ours it cuts, and wounds and impoverishes, and does not prune. We can indeed inflict pain on ourselves, but God alone can make pain healing, or suffering discipline."

"It is as impossible for Christian life not to diffuse itself, as that living water should not flow, or that flames should not rise." "The only divine order is the common order of Christianity. All other orders are disorder; not confederations within the church, but conspiracies against it. If in an army, the troops chose to abandon the commander's arrangement, and range themselves, by arbitrary rules, in peculiar uniforms, around self-elected leaders, they would not be soldiers—they would be mutineers."

"God's order is, I think, the State to embrace all men, the church to embrace all Christian men; and the kernel of the state and the type of the church is the family."

"Narrow and ill-used privileges always end in ruining those who bigotedly cling to them."

"The exclusiveness which begins with shutting others out, commonly ends with shutting the exclusive in. The lordly fortress becomes the narrow prison." Louisa J. Beach.

From J. A. Adams.

Fairfield, Iowa, April, 1869.

Br. Storrs: About one year ago I received one number of the Herald of Life through the P. O. On opening the paper my eye fell upon an article written in opposition to the eternal torment theory. I threw the paper aside without further examination, supposing it to be an advocate of Universalism or infidelity, or some other false doctrine, having been taught from childhood, by precept and example, that whatever was not in unison with certain written articles of faith was sin.

A short time after this my eye fell upon the words beneath the heading of the paper, "The children of God being the children of the resurrection." A thousand times before had I read these same words, but never before was that great doctrine of God's word understood by me, and I mentally exclaimed, "Then none have a resurrection but the children of God." For many years had I tried to believe that horrible doctrine of eternal torment, because I thought the Bible taught it, and I saw no way of escape; and often have I sung,

"To linger in eternal death,
And yet forbid to die."

But God, who knows the secrets of all hearts, saw there no responsive amen to that thought.

Since the time referred to above I have been a reader of the Herald of Life, in connection with the Bible; and in consequence of my having turned mysef against the current, there have been placed in my hands some works written in opposition to "Life only in Christ:" one large work, entitled, "Eternal Life and Death;" and a smaller work, entitled, "Life and Death," the latter by Alexander Campbell. Notwithstanding many of the arguments in these works seem plausible at first sight, yet, they are far from being conclusive, although written by learned men, and the latter one by a man who was eminent for his knowledge on theological questions, yet I think I can see they are cast against the great rock of Bible truth, and must consequently fall shattered at its base. When we try to lay our prejudices aside, and read the Bible with the sincere desire of knowing what is truth, how very plain many things appear. But if we seek for popularity, and with a desire to retain or obtain the favor of any particular class, we may, like Pilate, ask what is truth? and still be left in blindness.

One of Mr. Campbell's arguments, or, rather assumptions, but a very important one, is this, viz., that "all persons have eternal existence, but those only who stand connected with, Jesus Christ have eternal life, which is eternal happiness." Now, when we come to apply the rule—for in all such cases we appeal to the law and the testimony—we see that man, by eating the forbidden fruit, incurred the penalty, which was death; and he also brought himself into a miserable condition, in which dying he should continue to die until he should return to dust. Now, thus saith the Lord, "Lest he put forth his hand and take of the tree of life and eat and live forever," or obtain eternal existence in this miserable condition, I will drive him out and I will guard this tree by a flaming sword, turning every way. Now, Mr. C. could not say that by eating of the tree of life he would obtain eternal existence, for this, he says, all have already; neither could he say that he would obtain eternal happiness, for then he must acknowledge that it was unnecessary for Christ to die—he must acknowledge that there could have been a law given by which we could have life—that without the shedding of blood there could have been remission of sins, or that man could enjoy eternal happiness while yet in his sins. Now, will not some advocate of the immortal soul theory come to the rescue and deliver the system from the dilemma in which this portion of God's word places it? We hear nothing more of the tree of life again until in Rev. ii., 7, it is promised to those in the church at Ephesus who should overcome; and Rev. xxii., 14, those are pronounced blessed who do his commandments, that they may have a right (which they lost by sinning), to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city. I am the door, says Jesus; if any enter by me he shall be saved.

Obituary.

Monsey, N. Y., April 9, 1869.

Br. Storrs: It is with a sad heart I write to inform you of the death of my husband, Josiah Lewis: he has gone to sleep for a short time. He told me it would not be for long. His hope was in Christ. He has been suffering for two years with a tumor in the stomach. He fell asleep on the fifth of April, aged sixty-three years two months; and I am left alone, and I am not strong: not able to work very hard, and, worst of all, I shall have to sell my home to pay the debts. I see no other way. It is difficult at first, when passing through afflictions so severe, to say heartily, Thy will be done. But blessed be God, through Christ, who strengtheneth us, we can do all things. But I will pray to God to give me strength and grace to say, Thy will be done; and try to be reconciled. Pray for me, for I never needed it more than at present. Yours truly, in hope of eternal life when the Life-giver appears the second time.

Sarah Lewis.

Poetry.

"No Night There."

No night of weariness,
No sleepless eye,
No unknown shadow
Hovering nigh.

No night of sorrow,
With bitter moan,
No mournful lament,
Of "left alone."

No night of death,
No farewell tear,
No loved ones parted,
No anxious fear,
But harp, and crown, and song alway,
And bright, eternal, joyous day.

Children's Department.

To the Children, by the Editor.

Little Ones: We hope you were pleased and profited by our effort for you last week. We want you all to be good children, then if you live to grow up you will be loved by the good, and the good Lord and the blessed Jesus will love you; and when Jesus comes to be King over all the earth, O what pleasure and joy you will have: and, be assured, he will come before many years, and you will see him; even if you should die before he comes, he will watch over your little graves, and lift you up out of them when he comes to reign on the earth; and how you will jump and skip for joy; and then you will never be sick, sad, or disappointed again. Now do you not want to be real good? We think we hear you say, "Yes, I do." Well, now, ask Jesus to bless you: go alone on your little knees and tell him what you have done, said, or thought, that was naughty; talk to him just as you would to your dear father or mother; do not try to hide from him anything that is wrong in you, but tell him all about it, and ask him to forgive you, and grant you his blessed Spirit to enable you to be good. O, how glad Jesus will be to have you come to him in this way. Why, you will feel as if he was taking you up in his dear, loving arms, and saying, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of God." Will not that make you feel happy and rejoice? O, yes: and how happy it will make your dear parents, to see their children early engaging in the service of God and his beloved Son Jesus Christ.

We gave you last week a little story from "The Children's Hour," and now we will give you one from "The Nursery," of which we spoke a few weeks since, published by John L. Shorey, Boston, Mass. The story has something in it about a "Fairy;" that is, a being that is not real, but only a fancy: but the moral of the story is what we wish to impress on our little readers' minds, becasue we want you to be good, happy, and "handsome." Here follows the story:

"Once upon a Time."

Ellen was reading from a book. There were three little girls seated round the room o hear. May held the string of a little cart, Fanny had a doll in her arms, and Ruth held a piece of cotton cloth on which she had been sewing.

The doll Posy stood up on the seat of the old chair, and looked as if she, too, were eager to hear the fairy tale which Ellen had begun to read.

"Once upon a time," said Ellen—

But she had no sooner got the words out of her mouth than Uncle Charles, who loves dearly to plague the little girls, slipped into the room so that none of them saw him, and stood behind the door.

Then Ellen went on: "Once upon a time there was a prince who was very homely: so he went to a fairy, and said, 'Fairy, I wish you would make me handsome.'

"'Shall I make you handsome for a time, or handsome as long as you live, not only in this world, but in the next?' asked the fairy. 'Oh, I would like to be handsome as long as I live, for ever and ever,' said the prince.

"'Then I will tell you what to do,' said the fairy. 'Here is a glass for you to look through at people. It will show you all who deserve help. Take it, and take a purse of money, and go through the streets, and give to every one who deserves help; and do this every day till you find you love to do it. One year from now meet me on this spot.'

"The homely prince said he would be glad to be made handsome in so easy a way. So he went to work and did as the fairy told him to do, till he grew fond of his daily work, and loved to do it.

"At the end of a year he met the fairy as she had told him to do, and she said, 'Well, prince, do you look handsome now?'

"'No,' said he, 'but I feel handsome, and that is better.'

"Then the fairy dipped water out of a spring with a crystal cup, and said, 'Look in this water: what do you see?'

"'I see myself,' said the prince, 'but how handsome!'

"'Handsome is who handsome does,' said the fairy: 'yours is now the beauty that will last.'

"'I am content,' said the prince. 'Fairy, I thank you.'

"So the prince was made happy and handsome all at once. There were some people who called him homely; but those with a good eyesight, who could see his soul, said he was the most beautiful prince they had ever seen."

"The most beautiful prince they had ever seen! Ha, ha!"

All the children started. "Now, Uncle, that is too bad," cried Ellen, "to come and overhear our fairy tale."

"My dear little girls, here are sticks of candy for you all round, and two for your dolls," said Uncle Charles. "Now, confess that I am a dear old uncle, though I do love to plague you so. Confess that I am handsome."

"We forgive you, we forgive you," cried all the little voices. "Handsome is who handsome does."

As he walked home through the snow-drifts that night, Uncle Charles thought of the little girls, and smiled. Uncle Charles.

Daniel's Prophetic Days.

By Abel Larkin.

Br. Storrs: As several have given their views of Daniel's 1,290 and 1,335 days, and believing the subject important and not exhausted, can I assign in the Herald a few reasons why I believe they are literal?

First: Because Daniel nowhere even intimates that they are anything else. And the only rule by which we are to get a writer's meaning is, to accept the language that conveys his thoughts.

If Daniel had said these days were so many years, I should believe it as strong as I now do that they are days, because he says they are days. And I can find no more right to believe that they are 1,290 years than I have that they are 12,900 years, or ten times this number. But I find internal evidence that flows from every direction proving that Daniel's language was literally intended. And I am convinced that the year-day theory will in due time sink into oblivion.

But the objector will say that, "we have an infallible rule given in Ezek. iv., by which we know that the year-day theory is correct." Then let us examine it.

"Lie thou also upon thy left side, and lay the iniquity of the house of Israel upon it: according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon it thou shalt bear their iniquity:" verse 4. "For I have laid upon thee the years of their iniquity according to the number of the days, (that he laid upon his left side), three hundred and ninety days; so shalt thou bear the iniquity of the house of Israel:" verse 5.

By this I understand, that each and every day that he laid upon his left side represents a year of Israel's iniquity; i. e., three hundred and ninety years.

"And when thou hast accomplished them, lie again on thy right side, (not left as before), and thou shalt bear the iniquity of the house of Judah." (But how long does he lie on his right side? Forty days, for he says), "forty days:" (and is careful to observe), "I have appointed thee each day for a year:" verse 6. The meaning here is the same as in the other case, though not so exactly described. Then the simple meaning is that the number of days that the prophet lies on his side point out or prefigure the years of Israel's and Judah's iniquity.

But we will go a little farther, "Therefore thou shalt set thy face toward the siege of Jesusalem and prophesy against it:" verse 7. "And I will lay hands upon thee, and and thou shalt not turn thee from one side to the other till thou hast ended the days (shall I say years?) of thy siege:" verse 8. "Take thou also wheat, and barley, and beans, and lentils, and millet, and pitches, and put them in one vessel, and make thee bread thereof, according to the number of the days (literal) that thou shalt lie upon thy side; three hundred and ninety days shalt thou eat thereof:" verse 9.

But, says one, "You very wrongfully intend to deprive us of our important rule by not even allowing it in the chapter where it is recorded." Then, for the sake of investigation, we allow it; and call these days 390 years and proceed to the next verse. "And thy meat which thou shalt eat shall be by weight, twenty shekels a day; (a year) from time to time shalt thou eat it:" verse 10. Now, twenty shekels is about a half pound, and can the year-day theorist live on half a pound for not only one year, but on the same annual amount for 390 years? If he can't, he should give up that which will not sustain him; for this amount of food is all that his year-day law allows him. And if it is so rotten that no one can get it out of the chapter, does it not prove that it is a rotten fabrication of the brain, or ignorantly attempting to counterfeit truth?

A similar type or representation of years is found in days in Num. xiv., 34. "After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days, each day for a year, shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years; and ye shall wander in the wilderness forty years and bear your whoredoms until your carcasses be wasted in the wilderness:" verse 33.

But surely there is no proof here, nor yet in Ezek. for the year-day rule. If anything, it is an exception to a rule, and as such manifested.

But we will extend the investigation of the subject to Daniel's seventy weeks, and his 2,300 days; as some suppose the latter stand for so many years. The weeks are of years no doubt. See Gen. xxix., 27.

"Seventy weeks are determined (cut off, or shortened, as some have it), upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up (i. e., ratify by fulfilment) the vision and prophecy." Dan. ix., 24. Now the question for consideration is, Have all of these weeks been fulfilled? If they have, how happens it that sin and transgression are not abolished? And why has not the above-mentioned reconciliation been effected for iniquity; and everlasting righteousness established? But the admission of an unfulfilled week explains why these things are not accomplished.

"Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks and threescore and two weeks; the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times:" verse 25.

Here we find sixty-nine of the weeks, and no doubt they are in the past. "And after threescore and two weeks (not necessarily immediately after; for, the "after" may include nearly all of the sixty-third week) shall Messiah be cut off; but not for himself; and the people of the Prince (i. e., the Imperial head of the fourth universal kingdom, even Rome) that shall come, shall destroy the city and the sanctuary, and the end thereof shall be with a flood; and unto the end of the war desolations are determined:" verse 26. This had its fulfilment in the apostolic age, and of course is in the past. But the fulfilment of the next verse I understand to be in the future. It says, "And he," [the same prolonged imperial head of the fourth universal Empire, i. e., Rome; the "healed" Greek "head" of the leopard beast, Rev. xiii., 3, the Czar king of the North, Dan. xi., 31, Ezek. xxxviii., who takes away the sacrifice and pollutes the sanctuary, (does not destroy it, as in verse 26), and comes to his end and none to help him Dan. xi., 45,] "shall confirm a covenant with many for one week: and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease [as in chap. xi., 31] and for the overspreading of abominations, he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolator:" verse 27. For he comes to his "end and none to help him." xi., 45. And "the saints take the kingdom," vii., 22. Now we find that sixty-nine of the seventy weeks are in the past; and no more there can be found. Consequently, we must expect a cut off, break, or shortening of their regular progression to completion, or fulfilment.

But, says one, "What has been the cause of their suspension, or the interregnum?" I answer; the crucifixion, or the rejection of the Messiah; the King of the Jews being put to death, continues the vacancy of the throne of David from which a power is to dash in pieces all nationalities, and abolish "Sin and transgression, and bring in everlasting righteousness" in their place. Hence we find a remaining week, or seven years in which this work is to be accomplished; and may be called the covenant week; for it is said, "And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week"—the seventieth. Now will the objector say, that Titus, or Vespasian, made this covenant with the Jews for seven years, and then, when the time had half expired, or in the midst of the week, violated the agreement or covenant by taking away their daily sacrifice when they destroyed their sanctuary, temple, and city? If they made it, all history is as silent on the subject as death itself: and to say they did, and that the history is lost is preposterous; and to ignore the fulfilment in toto, is still worse. It is evident that the principal contents of the covenant were a national guarantee to the Jews, a right to practise the Mosaic rites seven years. But Vespasian cared nothing about these, either one way or the other. He made the war on them because they refused to pay him national taxes; or because of sedition.

Now, I suppose it will be admitted, that the leading characters of the Jews expect and desire, according to their faith, the restoration of the Mosaic rites in Jerusalem; and which their condition has long since made impossible. But their condition is fast changing; and they are yet, though scattered, a united people: and have we reason to believe that their faith will be verified? Several things are essential for it; first, an arrangement, or an adoption of some conventional plan by which it may be accomplished.

The rebuilding of the Temple and sanctuary being necessary, and some kind of a supposed reliable and responsible national guarantee, for a limited time, for protection, would undoubtedly be called for, on which as a venture to start.

Now, what government would the Jews in convention apply to for this covenant arrangement, or guarantee for protection in the exercise of these rites? Having several times been deprived of these rites, they will likely make a national treaty to prevent similar results, if possible. Surely it will be the strong and towering Russian government of the north; the Emperor of which will confirm the covenant with the Jews for the week, granting in it their requested privileges and in connection with the Sultan. The former, likely, supposing it to be the means by which he can easily take the kingdom of latter; and consequently comes "into the kingdom peaceably," at first, and nominally takes it. But a growing intrusion alarms the Sultan, and he makes a defensive war on "the king of the north," which maddens him, so that he comes and takes away the daily sacrifice and by his arms places the abomination of desolation "in the holy place"—Jerusalem. "Then let them which be on the house top not come down," etc. See Matth. xxiv., 15, and Dan. xi., 31. Now the reader should recollect that this takes place in the midst of the week; for Daniel says so, ix., 27. "In the midst of the week, he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease." And also let it be remembered that this same person, king of the north, comes to his end, and none to help him at the end of the week, when Michael the great Prince stands up for thy people; who shall then be delivered: chap. xii., 1.

This, of itself, proves the whole scene of the abomination in which the daily sacrifice is taken away, as mentioned, Dan. viii., 13; ix., 27; xi., 31; xii., 11, to be in the future. And must be the war made on the saints by the "horn" of Dan. vii., 21, "and prevailed against them." See verses 22, 25, 26, 27. "Times and laws were given into his hand, until a time and times, and the dividing of time." Some three and a half years, or forty-two months, Rev. xii., 5, which terminate with Daniel's 2,300 days, at the end of the week.

Where Daniel refers to the destruction of Jerusalem, he says, "And the people of the Prince that shall come, shall destroy the city and the sanctuary:" ix., 26. He does not stop to say that the daily, or continual sacrifice was taken away; for it would be useless for him to do so; for all would know that when the city, temple and sanctuary received such complete destruction as they did, and the votaries of the continual sacrifice nearly all slain, and the rest carried into slavery or captivity, would know (if they had much sense) that the daily sacrifice would of course stop.

But the next, or 27th verse, having the description of the covenant week, of course the scene there described is entirely another transaction. He says, "And in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease." Not even intimating that the city, Temple, or sanctuary were destroyed. The 31st verse of chap. xi., is a parallel, which says, "And they (his arms) shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily sacrifice," etc. But no intimation here that the city or sanctuary were destroyed; but in chap. ix., 26, they were. Now the pollution of the sanctuary, and taking away the daily sacrifice presupposes the revival of their existence; and especially as pollute, and destroy, have different meanings.

But again. "How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed:" chap. viii., 13.

I will here say, that the Jewish and Douay Bibles have it, "Unto 2,300 evenings and mornings;" and the 26th verse of our translation confirms this view by calling it "the vision of the evening and the morning;" i.e., one day; as much as to say, that the 2,300 days were so many evenings and mornings. This being the case, how is it possible to make them years? The 2,300 days measure not only the time of the daily sacrifice, but also the time that the Sanctuary and host are trodden under foot. The sanctuary is not destroyed, as in chap. ix., 26; but trodden under foot; or, as Daniel says, xi., 31, "shall pollute;" which is the same thing; only a rehearsal in another form. Consequently, I must believe, that the temple and sanctuary are again to be rebuilt, and the continual sacrifice again on the altar, that they may yet receive the measurement of these days; lacking 255 of the full week number. "Seal," or "shut thou up the vision; for it shall be for many days" in the future: chap. viii., 26. "For at the time of the end," i.e., the dispensation, "shall be the vision:" verse 17. "Now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days," (or week); "for yet the vision is for many days:" chap. x., 14.

To seal, or shut up the vision, I understand is to write it in such a way or form that the enemy cannot understand it; for on him depends its conveyance over the long apostate road of time; near the end of which comes the Gentile fulness; who, comprehending the divine plan of truth, work in it, as "the wise," who "shall understand."

But receiving persecution near the time and place, of the advent (Jerusalem), and in connection with the Jews and near the time of Israel's conversion, who then look upon their King, "whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him as one mourneth for his only son." "And in that day, he that is feeble among the inhabitants of Jerusalem shall be as David; and the house of David shall be as God, as the angel of the Lord before them." Zech. xi., 8, 10. This being in the future, must (as I think) be the war on the saints of Dan. vii., 21. And who, with trouble, affliction, and persecution enter the kingdom, make Jerusalem the capital, and bring in everlasting righteousness at the end of the week.

But, says one, why shut up the vision, or hide the truth from the enemy? The injunction is, "Cast not your pearls to swine." An enemy to truth and righteousness is not to be trusted. Christian truth was taught in the apostolic age, but the enemy not only rejected it, but determined to abolish it and its advocates, in his persecutions against the primitive Christians; but finally concluded that with a small alteration of construction, which in truth it would bear, he would accept it; and of course apply the divine proof of its authenticity to the support of his fundamental cause; supposing, in the mean time, that its acceptance and transmission down the channel of time, would bequeath to him the pearl of immortal felicity.

So the apostacy comes down the long road of time, having a golden cup (the Bible) in her hand, full of her false teaching; and ignorantly wearing on her bold and daring front the well-secured black seal of self-condemnation, "Mystery, Babylon the great, The mother of harlots and abominations of the earth." Rev. xvii., 5.

A culprit would not willingly and knowingly consent to carry a testimony to a court that would condemn him; but if he firmly believed that the document contained a pardon and an imperial crown for him, all would be safe in his hand. In this way only can the prophetic plan of God, on which the salvation of man depends, be conveyed to the wise, who are auxiliary assistants in the work of redemption.

Hence the necessity of all the prophetic penmen to seal up, or in some way keep from the enemy's knowledge the fulfilment of certain prophecies that involve their condition or condemnation; otherwise would not their fulfilment be frustrated? If the Pope, or the man of sin, knew the prophetic condemnation under which they lie, would not they leave their place of danger? If the wise man of the house knew the hour in which the thief would come, he would watch. Hence the divine plan is well guarded, that the gates of hell shall not prevail.

I will now call the reader's attention again to Daniel's days, and hope to get his listening ear. All admit that Daniel's 70 weeks are 490 years. "And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week." Dan. ix., 27. Now there are in one week of years 2,555 days. And the date of the violated covenant is at the commencement of the days. "How long shall be the vision, concerning the daily sacrifice and the transgression of desolation, to give both the host and sanctuary to be trodden under foot?" Dan. viii., 13. "And he said unto me, Unto 2,300 days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed:" verse 14. And of course the temple.

Now these days measure, first, the "sacrifice;" it, of course, does not take all of them to do it; but it takes the remainder of them to measure the balance of the week; commencing at the time the covenant was broken by the transgression of desolation; for it says, "In the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease:" ix., 27. "And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination of of desolation set up; (as I, Daniel, have just told you in chap. ix., 27, and also, xi., 31) there shall be 1,290 days:" xii., 11.

I have before said, this covenant was a national promise, or guarantee for Jewish protection in the exercise of the Mosaic rites; promised for one week of 7 years, or 2,555 days. This being granted, they complete all arrangements for them; which take 255 days; then the sacrifice is on the altar at the commencement of the 2,300 days. Now take 2,300 from 2,555, and we have 255. Now add up:

"Blessed is he that cometh to the 1,335 days." "Why?" Because 45 days after the 1,290 put him in the next dispensation; the 45 days being the great and terrible day of the Lord in which men, as in the flood, become nearly extinct, with an unknown disease; "the inhabitants of the earth are burned and few men left." Isa. xxiv., 6. To seal, or shut up the vision, I understand, is the disjointed and intermixed sentences and dates dropped as it were in every part of the book, so as to baffle the skill of both the apostate Jew and Christian comprehension; so that the important vision may in safety reach the hands for whom it is intended.

But if the objector thinks this construction is wrong, will he give his? But I have not a particle of faith in the year-day theory. However, the repeated failures of the year time set theory will not destroy the desire to investigate the subject; but will answer the purpose of an infant step, by which another can be taken. But surely Daniel's dates are reliable; but I know of no way that we can tell their exact distance in the future. But a true knowledge of them will enable us to know the signs of their approach, and which I think are not far distant. But, dear reader, will you believe that the object of this article is the acquisition of truth; subject to review and scrutiny. Abel Larkin.

Mt. Sterling, Ill., Jan. 20, 1869.

Evil thoughts are worse enemies than lions and tigers, for we can keep out of the way of wild beasts, but bad thoughts win their way everywhere. The cup that is full of good thoughts, bad thoughts find no room to enter.

"Be on your guard, and strive and pray
To drive all evil thoughts away."

Moderation is the great secret of government. To be always dissatisfied is the way to lose all authority and respect. The consequence of those people is most cheerfully acknowledged who seem the least forward to assert it.

A white garment appears worse with slight soiling than do colored garments much soiled; so a little fault in a good man attracts more attention than great offences in bad men.

Regret not a golden age that is behind. There is one before, and it beckons you. Its rewards are not for the idle, but for the brave hearts disciplined to toil.

Six Sermons on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 380 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.
